"The tendency of human nature is one of the most interesting studies in all the world. I think I have paid some pretty careful attention to it. It has always been the same in all ages. Even the holy apostles were bound that the Christ should be a temporal, physical ruler. The traditions of the fathers for many centuries had so handed it down. But the Christ that came was of humble origin, the son of a carpenter, a carpenter himself. He did great and wonderful miracles, and, after his violent death, by the influence of the Holy Ghost the apostles were at last convinced that Christ was not to be a ruler of men but a savior of souls. So long as these apostles lived they were able to keep this idea out of the minds of men, and show just what the holy religion of Jesus was intended to be. But their bones had hardly whitened in their sepulchres when the foundations of the great Roman hierarchy were laid, and the spirit and life of the whole religion was stunted and eventually lost in the eternal glamour of formalities, instituted by popes, monks, and priests. Ages of moral, mental and religious groping in the dark followed, and the light of day was exceedingly slow in dawning. But with it all there was the great mistaken idea that the church must be joined to and fostered by the State Creeds and confessions of faith which took their origin back in the cells of medieval monasteries still continued, and the people were not permitted with unclouded minds to pursue the simple story of the Cross as it is told by the Evangelists. The Reformation which Alexander Campbell and his coadjutors preached was a plea for the truth as it is in Jesus, and it was hoped that sects might pass away before its onsweeping course. So long as the new people were persecuted and not recognized as orthodox, they did very well; they stuck to the gospel, and they were, in truth, much like the early Christians in the simplicity of their habits. But that day has passed, and now the effort is to be made to join the church and stick together, and I consider it very serious. O, would that I were young again, so that I might preach a new reformation!"

The old gentleman had warmed him self up with these last few sentences, so that I could well imagine with what vigor he preached the doctrines in the early day. But, after a pause, he continued:

"It is no more than should be expected, though. They tell me I am an old fogey. I suppose this is so. I had hoped to see the reformation which I embarked in do the good that the world needs, but now I see that it must be left to others. This, perhaps, filled its own place in the onmarching course of humanity. Another can see our errors and the rocks on which we broke, and, avoiding them, sail on to the more tranquil haven. The time for the new reformation is ripe now, and I do hope to live to see it come. When it does come I shall die in peace." GARY.

THE UPLIFTED SWORD.

BY C. H. BALSHAUH.

THE sword is the Lord's, in the hands of Cesar, for the punishment of evil doers, and the praise and protection of them that do well.

"Fear God. Honor the king": are both apostolic injunctions. 1 Pet. 2: 17. Cesar is to us the minister of God for good. His prerogatives are "ordained of God." "He beareth not the sword in vain." His authority is Divine. "Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience' sake." "For this cause pay ye tribute also," and our tribute is not all in money, but in obedience; "for they are God's ministers, attending continually upon this very thing." Rom. 13: 1-6.

Why is it that some are so negligent in responding to the requirement of the government in relation to the census? Why not fill up your schedules like Christians, and return them without delay? Is it but the indifference of ignorance, or is it deliberate resistance? "Whoever therefore resisteth the power, resisteth the ordinance of God; and they that resist shall receive to themselves damnation." Rom. 13: 2. The sword is uplifted, and will fall ere long, and fall heavily, on those who slight the long suffering of "the powers that be." Brethren, beware. Trifle no longer. The day of grace is about closing. Fill up your schedules as quickly as possible, lest you be hurt by the arm of Omnipotence through the ordinance of law. Return to Howard Miller, Lewisburg, Union Co., Pa.

OUR FAULTS.

BY J. S. LAIR.

THAT we all have faults is beyond dispute, and it is said that we put our own faults behind us, and others in front of us, for the purpose, I suppose, of seeing theirs and not our own. But in this article I want to put all our faults right in front of us and take a square look at them. Then, having them before us, we open our eyes and are aazing.

We began by saying we all have faults, and now we notice how vastly they differ. One person is too lazy to work, and another is avaricious and works too hard—both have faults. One is too liberal, he gives more than he is able, another is penurious and gives nothing. One person talks entirely too much, another don't say enough. Two more faults unless we average them. One person talks so loud we can hardly keep from holding our hands over our ears, while another talks so low that we must hold our hands behind our ears to catch the sound. Then again some persons are always talking solemnly, and make us feel like crying, while another tells something so funny that we almost split our sides laughing. Then some of us wear such a long, sour face that we look as though we drank all the vinegar about the house, while others have continually a "broad grin" on their faces, not even doffing it when they go to a funeral. And then some men are so full of fun (and even ministers, too) that they cannot think of anything else to talk about when they have listeners, and are continually telling some story in order to excite laughter, and some of them not very nice either. Then again, some of us are not very good singers no how, but others are very good, excepting that their voices are too harsh, or too shrill or else it sounds as if it were down too far. Then some of us are so odd; we are too proud and dress too fine, or we are not proud enough, and go slovenly. Some of us are too forward,—we get out of our place; we like to preach too well, and preach too long, are too officious, etc., while others are not enough so to do their duty. Then some of us are not courteous enough, while others are too familiar. And again, we are faulty about our writing, some of us become rather egotistic; while acting in the capacity of a general correspondent we fail to give a general report, but are always writing about ourselves; we never think to tell about our brethren's preaching, what they did and are doing, but we seek to advertise ourselves by telling when, where, and what we preached, how often, how large the congregation, and if no accessions, we do not fail to state that there were impressions made, but always neglect to state on what the impressions were made, whether on the empty benches, the house, or in the mud. Why do we say anything about the impression? No doubt we think there ought to be some impressions, for we have done our best, but possibly if we could know the thoughts of the audience we would be ashamed that we ever tried to preach there.

I have tried to present only a few of our many faults, not to discourage any one in any effort for doing good, but trust we may profit by a gentle hit.

In conclusion I want to say that it is my weakness to always claim what is my own, and I hereby notify my brethren that I lay claim to my full share of all faults herein enumerated, or even others that may be known to exist. I make this timely statement so I shall fail to receive what is my own.

IS SUNDAY-SCHOOL OF DIVINE APPOINTMENT OR BIBLE AUTHORITY?

BY A. B. HOCHSTETLER.

WE don't claim that the Bible tells us in plain words, "Thus saith the Lord." It pleases God by methods of his own choice to save them that believe, and while we cheerfully accord to the gospel in conducting our Sunday schools, in the fear of the Lord, and with prayerful hearts, and instruct the children according to the Bible of Divine truth, the Bible is the only text book in Sunday-schools. Therefore we claim it is corresponding with the gospel, and meets the approbation of God and leads to the conversion of many precious souls. What is preaching but the exhibition and application of religious truth. The truth of God is the great instrument, and, so far as we know, the only instrument of conviction and saving conversion. This is what we claim to teach in our Sunday-schools, which will accord with the Bible. That which the Bible don't condemn is Bible truth, and will be a token of the divine approbation of God. The Sunday school should be regarded as one of the greatest objects to present truth to the mind and bring it to bear upon the consciences of those who are instructed in the truth of the Bible. Sunday school connects itself with almost every department of the ministerial system. Many of its scholars have been brought into the church by its teachings and the knowledge they have received concerning God, and the Lord Jesus Christ. Often parents come to the church by the instruction of their children, which they received in Sunday-school.

We should be warmly interested in the good work of instructing our children in the temporal, spiritual, and eternal welfare of their happiness. Sunday school teaching is to the children what the preaching of the gospel is to the adults. The Bible tells us to train up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. The Sunday-school is one of the means to teach and train them. No one can object to this plan, and say it is not Bible authority. Train up a child in the way he should go, and however much he may deviate from that training he will be sure to remember his first impressions and come back to them. The child will be taught Bible truth in Sunday-school and is instructed and sighted to God and the Lord Jesus Christ. This will never depart from him.

The first Sunday-school ever introduced was started by the Brethren. The great American Encyclopedia in the account of the Brethren or German Baptist Church, says: "In the year 1740, or about that time, forty years before the present general system of Sunday-school instruction was introduced."^{*} These numbers about 141 years since Sunday-schools were introduced among the Brethren; and now it appears to be something new among many of the Brethren.

* The American Encyclopedia is mistaken in saying that Sunday-schools were introduced among the Brethren 40 years before Robert Raikes commenced the present system in England. Sunday-schools have been in use from the second century to the present time, but the persons who introduced them in America, forty years before they were introduced in England, were not members of the Brethren Church at the time they commenced the Sunday-school work. GIVING ACCOUNT.

BY JAS. Y. HECKLER.

If men for every idle word
At last must give account,
How will the awful record stand?
The terrible amount!
Their levity, their rivalry,
Their filthiness of speech,
Will bring them into misery
To give account of each.

How will the wicked and profane—
The sinners old and gray,
Who took the name of God in vain
And cursed him oft each day—
How will they stand? How will they fare
In haughtiness and pride,
When they in judgment must appear Before the Crucified?

How will their condemnation stand,
Who damned themselves to hell?
Who took no blame nor reprimand,
But cursed themselves and fell.
How will their condemnation rise
When him they shall behold,
Whom they have pierced, with flaming eyes
Their sentence to unfold?

O wicked people stop and think
How you incur his ire.
How can you revel on the brink
Of everlasting fire?
The flaming pit is open wide,
And devils laugh and grin
That foolish people in their pride
Will mock and tumble in.

Repentance without amendment is like continual pumping in the ship without stopping the leaks.

He loves you better who strives to make you good, than he who strives to please you.

As we must render an account of every idle word, so must we also of our idle silence.

WHAT SHALL THIS MAN DO?

BY DANIEL BRIGHT.

THE apostle Peter, it seems, was the foremost speaker of the twelve. Whenever Jesus addressed his disciples it was Peter mostly who was ready to answer. And it appears as if the exalting thought, that he loved his blessed Lord a little more and served Him better than the other apostles, found a secret lurking place within his heart. And indeed it was no wonder, for it was he whom the Lord commanded to go to the sea and cast a hook, and in opening the mouth of the fish that first cometh up, he should find a piece of silver money therein; which miracle caused the disciples to go unto Jesus, desiring to know, "who is thy greatest in the kingdom of heaven?" It seems as though jealousy troubled their hearts a little. They thought Peter must be greater than they; and no doubt, Peter thought of his superiority also.

This crops out of his own language, the evening of Christ's betrayal, when He told his disciples: "All ye shall be offended because of me this night." (Matt 26:31.) Peter answered and said unto him, "Though all shall be offended because of thee, yet will I never be offended." But alas! poor Peter, what a sad lesson of experience he had to learn! Afraid to confess his Lord before a weak maiden; he profanely denied having any connection with Him when the more stern vasculines pressed it upon him, until the shrill voice of the cock's crowing sent conviction and condemnation through his erring heart; and a kind reproving look of his loving Master, brought deep grief and sorrow into his soul, and he went out and wept bitterly. He staggered in his faith. Had it not been that Jesus had prayed for him: "That thy faith fail not," (Luke 22:31-32) he would doubtless have sunk into despair. But so he seek only until on the sure foundation of his Lord's prayer. It was Christ's prayer that held up Peter, and it is His sacerdotal prayer, (John 17:) that keeps every weak and faint disciple to-day, from sinking into despair.

But the next day Peter's hope was nailed to the cross with his blessed Master, and when He gave up the ghost, it expired with Him and was buried with Him in Joseph's tomb. Thus having all his hope of his future fishing of "men," blighted, he returned to his former occupation. And after toiling in vain a whole night, in the morning Jesus stands on the shore, and invites them to a feast of bread and fish. After they had dined, Jesus, knowing that Peter, had thought that he loved him more than the other disciples did, turns unto Simon Peter and saith: "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me more than these?" Peter, having learned by experience that he did not love Him more than the other disciples did, humbly answered: "Yes, Lord, thou knowest that I love Thee." Jesus saith unto him, "feed my lambs." This has reference to what He said to Peter before his fall: "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not; and when thou art converted," when thou hast received forgiveness for the sin of profanely denying thy Lord, and art received again into his favor, then "strengthen thy brethren"—"Feed my lambs," "my sheep." After Peter had three times confessed his love to Jesus, and three times received the same answer: "Feed my sheep," he turned about and saw the disciple whom Jesus loved, John, and saith unto Jesus, "Lord and what shall this man do?" Instead of entering upon performing his own duty, thinking how he may strengthen his brethren, feed the lambs and sheep of the flock of the Lord, he inquires what the duty of his brother shall be: "And what shall this man do?" But Jesus saith unto him: "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me." The idea goes forth: What need you to trouble about your brother's business, only faithfully discharge your own duty, and you shall be rewarded as a faithful servant.

Here Peter manifests a very common disposition; and Jesus teaches a very important and practical lesson. Upon this text we all, every individual, ought to vary frequently preach unto our own hearts.

It is evident from this narrative that Peter was considerably troubled with the forward disposition of a busy-body. He meddled in his in his brother's business, and neglected the immediate discharge of his own duty. And he received the necessary sharp reproof of his Master, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me" mind you own business! This reproof brought deep shame and mortification to his heart. And no doubt this disposition caused him often thus to suffer. For this was what gave rise to the sensible advice in his epistle, concerning the Christian's suffering, where he says: "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil-doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters." (1 Peter 4:15.) What an amount of mental as well as bodily suffering this busy-bodyism has caused to the human family! And after all nothing is gained thereby. I have known people to complain of their hard trials, tribulations and temptations; their many troubles, and sorrows, over which they brooded, wearied and worried until their faces were haggard and lean, all because of their uncalled-for meddling into other people's business. If every professed disciple of Christ would learn well and faithfully the lesson, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me," what a world of contentment, happiness, peace and love we would have! By far the greater part of the troubles in the church are caused by this unconquered, unsanctified disposition of a busy-body in other men's matters.

There is a disposition in most children which leads to this busy-bodyism when they grow older. Who has not noticed that most children prefer working ahead to working at home? Or when they are told to do one thing they say: "Can't I do that?" Hence this disposition, growing up with them, when they are older, they will work at others instead of working at home at their own hearts. They are then constantly reminding their neighbors to rush before their doors, and leave the fifth and rubbish before their own doors untouched. They will ask: "And what will this man do?" and then will watch closely if perchance some one makes a mistake, but their own duties they neglect to discharge, and fail to watch over themselves. Dear reader, have we lost this disposition while growing from childhood to manhood or womanhood? If not, have we then lost it while being transplanted from the kingdom of this world into the kingdom of God's dear Son? If not, let us then prayerfully strive to conquer it.

It is said of Stephen Girard, the famous founder of Girard's College, of Philadelphia, being asked how he managed to accumulate so much wealth, he pertinently answered: "By minding my own business." We all may learn a lesson from this. He became rich in worldly goods by minding his own business, and if we would become rich in God we must see that we spiritually discharge our own duties faithfully. We must see to and correct our own conduct, must trim our own lamps, become virtuous ourselves, not ask "And what shall this man do?" But like Paul say: "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do? And then diligently discharge our duty to God, to our neighbor and to ourselves, and we shall be rich in God—in love, joy, and peace in the Holy Ghost.

A LESSON TO FATHERS.

THE great secret of success in bringing up children is to establish and preserve perfect confidence between parents and children. If the father is the boy's best friend, as the wise mothers are the girls', there is no trouble about keeping them from bad associates, whose vicious examples and silly bravado have a lasting effect upon their characters. Fathers, in your efforts to secure fortunes for your families, remember that money will not save you from heart-ache if your boys go wrong, and that their only safety is in being kept close by your side, helping you in business, and you in turn sharing their fun and play. Nothing is so flattering to boys as the society of their fathers, and nothing makes a man so popular with them as his joining their amusements. Try to do this and your son will try in turn to understand your care and troubles. Take as much pains to preserve them from contamination in shape of immoral companionship as mothers do their girls, and you will find them growing up to be modest and virtuous young men, fit companions and husbands for girls who have been carefully guided from all knowledge of evil. Devote your evenings to family amusements and pleasures. Invite young people to your house and pay them attention, instead of going to bed or shutting yourself in another room the moment they make their appearance, as if there was, and could be, nothing between your manhood and their youth. So shall you be kept young in heart, and the inexperience of your sons will be tempered with something of the sobriety of experience.

MR. SPURGEON says: "I see it publicly stated by men who call themselves Christians that it would be advisable for Christians to frequent the theatre, that the character of the drama might be raised. The suggestion is about as if we were bidden to pour a bottle of lavender into a great sewer to improve its aroma."

ONE of the kindest things heaven has ever done for men is denying him the power of looking into the future.

THE TORTURES OF FASHION.

THE Saturday Review makes a serious and severe accusation against our so-called Christian civilization which parents should heed. The matter is traced back to early training:

"Vanity and frivolity they absorb with their mother's milk. While still the merest infant, they acquire a passion for dress; their earliest prattle is of for-below and flounce; their first joys to appear in smart clothes, like their elders, with wide sashes of satin or silk, with laced pinafores, and big rosettes in their shoes. The paramount importance of personal charms is drilled into their ears long before they leave the schoolroom; and they learn early to appraise and appreciate those which they flatter themselves they really possess. The silly people who surround them foster and fan this into a constantly glowing flame. Girls, to compass beauty or its counterfeits, will cheerfully lend themselves to the tormentors, and gladly face present torture and future injury if they think their appearance will thereby be improved.

"There can be found no more grievous example of this than in the rage for tight lacing which the latest fashion with its development of the figure, has recently brought so much in vogue. A well-authenticated case on record of a mother who, being dissatisfied with the size of her daughter's waist, at that time aged twelve, persuaded her nothing loth, to wear perpetually a pair of stays, fashioned like a corset, but with a padlock always fastened, of which the mother kept the key. The husbands have been known to personally superintend the process of lacing, insisting ruthlessly upon the reduction of rebellious contours, and prepared to resort to mechanical appliances in order to bring the circumference of the waist within the limits of a span. The inevitable consequence are absolutely fatal to health. Modern fashion is a hideous Moloch, and the maiden yoked to its worship is doomed. She may escape for a time, but the germs of disease are there, and will some day come to rapid maturity. The truths of medical science, if sought out, would convey an awful warning which the most reckless could not fail to lay to heart."

STICK TO THE FARM, BOYS.

AT a time when there are ten men in waiting for every business opportunity that the cities afford, farmers' boys who have comfortable homes and fair chances for the future in the country, had much better stay where they are rather than swell the army of the unemployed in the cheap boarding-houses of the cities. It is true that the cities would run to waste but for fresh blood and energy which so constantly come into them from the country, but it is also true that where one man makes a fortune, large numbers fail to get even a foothold. In every respect life in the country is sweeter, purser, healthier, better and in every way more desirable than life in the town. Notwithstanding this is so universally admitted to be true, the farmers' boys who become dissatisfied with the farm, perhaps because their work is not made so pleasant and profitable to them as it might be, will not readily believe it. They do not show their faith by their works.

A CHILD'S FUNERAL.

A PAUPER'S funeral is a sad sight. The rough pine coffin carried to the grave in a springless wagon, followed by no mourner, tells the story of one who died unmourned. But a French artist, traveling in Holland, saw a sadder sight.

Pausing in a grassy cemetery to read the inscriptions on the tombs, he descried two strange forms approaching the gate. They were those of two men clothed in black. In profound silence, with expressionless eyes, they entered God's acre.

One was dressed like a peasant. The other wore a three-cornered hat. Both had long bat-hands of black-crape.

Over the shoulder of the man with a cocked hat was slung a broad strap in which he carried a box. They were hired mourners carrying the corpse of a child to the grave. Neither father, nor mother, not even a family friend, followed that small coffin. All was left to the hands of hirelings.

The painter turned away, sad, and thinking, "Did not one tear fall on that little corpse?"

HIDDEN TREASURES.

IN the "green room," at Dresden, where, for centuries the Saxon princes have gathered their gems and treasures, until they have become worth millions of dollars, may be seen a silver egg, a present to one of the Saxon queens, which, when you touch a spring, opens and reveals a golden yolk. Within the yolk is a chicken. Press the wing, and the chicken flies open, disclosing a splendid golden crown, studded with jewels. Nor is this all. Touch another secret spring, and you find hid in the centre a magnificent diamond ring!

So it is with every truth and promise of God's Word—a treasure within a treasure. The more we examine it, the greater riches do we find. But how many neglect to touch the spring!

ITEMS.

I WILL relate a story, about two boys. One was remarkable for doing with promptness and perseverance whatever he undertook. The other had the habit of putting off every thing he could. "I'll do it to-morrow," was his motto. "I'll do it now," was the motto of the other boy. The boy who loved to put things off, had by far the best natural talent, but he was outstripped in the race of life by his neighbor, whose motto was; "I'll do it now, this should be the motto of each and every one, never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

A BOOK OF THREE LEAVES.—An old minister used to carry about a little book with three leaves, and no words in it. The first leaf was black, the next scarlet, the last white. Day by day he looked at it, and at last told what it meant, something in his way: Here is the black leaf that shows my sin, and what it deserves. Then comes the red page, that tells me of Jesus' blood. I look at it, and weep, and look again. Lastly comes the white leaf, a picture of my dark soul washed in the cleansing fountain and made clean."

THOUGHTS.—Bad thoughts are worse enemies than lions and tigers, for we can keep out of the way of wild beasts, but bad thoughts attack us every where; the cup that is full will hold no more. Keep your heart full of good thoughts that bad thoughts may find no room to enter.

M. C. N.

In one of the Anniversary meetings in London, Mr. Spurgeon said:

"He had heard of a man who used to say to his wife, 'Mary, go to church and pray for both of us.' But the man dropped one night that when he and his wife got to the gate of heaven, Peter said, 'Mary, go in for you both.' He awoke and made up his mind that it was time for him to become a Christian.

There are persons whom you can always believe, because you know they have the habit of telling the truth. They do not "color" a story or enlarge a bit of news in order to make it sound fine or remarkable. There are others whom you hardly know whether to believe or not, because they "stretch" things so. A trifling incident grows in size, but not in quality, by passing through their mouth. They take a small fact or slender bit of news, and pad it with added words, and paint it with high colored adjectives, until it is largely unreal, and gives a false impression. And one does not like to listen to folks when so much must be "allowed for shrinkage."

A LADY ON OUR OCEAN said to Mr. Wesley, "Supposing you were to know that you would die at twelve o'clock to-morrow night, how would you spend the intervening time?" "Why, just as I intend to spend it," said he. "I should reach to-night at Gloucester, and again to-morrow morning. After that I would ride to Wakebury, preach in the afternoon, and meet the Society in the evening. I should then repair to friend Martin's house, as he expects to entertain me; converse and pray with the family; retire to my room at ten o'clock; commend myself to my heavenly Father; lie down to rest, and wake up in glory."

A REMARKABLE case of defective vision is that of the three children of James Howard, a seafaring man, whose family lives on Ocracoke Island. They become totally blind each day immediately after the sun goes down. If by chance they happen to be in the yard playing when the sun sets, their playthings are instinctively laid aside, and efforts made to reach the house, when they retire and sleep soundly until sunrise, after which their sight is described as being restored, and, to all appearance, perfectly unimpaired. The youngest is three and the eldest ten years old—two boys and one girl, all of light complexion. Their eyes are light blue, and there is nothing about them that appears at all strange.

A MISER is the gambler of his house and the turnkey of his wealth.

REMARKS ABOUT LOVE-FEASTS.

THE Love-feast season is here—the time when many glorious feasts will be held in various parts of the Brotherhood; it will be a season of special rejoicing and will, no doubt, add comfort and strength to many hearts.

That these Feasts may be made as edifying and pleasant as possible, we offer the following remarks, intending that they shall apply only where needed:

1. Care should be taken so as not to misapply the preaching at self-examination services. We have seen instances where every sister in the house was properly covered, yet, the whole time was taken up preaching about the covering. Some ministers take up nearly all the time talking about dress and the arranging of things in our houses. These are suitable subjects at the proper time, but surely they do not belong to self-examination in the sense that Paul refers to. Self-examination is a heart work, and if ever there was a time that members should look into their hearts it is just before going to the Lord's table. Let the design of the preaching be to prepare the minds of the members for the solemn and sacred work before them.

2. The preaching on such occasions is generally too long; in many cases it causes the Feast to commence an hour later than it ought to. I have known ministers to so far forget themselves as to preach till sundown, when actually they ought to have quit an hour or so before sundown could have the house with plenty of time to get the tables in order. This kind of work greatly delays the Feast, and makes it more or less unpleasant for everybody present. Close the self-examination services in good time to get the tables arranged so the Feast can commence about sundown.

3. In most Feasts the supper and the communion are too far separated. When Christ instituted these ordinances he had no interval between the supper and the communion, for while they were yet eating he took bread and blessed it, and gave it to his disciples. Mark 14: 22. What God hath joined together, it is not wisdom for us to put asunder. As soon as thanks for the supper is returned the chapter can be read. During the reading of the chapter, the bread can be separated. A few appropriate remarks from the administrator will be sufficient to introduce the salutation. A long sermon at this point is not only out of place, but greatly wearies the congregation.

4. Care should be taken not to consume so much time at our Feasts. We see no use in prolonging the services till midnight. It is enough to wear a mother out to sit in the congregation and care for a child four or five hours. Then think of some weakly members who are not able to attend the regular appointments yet want to be present at the Feast; think of them sitting on hard benches five hours—it is enough to make a well person feel bad. Besides there are always present old, feeble members who are not accustomed to being up so late. Then there is no use in being so tedious, it tends to lessen the interest of the meeting. An hour and a half, or two hours is sufficient for any Feast under ordinary circumstances. I have been present where 500 members communed and everything was completed inside of one hour and a half. If we will use as much wisdom about our religious matters as we do about our worldly affairs there will be less reason for complaint about being tedious. J. H. M.

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL'S ADMINISTRATION OF TRINE IMMERSION.

IN another part of this paper we reprint an article from the daily Tribune of May 1st. It opens a door into a temple which seems to be filled with "errors and rocks," which have fallen on the followers of Alexander Campbell, and broken them in pieces. It is the old story of worldlyism having eaten up all the simplicity, and left nothing but the husks of depravity and carnality for such as love to feed on them. The old "disciples" yearns for youthful vigor to again enter the field of Reformation, and call attention to "first principles." And now permit us to suggest in a modest way, that while there is a thought in the mind to clear away the fog and brush, and make straight paths for the people, there be also a peering into some of the principles laid down by Alexander Campbell in his plea for "the Bible, nothing but the Bible, as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice." Dare we say the first principles are faulty? No, not that! Dare we say the gospel order is deficient? No, not that! The gospel is right, the order right, the principles good, the doctrines correct, but there were some errors imbibed by the reformer which upset the platform and let the gentlemen on it, down into the pit of error.

We now call attention to a declaration—a frank admission of his debater Campbell, the great reformer, in an address with Eder N. L. Rice. Mark it well! Scan it on every side! It comes from him who aimed a "dash-blow to sectarianism," and sought to turn the hearts of the people to the Bible as an all-sufficient rule of faith and practice.—a noble plea, a good work when fixed on first principles. Hear the great Reformer;

"Not only Mosheim, Neander, but all the historians, as well as Professor Stuart, trace trine immersion to the times of the apostles."

While Mr. Campbell was ransacking the many volumes of ecclesiastical history, for evidence against sprinkling we think he would solicit quite about thus:

"There was Mosheim, a distinguished historian born at Lubeck, Germany in 1694, and died at Göttingen in 1755. He was an able man—a ripe scholar. His standpoint was that of liberal orthodoxy. Character, genius and learning shone forth from his mind with great brilliancy; and his researches into the ecclesiastical facts are worthy of my admiration. On baptism he has given us valuable information. He has traced true immersion to the times of the apostles. Valuable testimony indeed! When I met Eld. Rice in the baptismal controversy, I shall wield the information from Mosheim with the ability which God giveth. With a cord of things shall I lay in this testimony from Johann Lorenz von Mosheim—the great historian. And there is Johann August Wilhelm Neander, the greatest of ecclesiastical historians. His testimonials—his cloud of witnesses are all on the side of truth. Students flocked to him from all parts of Germany, and from the most distant Protestant countries to listen to his powerful arguments in behalf of Christianity. Great is Neander, the historian! He traces trine immersion in the time of the apostles. He does not only trace it nearly to apostolic times, but to the time of the apostles—right up to their midst, where Jesus said, 'baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy spirit.' I accept Neander's witnesses and will throw them down at the feet of Elder Rice. Let him step on them if he dare! But this is not all. I shall bring up Professor Moses Stuart who was born in Walton, Conn., in 1789 and died in Andover, Mass., in 1859. He was a ripe scholar—a congregational scholar of rare attainments; he traces 'trine immersion to the time of the apostles. Surely Elder Rice will not set aside one of his own men—a man so profound as Moses Stuart. And if he will not accept Moses Stuart, Neander and Moshien, I shall tell him what all the historians say. I will tell him that they all trace trine immersion to the times of the apostles. Surely Mr. Rice will not shut his ears to such a host of witnesses. And now lest what I have said in my debate with the Elder should be called in question, I offer the following certificate:—

“Having carefully examined the Report of the within discussion furnished by Messrs. Gould, of Cincinnati, and Drapier of Louisville, and compared it with our notes and memoranda; we hesitate not to authenticate it, and commend it to the public, as a full exhibition of facts, documents, and arguments used by us on the several questions debated.” A Campbell.

This we regard as overwhelming; and now since Alexander Campbell, the Reformer, made such a grand admission, and attested the truth so nobly in regard to trine immersion, but failed to plead for it and urge it upon his hearers, we hope that other Reformers will not overlook this fact, but believe it, practice and advocate it as one of the first principles of Christianity, being set forth by the great Head and Founder of the New Institution.

VISIT TO JEFFERSON CO., ILL.

THROUGH special favors received from the Illinois Central Railroad company, I was permitted to spend a few days in Jefferson county, this State, week before last. When I left Mt. Morris vegetation was just beginning to put forth, the last snow banks having disappeared a few days before. The railroad was in an excellent condition, hence traveling was pleasant. I observed but little change in the vegetation till after I had passed Bloomington. On reaching Mt. Vernon, I was permitted to see the trees in full leaf, cherry and apple trees in bloom and the fields looking green with waving wheat and beautiful meadows. It had been raining for nearly one week, hence the roads were very muddy. Bro. D. F. Eby and wife and several others from Lanark were also here looking at the country.

I spent three days in Mt. Vernon and vicinity, but could not travel much on account of the mud. I was very favorably impressed with the country. The timber is good and plenty of it; the climate must also be excellent. Fruit grows in abundance. It is noted as a wheat country. The soil is good, but needs special care and attention just now; had farming has rendered some of it less fertile than it ought to be. The country is standing much in need of energetic and enterprising farmers. I think it cannot be excelled for sheep and poultry. Men of moderate means can procure excellent homes there.

The water is not always good, but that can be remedied in most cases. Markets are reported good. The city of Mt. Vernon is quite a business point; population 2,500. I think it is as nice a town as I have seen in the State. It has been anti license for ten years, hence no saloon in the place. There are seven mineral springs at one point in the city. The places could be made a first class health resort.

There are several members living in the country. I visited them, but could hold no meetings, as circumstances at the office did not permit me to be absent long enough to make the arrangements. Persons desiring information in regard to this county call on or address S. C. Polk, who will take pleasure in giving all desired information. J. H. M.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

THE Sunday-school season is now upon us. Its utility among the Brethren is a question unsettled by experience. While there are many who hail the S. S. with gladness, there are others who have evil forebodings of its influence. Experience will most likely change the feelings of S. S. enthusiasts as well as opposers. Those who have favored the S. S. on the ground that it would be the means of restraining our youth from running off into other churches will be taught by experience that the peculiarities of the Christian as defined by the Brethren's interpretation of the Scriptures will not be instilled into the minds of the youth in our S. S. We think we know something of the majority of the schools conducted by the Brethren; and these have not succeeded in teaching anything different from what would have been learned at the Sunday-schools of other churches. Of the schools, both of the Brethren and other churches, pastime, entertainment seems to be the predominant incentive to attendance. No sensible farmer commits the folly of sowing seeds knowingly “among thorns,” “on stony places,” &c. Should he who sows the seed of life exercise less discretion than the prudent farmer?

We do not doubt the possibility of the S. S. being an institution where good might be accomplished; but admitting the possibility, we, in no sense, regard it as a probability. We have heard of instances where the S. S. was the leading agent in calling a prodigal home to God, and we do not doubt the statement. Christ said that the salvation of one soul is worth more than the world. Taking these two facts together, S. S. enthusiasts, without calm reflection, deliberate consideration, decide the S. S. to be an institution appointed by Heaven, and are ready to stigmatize any good, honest, sincere brother or sister who would dare to contradict them, as bigoted, prejudiced, fanatical.

But, stop! Have you ever considered that the irreverent, trifling manner in which God's word is often treated in the S. S. has been the means of hardening many hearts, causing them to become indifferent to the offers of mercy, and disrespectful to the faithful of God?

It is very hard for man to take a comprehensive view of any subject on which he has become partisan. If we could only look at the S. S. question, as well as others on which we are divided, divested of all prejudice and bias, we might all be nearer the truth, love each other more, have brighter hopes of the future prosperity of the church.

To our brethren who have serious objections to the S. S. we would say, our impressions are that your objections are founded upon misconceptions of Scripture, and your deductions are from illogical reasoning. Our hope is that experience will convince you that the S. S. cannot do much harm if it does not do much good.

It seems to us that we ought to convene in a general meeting for the purpose of reasoning, as brethren and sisters of one common Father, upon the Sunday-school and its work. This meeting should take in all who have the welfare of Zion at heart, whether they are favorable or unfavorable to the S. S. What would our church be without the general and district conferences? Is the infant, S. S., more able to take care of itself than its mother? Let us hear from you.

S. J. HARRISON.

LANARK, ILLINOIS.

APOLOGIES.

DO not make them, dear young brethren, just entering upon the noblest of vocations—the christian ministry. Your self-respect, respect for your audience, the high character of your office, all require that you feel the solemnity of the occasion, the fitness of the theme, and your ability to improve the opportunity. If you have failed to qualify yourself for the service, an apology will not benefit you; it will excite distrust or commiseration, and thus rob the cause of a certain power. Better fail many times, and let these failures teach you a salutary lesson, than to get into a habit which so ill befits the pulpit. Do not apologize no matter what has happened. It is your duty to be in the pulpit, it is your right to be there without a word of explanation or apology.—Baptist Flag.

If you want the enemy to let you alone always be employed in something that is good.

SIXTY thousand Norwegians and Swedes have contracted for a passage to this country.

EXTRAVAGANCE.

THE extravagance of the times is alarming, and seems to be on the increase. In too many instances it is finding its way into the church. A New York City paper says: There never was a time in the history of New York when extravagance was carried to such a dizzy height as now. Not in dress alone, but in houses, in carriages, in horses, in entertainments, in balls, in parties, in every way in which money can be expended, it is poured out like water. The result is dress without taste, homes without happiness, and social intercourse without enjoyment. The extravagance of the women is saddening to contemplate. Exorbitant prices are asked and given cheerfully for dress, while diamonds and jewelry cost a fortune. Some of our fashionable belles have their dresses imported ready-made from Paris, copied exactly in their minutest details from the court costumes.

A REMARKABLE CALCULATION.

SOME curious calculations have been made by unthinking people in regard to the number of persons who have lived on the earth, and what we will do with them for standing room when resurrected. On this subject a curious illustration has been afforded by the New York Journal of Commerce. It takes up an utterance of the Rev. Adirondack Murray, who said in a recent lecture:

"Now the population of the earth is 1,000,000,000, and a generation dies every thirty years. In every thirty years then, 1,000,000,000 human beings go out of the world and 1,000,000,000 come in. Forty years ago the church taught that the world was 6,000 years old. She doesn't to-day pretend to guess within 100,000 years how old the world is. Very well. What has been the population of the world since the race began? Who can estimate the number? By what arithmetic shall you compute the swarming millions? Take the globe and flatten it into a vast plain, 24,000 by twenty-four, and it would accommodate but a fraction of the human beings that have lived upon its surface? Where is the locality of the judgment to be, then? Can it have a locality?"

To this the Journal replies: "Now make the widest conceivable estimates. Suppose that the human race has existed on this earth, 100,000 years, that the population has never from the first day been smaller than this estimate for the present time—namely, 1,000,000,000. For the sake of easy calculation, instead of the estimate of thirty years to a generation, say three generations to a century. There will appear to have been 3,000 generations of 1,000,000,000 each, who, being assembled, require standing room. For a crowded meeting of men, women, and children, it would be ample estimate to give each two square feet of room. A square mile contains, in round numbers, 25,000,000 square feet, and 12,500,000 persons could stand on it. Therefore, eighty square miles would hold a generation, and 3,000 times that space would hold the population of 100,000 years. That is to say, 240,000 square miles would contain them, and gathered in a par-allelogram, they would stand in a space 600 miles long by 400 broad. They could easily be accommodated in one or two of our States.

"Dead and buried, side by side, they would require five times their standing space, or (say) 1,200,000 square miles, and the United States has ample wild lands, as yet unwanted and unoccupied, to give them a cemetery. If any one wishes he may estimate how many thousand years of generations could find graves in this country without crowding each other. Whoever will may imagine the population assembled in a circle, or in a vast theater, with floor above floor, each floor diminishing the surface area of the building. It will do people of vivid imaginations good to reduce such imaginations to the facts of figures, and any school girl can do it."

COMPUTING TIME,

THE idea, I believe, is universally accepted that the Jew's manner of computing time was to begin the day in the evening. Now turn to Gen. 1: 3, "And God said, Let there be light: and there was light." This was the beginning of days. "And God divided the light from the darkness." (4th verse) And God called the light day, and the darkness he called night: and the evening and the morning was the first day (5th verse). This included the twenty-four hour day—the light and the darkness after God divided it. In the revolution of time, evening was the first to appear in fulfillment of the first twelve hour day, consequently in this revolution there had to appear the second morning in fulfillment of the first twenty-four hour day, and also the beginning of the second day, hence the language is, evening and morning the first day. It is not said that morning and evening was the first day, that would only include the light, the twelve hour day. Thus we learn from the sacred writer that the day began in the morning with the first morning. How long was it until the day began in the evening, and where was the first day or twelve hours placed in computing and reckoning of time. Will Bro. J. H. Moore, or some other brother please answer: See Matt. 28: 1. "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn towards the first day of the week," &c. Mark 26: 2. Luke 24: 1.

JOHN HANSHARGER.

REMARKS.—In regard to the Bible method of computing time we know of no explanation so complete as Bro. J. W. Beer's work on the Passover and Lord's Supper. There is so much in the subject that it cannot be fully explained in an ordinary editorial, hence we suggest the reading of Bro. Beer's book. Perhaps some of our clear headed contributors have something to say.

HENRY Ward Beecher recently said: "If there is one thing I consider thoroughly indigestible it is the way criminals are cosseted and carried out of life. When a murderer is to be hanged, women send him flowers and would kiss an ulcer for his sake. Priests run to him, and philanthropists hurry after them. 'He's going to die!' Are not a hundred thousand persons dying all around us, and there is nobody to run to them? There is no sympathy for them; but if a monster is to die for a foul murder, the floodgates of sympathy are opened; and the newspapers tell us how he died trusting in Jesus. Can a man, who has crept up to the gallows through the common sewers, at the last moment, just before the last effort to obtain pardon, suddenly blossom out into a fervent religious life? I don't believe it."

Dr. Jacob Ditzler's new work on baptism has made its appearance, and is commended by the Western Christian Advocate. He makes the Methodists believe that he has demolished immersion. Now let him move to have immersion stricken out of the Discipline as a "mode" of baptism, and instruct the Methodist preachers to cease immersing people, calling it baptism. But, perhaps, no one expects Methodists to be consistent.—American Baptist Flag.

This is the way it is done in many localities: Is the church in debt, the parsonage? Does the pulpit need a cushion, the floor a carpet? Is the minister's salary falling into arrears? Is the Sabbath-school library to be replenished, or an outfit for a missionary? What now? A spree, a feast a frolic, a strawberry festival, a picnic, a soiree, or fancy fair, a real smash down business. Gospel is out of the question. Faith, that works by love and purifies the heart, is laid aside totally for the time being. Piety, the religion of Jesus, pure, undefiled, bleeds at every pore! Christ is dishonoured, wounded in the hearts of his friends. Satan rejoices! So it goes all right!—Zion's Watchman.

Beyond the Mount of Olives, to the north-eastward, about ten minutes' walk, and below the spot where, not long ago, the stone of Bethphage was discovered, the people of Bethany recently have been making excavations. In so doing, they have laid bare dwellings of small size, having mosaic floors and two very large cisterns, together with fragments of marble and columns. Though for the most part in various colors, the character of the mosaics is somewhat crude. The locality is called by an unintelligible name—Khirbet Ankesheh.

"Do you promise, by God's assistance, never to drink intoxicating liquors as a beverage?" is the new addition in the Cumberland Presbyterian book of discipline, which must be answered affirmatively by every candidate for membership.

Now, we do not want to say one word in favor of the use of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, but we do think that the Cumberland Presbyterian church acts very inconsistent in making this a test of fellowship while at the same time she ignores some of the plain, positive commands of the New Testament. Be consistent by teaching and practicing the whole gospel.

All communications for this department, such as queries and answers, should be addressed to J. S. Mobler, Ladue, Henry Co., Mo.

Will some one explain Genesis 4: 13—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were those "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Please explain Hebrew 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, when he used the plural number? In the German the reading is different: "For die Taufe, oder der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLES.

Gen. 1: 5, What was that Light, seeing the sun and moon were only made the fourth day? Some one please explain. LIZZIE B. MYERS.

Is the above query is open for investigation. S. S. M.

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven"—was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and there stopped, or is it right to pray yet? ANNA GUTBERY.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 43d. WM. LONG.

THE UNJUST STEWARD.

Please explain the parable of the unjust steward, when he called his Lord's debtors and said unto them to write 50 and 80 when they owed 100. Did he pay the balance out of his own purse or not? Some preach that he did; or did not the Lord teach his disciples heavenly wisdom or fore-thought, to provide for the world to come? Please explain it through B. AT W., as soon as you can, and you will oblige your unworthy brother, J. Y. SNAVELY.

It is hardly probable that the unjust steward paid back the balance to his Lord, from the fact that he had already acted dishonestly. Besides this, his Lord told him he could no longer be steward. See Luke 16: 2. The steward knew, that he would lose his position; hence he began to plan for his future subsistence, and fell upon the plan of reducing the bills of his Lord's debtors; knowing that by so doing he would secure their friendship. This view is further sustained in verse 4, of same chapter, where the unjust steward plainly gives his motives for thus acting. He says, "That when I am put out of my stewardship, they may receive me into their houses."

Here the unjust steward made himself friends of that, which was not his own. The lesson to be learned from this parable is, evidently, that we, as Christians, make friends of that, which is not our own, (for the earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof) i. e., the mammon of unrighteousness. See Luke 16: 9. "That when we fail, they may receive us into everlasting habitations." The point in the lesson is, that inasmuch as the unjust steward made himself friends with this world's goods, and thus provided for his future well being in this life; even so Christians should make to themselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, for their eternal well-being. Not however by acting dishonestly, but in the following manner: If we give alms to the poor, we not only confer a favor upon the unfortunate, but we are at the same time laying up treasures in heaven. Because of this, Christ says, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Again, "He that giveth a cup of water in the name of a disciple, shall in no wise lose his reward."—Hence if the simple giving of a cup of water, from Christian principle will bring its true reward, will not the giving of food and raiment and money, also bring its certain recompense? Certainly.

Then we can make to ourselves friends in heaven, as well as on earth, by that, which virtually is our Lord's, and this is what our Lord wants us to do. By so doing we act wisely.

J. S. M.

THE FIG TREE.

Will some brother please explain part of 13th, 14th and 21st verses of 11th chapter of Mark, which reads thus, "He found nothing but leaves; for the time of figs was not yet. Jesus answered and said unto it: No man eat fruit of thee hereafter forever, and his disciples heard it. Peter saith unto him: Master, behold the figtree which thou cursedst, is withered away. It was cursed and the time of figs was not yet. J. H. STAGEN.

DOUBTLESS the object of this miracle was, to prove to the disciples the divine power of Christ; that he not only had power to cast out devils and heal the sick, give sight to the blind, cause the dumb to speak; but that he also had power over inanimate nature, by controlling the mountain waves of Galilee, and causing the fig-tree to wither and die.

One will say, since Christ knew all things, why did he seek for figs on the tree, before the time of figs had come? To this it might be answered that Christ did not seek for figs, so much for the sake of figs, as for a proper opportunity of displaying his power, to confirm the faith of the disciples.

Had there been figs on the tree, the opportunity to perform the miracle would not have been so favorable.

Again, if there had been figs on the trees; his enemies, (who were always watching him) might have said, the tree was killed in shaking off the figs.

The cause for killing the fig tree was, "no fruit." It is thus with professors of religion. God expects fruit, — the fruit of the spirit. "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit, is cut down," etc. We may think that our time for bearing fruit has not come, but let us remember that our time is not God's time.

May God enable us all to bear fruits of holiness, that we be not cut down. J. S. M.

The Bible is the telescope which gives us a view of fairer scenes above.

Nothing is more amiable, or a better guard to virtue, than true modesty.

REPENTANCE AND CONVERSION.

1. Where is the difference between repentance and conversion?
2. What did the Savior mean, when he breathed on his disciples and said unto them, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost?" S. C.

CONVERSION means turning. It may be the turning of the affections, or the will, or the life. As popularly used, conversion is the turning of the heart to God. But sometimes in the Scriptures, it not only does not mean this, but stands in marked distinction from it. Thus in Matt. 13: 15: "Lest they should see with their eyes, hear with their ears, understand with their hearts and be converted"—properly, "and turn"—"and I should heal them;" where it evidently comprehends the turning of the life to God. Again, in Acts 3: 19: "Repent and be converted"—properly "repeat and turn"—"that your sins may be blotted out." The conversion here, is something that follows after repentance; consequently it does not mean a change of heart. It is the turning of the life in actual obedience to the gospel. James 3: 19, 20: "If any of you [Christians] do err from the truth and one convert him, let him know that he who converteth a sinner from the error of his ways," etc. Here it cannot refer to what is popularly styled conversion, for it is spoken of Christians who go astray from the path of right, and it means turning them back to right ways.

2. It was symbolic action, we think, indicating that after his ascension, the spirit would come upon them, and then they would be able to proclaim the remission of sins.

INSTEAD of becoming obsolete by the flight of centuries the demand for the Bible is increasing every day. Never in the world's history has the demand for it been so great as now. It is estimated that two copies of this marvelous work are published every minute, eight and day, the year round, and yet the demand is greater than the supply.

Correspondence.

From T. K. Buck.—Brother Moore.—Having been informed by friends from the North that you contemplated a visit to our country, we will look forward to the time of your arrival, with no little interest, and were it agreeable to the wishes of those of the ministry who are now visiting our country, it would be a source of pleasure to members residing here, to arrange to hold meetings. We had a short but pleasant visit from Bro. R. F. McCune, of Lenox, and are very sorry, he could not tarry longer. Our time was closely occupied at the time of his visit and we were unable to get over the country with him, as we wished, but hope this may not be his last visit among us.—We now have quite a little company of members in our vicinity, numbering, with those who have purchased homes here, in all about ten present. They ought to have some attention by the ministering brethren who may chance to visit this section. Our country is just about entering into its full glory. We must say, that no country presents a more lovely or attractive appearance in Spring, than this portion of Illinois.

Our whole country has donned its new dress of green, presenting a pleasing scene to the eye. In a few more days the air will be filled with fragrance from the beautiful bloom of the orchards. Cherries are all in bloom now. We have lettuce and onions now on the table, radishes and beets are growing nicely. Flower gardens are already perfectly beautiful. The more thrifty class of farmers are rapidly pushing forward preparations for planting, and the coming week will see a great many fields of corn planted.

Wh at is improving rapidly. Many fields thought to be severely injured by the Winter, bid fair to make an average crop. Our pastures are fine, and cattle rapidly casting their old coats and looking fine. Come down, friends, from the chilly and bleak North, and see our beautiful Egypt. Secure to yourself a fine farm among us in this land of fruit and flowers, and during the coming Summer I hope to meet and greet with a hearty welcome, many readers of the B. at W.—Mt. Vernon, Ill., April 21.

From J. L. Brown.—This will inform the readers of the B. at W., that wife and I arrived here the 14th of April. My health has been improving while here. The weather is delightful; a soaking rain refreshing everything yesterday. Crops look very promising. We found eight members in the city of Hastings. Bro. Ashmelter and wife keep a boarding-house, Bro. Hilderman, from Philadelphia, clerks in a grocery store. I live a few blocks south from the B. & M. depot, and if any brother should travel through, we would be pleased to have them call. I learned that some old brother from Indiana, was through here and preached in Juniata about the 12th of April. Next time, brother, please call and preach some in Hastings. I would say with Bro. Snowberger, from York, if the ministering brethren should come at his request, to come to Hastings also. Hastings, Neb., May 8.

From Jesse Calvert.—The Northern District of Indiana met in council, May 5,—a large number being present, notwithstanding the small-pox scare. After devotional exercises, the meeting was organized by electing Daniel B. Sturgis, Moderator, and John H. Miller, Reading Clerk; Jesse Calvert, Writing Clerk. The districts were then called and seven queries presented. 1. The missionary work passed the meeting, and four brethren selected to fill the calls for preaching. 2. Is it right for brethren or sisters to trade with men that keep beer or whisky to sell or give away, although they may have it in a different house? Ans., not right. 3. Concerning the restoration of ministers that had been silenced. 4. Was of a similar character, both which passed the meeting and goes to A. M. 5. Concerning getting a home for the infirm old brethren and sisters, and orphans. This passed the meeting, and arrangements will be made to have such an institution in Northern Indiana. 6. Concerning the Miami Valley Elders' Petition. Passed. 7. Concerning elders holding an illegal meeting and acting on the labors of other elders in their absence and condemning their work without giving them notice. This was tabled. D. B. Sturgis was then elected on Standing Committee and John H. Miller, Delegates. The other business being settled, we closed the time of holding the District Meeting until 1st Thursday of April 1882 to be held in Cedar Lake congregation, DeKalb county, Ind. The meeting was pleasant and union seemed to prevail; we think good was done both to members and outsiders.—Warsaw, May 6.

From Wm Ikenberry.—We are having beautiful weather here since Easter, pasture is getting pretty good,—about as far along as it generally is this time of the year. Some folks are done seeding, others are busy at it yet. It is warm enough to plant corn, but the farmers are not ready to plant yet. There is not much sickness here this spring with the exception of some measles which are not very bad. I think the plan of some of our sisters of preserving brother Balsbaugh's writing, is so good, that I am prompted to say a few words too. I will freely pay a dollar and also buy a book, and it seems to me that hundreds of others surely will do the same, if they look at it right and can see how necessary it is that we preserve such writings as his are; for our children and friends to read in time to come, when we will be resting in the silent tomb and can speak to them no more. Many times have I been encouraged to try to serve my God, by reading his writings and thought, if we could only save all his writings. Just think of the great labor it takes for the poor infirm brother to do all this writing, and shall we for the sake of a little worldly treasure, let it be lost, which it certainly will be in the future, if we do not help to preserve it by throwing in our mite? Had we not better lay up treasures in heaven than on earth? Perhaps you will say "I would give something, but I am not able. And he sees so many words that I do not understand anyhow." Well perhaps you do not understand every word; neither do I, but I am afraid we understand more than we are willing to comply with. And as for not being able, do you not often spend money for things that you need but just as well or far better off without as far as health, for both soul and body, is concerned? If this is the case, you are inexcusable. Let us try and make good use of what the Lord gives us and spend at least part of it to the honor and the glory of God and the saving of souls.—Waterloo, Iowa, May 1.

From Emily A. Cross.—Dear Brother Eshelman.—Your letter and papers received O, I don't know how to return thanks to you for the paper, except to send you the money for it, as soon as I can get it. I don't feel worthy of such a gift. I wanted to reward you for your trouble as soon as I received the paper but did not know how to do it, until last evening I received your paper and the supplement. So I thought, now is a chance for me to do something for the good cause. As I told you before, I live away off from the main body of the church but that don't hinder me from trying to do something for the Church when I have an opportunity like this. So this morning when two of my neighbors came in I handed them the paper and supplement. I told them I would like for them to subscribe and they handed me the money, wanting the paper for five months. O, brother you have no idea how your kind letter and good papers revived me in spirit! O, I feel like a new person, to think such good news reaches my home every week. You said you hoped that we would gather good things from them. O, I could gather nothing else; for they are composed of the words of God and well seasoned. O they are bread for my hungry soul. I read and took the letter and paper to my widowed mother to read, and she wept over them, and enjoyed them like a hungry child would enjoy a piece of bread. I make this comparison to let you know how we feel away off from the main body of the Church. We read our Bibles but that is not like having the Gospel explained by a minister; that is why we love the paper; it explains many things that we don't understand by reading alone in the Testament. Pascoe, Sangamon Co., Ill., April 24.

[We permit this to go before our readers to show them how glad the paper makes those who seldom hear a minister preach. Recently many brethren and sisters sent us money to pay for the paper to the poor, and they now see how their contributions make glad the hearts of those of like precious faith. Many such letters are received at this office. God will reward all openly.—Ems]

From Granville Nevenger.—Dear Brother: Without boasting, we can say we have become very much attached to the editors of the BRETHREN AT WORK—when we say "we" I mean a number of saints as well as sinners in this congregation. And although we do not use your little God-sends, do not be discouraged, in your work of love in dragging many precious young souls, from the very jaws of hell, and exerting a moralizing and refining influence, over those whose souls are not so deeply dyed in sin. Go on in your heaven-authorized mission until you yield your body in death. As for the BROTHERS AT WORK, it is highly appreciated by its readers, in Bond county, and although limited circumstances forbid my accepting of your liberal offer at present, you may expect us lifetime readers as long as you continue in the present "old paths," for wife said not long ago that we could hardly keep house without it. While I think of my own sorrows, trials and temptations as a burden for such a weak mortal as I am. I think of you as one that is led to the very pinnacle of the temple, and although you may hear the scold and jeers of our modern non-pleasing, self-worshipping and flesh-pampering souls, remember that many silent, heart-felt prayers are going up to God in your behalf. As it is God's work, continue to unfurl the blood-stained banner of Prince Immanuel; for many are trying even in the Brotherhood, to trail the blood-bought banner in the dust. May the Lord reward them according to their works. I received from you the Problem of Human Life and read and studied it with interest, and can say it is a book that ought to be sent broadcast over this mundane sphere. I am glad you are doing your part in driving the midnight darkness of evolution from our laud. I have loaned my book and expect to keep it going. I await with interest the Literary Microcosm. May God bless you all and keep us safe in the narrow way and save us eternally.—Mulberry Grove, Ill.

[We do not make a practice of publishing friendly letters; but think the above may serve to show grumblers that our work is appreciated. Jealous persons may feel sad because we receive some heavenly messages, but good men will rejoice that even we get some sweets amid the earnings and mottorings of ungodly men and women.—M. M. E.]

From Howard Miller.—In the church census, now about complete, on making out exact returns for each church district in the United States it frequently happens that we cannot find a schedule, or several of them, to complete the district. In such cases names of the churches are published and correspondence solicited on the subject. It not infrequently happens that in the schedule after the question, "Name of church" the answer "German Baptist" occurs, and to the question "tell name of denomination with which connected," the reply is, "not connected with any," and is clearly a misapprehension on the part of the respondent. We are thus unable to locate the congregation. In Southern Indiana we want to hear from Josiah Howard, Mathias Prantz, Jonathan Zimmerman, and Sampson Hill church to complete Indiana. Please exercise the virtues of patience and promptitude.—Leisburg Pa.

From B. F. Flory.—We, the Brethren of the Nebraska Wesleyan Church, are progressing slowly. Had five additions during the Winter and Spring,—three at our series of meetings, conducted by C. Forney of Falls City, N. J.,—one last Sunday, a minister in the Christian or Campbellite church. We now have near forty members, with a comfortable meeting house in the town of Farragut, at which place we expect to hold a Love-feast on the 18th of June 1881. We would desire any, looking up a better country, give this a visit. We have an excellent farming country. Especially should Brethren traveling west this Summer, give us a call at our Feast. Weather delightful, crops promising, corn planting in order. Any coming by R. R., should come to Farragut, a station on the C. B. & Q. R. R. Also address me there-for any information, etc.—Farragut Iowa, May 7.

From L. Wolc.—Wheat in Southern Illinois does not look very promising. The Fall was too dry; it did not get root sufficient to stand the severe Winter. Grass and other things are looking fine. We see but very few peach blossoms. Apple blossoms not so abundant as last year; cherries very full.—Salem, Ill. May 5th.

From A. W. Swab.—We are having late backward Spring for this country, more so than generally. The oats are all sowed and some corn planted and nice weather now. We had our church meeting the last day of April; all went off in peace and harmony.—Pleasant Mound, Ill.

From John Metzger.—I came here Saturday, trying to preach Jesus to the people; had some troubles to get a place for preaching, but I concluded I would still try; finally I got a place. I see some of the people here fear the Brethren will make some inroads. Preached last evening to a very interesting congregation. Three came out; there are fair prospects for more.—St. Louis, Mo., May 3.

From J. S. Flory.—Any person, wishing to correspond with us, can address us as follows: We shall be at South English, Iowa, from May 24 to 30; Ashland, Ohio, from June 3 to 10; Canaan, Ohio to June 20; Fayetteville, W. Va., to the middle of July; Farragut, Iowa, July 18 to 25.

TRICKS OF THE TYPES

Jewell Co Kan Apr 25th 1881

Dear Bro M. M. E.

I pity you.—You feel it keenly.—Put it on the 1st Page.—"Bodily Mised." It touches me in tender places and arouses my sympathy, because I have so often suffered in like manner myself.—I do not remember to have ever had one of my compositions published in B. A. W. or Prim. C. without having the compositors change, distort, pervert or interpolate until like old father John Hemmeway I felt "greatly mortified".

I once had a standing advertisement, of several months, running through the Prim. C.

It was only 3 or 4 lines and I paid the regular rates for insertion requesting that they preserve the diction in the copy verbatim.

Yet it came out, and ran through, with an interpolation that greatly marred its eulphory and measure.

What is the matter? Can your compositors read well? or is it a papers privilege, to make its Contributors say just anything and everything,—with but in all sorts of a haphazard manner,—and frequently give the exact reverse of what they wish to say

In almost every paper Bro. Balbaugh was wont to have an "errata" or so "explanation," or a "Correction" in some of which was complained that his light became darkness—Now when the Editor suffers, perhaps we may hope for an improvement.

Please be so good as to publish this. It may be for the benefit of our Editors and Compositors.—Yet I don't suppose you will.—I once sent a remonstrance of this kind to the Prim. C.—It never appeared, but some-time after I sent them a Notice of our Love-feast to be held at the residences of James L. Switzer Jewell Co Kan. It came out—"A Love-feast will be held at the residence of J. L. Switzer Rock Creek Missouri—All are cordially invited &c"

Some time after I wrote to bro. Quinler to know whether the J. L. Switzer of the Rock Creek Missouri Church was any relation to myself but he said my letter was unintelligible to him—

Its no use to tackle an editor They have every advantage of you If you don't talk to suit them they'll make you, and its a very difficult thing to get a few words like these through the press—

Now please—Messrs Editors & Compositor—let us say what seemeth good unto us—and say the little we do say in our own way of saying it for we love our individuality very much

I have no ambition to rank as a Contributors but I do feel an interest in our church and Church Papers and I do not think it enhances the interest of either to handle your copy so carelessly affectionately Yours

J. L. Switzer

Now, Bro. James, we have followed your copy precisely in spelling, punctuation and capitalization. We think every man has a right to preserve his "individuality;" and such as want us to retain it strictly in their articles sent to us, shall have it retained. Many articles are poorly written and not unfrequently a word is used that is nearly like some other word in orthography and meaning, and when our compositors find one of these words, it is truly puzzling which one the writer of the article desires to use; and as his illegible scrawls leave us to guess, we guess as near as we can. There is too much carelessness on the part of many writers. They hastily pen a few thoughts, and without even taking time to arrange the sheets in order, send them to the paper with the request, "Please correct and publish." Now, under the head of correction, we must understand many things. We have his ideas, but the words are spelled wrongly, the grammar and punctuation are faulty, and to get wrinkles out of the sheet, may indeed cause some changes in the sentiments. There is only one remedy. Let those who write for the press, put their articles up, according to good law. M. M. E.

Every present indication our coming Annual Meeting will have plenty to do against District meetings should make it a point not to burden A. M. with queries, &c., that they cannot attend to quite as well, and in many cases much better. Notices should be sent that have already been acted upon, unless it is for the purpose of having them repealed or amended.—Printed.

HEALTHFUL HOMES.

NOW is the time to "clean up" in order to secure health. The long winter has disappeared and during its stay a great deal of rubbish has been accumulated here and there, which if allowed to remain to become foul or decomposed will be greatly detrimental to health.

Carpets should be taken up, carefully cleaned or replaced; walls should have an application of solution of lime, or something better. Your closets or rubbish rooms should be examined; there look at that pile of old boots and shoes, old clothing etc., which should be taken out, and give the room a chance to breathe pure air.

There is the sewer, perhaps close to the well too, see that none of this fetid water enters the well, open up the water course and carry fever, ague, diphtheria etc., away from your homes.

Now examine your cellars. Look at that pile of rotten apples, potatoes, turnips or what not. Remove them and throw them out in your yard for compost. Look at your mouldy walls and damp floors. Open the windows, whitewash the wall and render your cellars healthy and thus bid defiance to disease, and be healthy and happy. Sickness can be avoided greatly by a carefully cleaned and ventilated home. Pure air is the angel of health. Then why not let this health-winged messenger in? If all rubbish is allowed to remain in your cellar and garret, pure air will remain a stranger. All departments cleaned, and properly ventilated, all enclosures can be made as pure as the air without.

Remember you are therefore measurably responsible for sickness in the family. Improper ventilation of rooms, improper food, improper clothing and exercise and indiscriminate eating, all prompt disease. All of this can be avoided, will you do it?

TOBACCO A FOE TO MARRIAGE.

THE inquiry is often made, How is it that there are so many fine girls in our cities unmarried and likely to remain so? We answer, tobacco is one cause. In old times, when you could approach a young man within whispering distance, without being nauseated by his breath; he used—when his day's work was over—to spend his evenings with some good girl or girls, either around the family hearth or in pleasant walks, or at some innocent place of amusement. The young man of the present day takes his solitary pipe, and puffs away all his vitality, till he is stupid as an oyster, and then goes to some saloon to quench the thirst created by smoking; and sheds crocodile tears every time his stockings are out at the toes, that "the girls now-a-days are so extravagant, we can't afford to be married!" Young men deliberately give up respectable female society to indulge the solitary, enervating vice of smoking until their broken-down constitutions clamor for careful nursing; then they coolly ask some noble girl to exchange her health, strength, beauty and unimpaired intellect for their sallow face, tainted blood and breath, irritable temper and mental imbecility.

Women may well hate smoking and smokers. We have known the most gentle and refined men grow harsh in temper and uncleanly in their personal habits under the thralldom of a tyranny, which they had not love nor respect enough for woman to break through.

On the other hand certain ladies of the superfluous, superficial type, we confess, sometimes trouble us a little by dispatching the mighty evils of tobacco, by a mere stroke of nonchalance, a toss of the head, or a senseless laugh. "O, my husband smokes a little," said one of these ladies to us, "but he smokes the best cigars, and if he does nothing worse, I shall not trouble him about it." This lady afflicts God's world with five creatures, in the shape of sons and daughters—they are pale, lank, lean, scraggy and tremulous; she never investigated the cause of this family deformity and disease; she does not consider that tobacco is a rank poison, that her husband was poisoned from head to foot when she married him; that he poisoned her and she poisoned her children, and that the virus inheres like indelible ink, or the hue of the Ethiopian.

"A man," says a distinguished physician, "may poison his child before it is born, through the nerves and blood of its mother." I have a friend who was an inveterate smoker, until his first child was born,—that saved him. He knew that his breath would poison it, and he has abandoned the poisonous weed, I trust forever.

A few nights ago, says an eminent physician, I was sent for hastily to see an infant two weeks old. I had attended the mother in her confinement, and had not thought it necessary to call but once after. I found her radiant with health, and she had followed my directions. The child had nursed, and it had seemed as strong and healthy as possible. I could see no reason why it should be sick, but it had evidently been so. It seemed that it must have been poisoned. I questioned the mother and grandmother, nurse and all, but could not find that any were in fault. At last I turned to the father. "Don't you use tobacco, sir?" said I. The murder was soon out. He was an inveterate smoker. The day before he had taken the babe while the mother went out; some of his friends called and they had a nice, social smoke, in the same room with the child; and there the little delicate creature had been poisoned in every fiber of its being, with every breath it drew. Is it a wonder it was sick? Doubtless many a child is poisoned to death by the tobacco used by its parents, and those around it. "I can point you," says another physician, "to two families right under my eye, where in each case there is a nest of little children, rendered idiots by the tobacco habits of their parents!"

"One would think," says a lady, "that marriage ought to cure a man of using tobacco." It would if women did their duty! The ceremony ought to be amended, by inserting after

"love, honor and cherish," the words, "and use no tobacco." But if marriage, says another, does not reform the tobacco-toper, one of its blessed consequences ought to be. No man ought to poison his baby.

The argument respecting marriage as we reflect, becomes intensely moral. Marriage is a powerful ally to virtue, but few States-prison convicts, we are assured, are married men. "Marriage is honorable in all," hence, to abuse and thwart the grand design of this holy institution is a high-handed sin against the highest good of the race.

The ignorance of former times touching this evil, God may have winked at, but he now commands tobacco sots everywhere to repent. They have no right to poison virtuous women, "whose price is above rubies!" They have no right to afflict the world with a feeble, scrofulous, scraggy set of children—it is a sin against God and nature, and should be placed among criminal offences in the Statutes of a State.—Selected. n.

WOMEN AND WINE.

A WRITER in Scribner's Monthly uses the following strong language, which will be respoinded to by the women who have suffered all over the land.

"Of the worst foes that women have ever had to encounter, wine stands at the head. The appetite for strong drink in men has spoiled the lives of more women—ruined more hopes for them, scattered more fortunes for them, brought to them more shame, sorrow and hardships—than any other evil that exists. The country numbers tens of thousands—may, hundreds of thousands of women who are widows to-day, and sit in hopeless weeds, because their husbands have been slain by strong drink."

"Yes, there are hundreds of thousands of homes, scattered all over the land, in which women live lives of torture, going through all the changes of suffering that lie between the extremes of fear and despair, because those who they love, love wine better than they do the women they have sworn to love. There are women by the thousands who dread to meet at the door the step that once thrilled them with pleasure; that step has learned to reel under the influence of the seductive poison. There are women groaning with pain, while we write these words, from brutalities inflicted by husbands made mad by drink. There can be no exaggeration in any statement made in regard to this matter, because no human investigation can create anything worse than the truth, and no pen is capable of portraying the truth. The sorrows of a wife with a drunken husband, or a mother with a drunken son, are as near the realization of hell as can be reached, in this world at least. The shame, the indignation, the sorrow, the sense of disgrace for herself and children, the poverty—and not infrequently the beggary—the fear and the fact of violence, the lingering, life-long struggle and despair of countless women with drunken husbands, are enough to make all women care wine, and engage unitedly to oppose it everywhere as the worst enemy of their sex.—Agricultural World.

Annual Meeting Business.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

As many brethren get to place of meeting on Saturday, as at Lanark, last year, we will inform them that the business of the meeting begins on Tuesday, and we will look for them to come on Monday. But if more than the standog committee come on Saturday, there will be no binding arrangement, except in the tent, where 15 cents per meal will be charged until Monday morning.

According to the decision of last Annual Meeting, hearing tickets good during the sessions of the meeting, will be furnished to males for $1.00 and females for 50 cents.

All letters, papers and telegraph despatches should be directed to "A. M. B. O., care of D. N. Workman, Ashland, Ohio, as he will have charge of mail, telegraph and baggage departments.

POOR FUND.

Lyman Eby, $5 00; Meli Wenger, 25 cents; S. Groff, 1 00; Jno Meyers, 1 00; Mary Leedy, 50 cents; Emma V. Bashor 20 cents; Frank J. Evans, 25 cents; Aaron H. Hufford, 1 00; a brother, 1 50; D. Yost, 10 cents; Saml. E. Herr, 1 00; Simon Youd 20 cents; M. Haines, 40 cents; Jeannia Grubble, 25 cents; Geo. Hollopoff, 1 00; S. Wine, 2 00; Elias Cover, 25 cents; W O Heisel, 50 cents.

The Legislature of Nebraska has passed a prohibitory liquor law. It is not quite so rigid in its provision as the Kansas law, but it is said it will reduce the saloons in Omaha from 150 to 20 with a proportionate ratio for the balance of the State.

The Legislature of Arkansas has passed a law, prohibiting the sale or giving away of any intoxicating liquors within three miles of any church or school house, if a majority of the inhabitants, male and female of age, within that district, shall petition the court so to order.

An unmistakable eruption of Mount Baker, in Washington Territory, is said to be in progress, causing considerable consternation among the scattered settlers of that region. As seen from Upper Sonas, some fifty miles distant, the display of fire and smoke is pronounced to be magnificent in appearance.

The hair is the least destructible part of the body. The hair of the ancient Thebans is, after a lapse of four thousand years, found to have survived the tombs. The Pyramids and the Sphinx are crumbling, but some of the wigs of human hair, exposed to the mold and moisture of their entombed apartments, are less decayed than the monuments themselves.

The Escorial, the palace of the kings of Spain, is one of the largest and most magnificent structures in the world. It was begun in the year 1529 by Philip II., and its first cost was 600,000 ducats. It forms a vast square of polished stone, paved with marble. According to Francisco de los Sates, it would require four days to go through all the rooms and apartments; the distance traveled would be 23 Spanish leagues, or about 129 English miles. There are 14,000 doors and 11,000 windows belonging to the edifice.

At Alexandria, Egypt, a Greek boy, having disappeared at I been found dead in the harbor, some fanatical Greeks have accused a Jewish family of killing the boy in order to obtain Christian blood for their Passover rites. Great excitement prevailing, the police have been largely reinforced and other precautions have been taken against an outbreak. This is another means of the persecutions of the Jews to secure their destruction. This spirit has lately been abroad in all Europe and Asia, but it was hoped it was dying out.

A monster fish—a most remarkable specimen of the fluy tribe,—was recently caught near the Isles of Shoolis, by the crew of a fishing schooner from Swansea. It was 15 feet in length, and weighed 2,300 pounds. Its mouth was said to be very large, containg near seven rows of sharp teeth, and, in general appearance was somewhat like a shark. In its stomach was found a codfish weighing 60 pounds; also two snail shells and two eels. The fish was on exhibition several days at Boston and Lynn, Mass., and was examined by several scientific gentlemen, none of whom were able to classify it.

On the 24th of May a horrible accident occurred near London, Ont. A steamer with 600 passengers on board collided like a egg shell, became instantly a total wreck, plunging all on board into the water, more than half of them being under the debris. Over 150 persons were drowned--many of them children. Thousands of friends and relatives gathered on the bank to identify bodies as they were brought forth. The wail and anguish that arose at the sight of the victims was heart-rending.

The new depot of the Pittsburg, Ft. Wayne and Chicago Railroad in Chicago is the longest depot in the world; and the inside is unequalled for beauty and convenience. Parties west of Chicago going to Annual Meeting, should go over this road; and before entering the cars, or on their return, take a stroll through this mammoth building and behold the wonderful depot of the world. There is no dirty, filthy "nets" in this building to sicken wet people and hasten the dying to their graves, but cleanliness, neatness, comfort and convenience await every passenger. We cheerfully recommend this line to our patrons. Fare as low as by any other line.

We (self and wife) expect to leave Mount, Morris, Saturday morning, June 4th, en route for the A. M. at Ashland, Ohio, and will be absent from the office about one week. There will be quite a company of us; viz.: Enoch Ely, Edmund Forney, and D. E. Price, our delegates to A. M.; D. L. Miller and wife, of Mt. Morris College; S. J. Harrison and wife, of Lanark; A. W. Vaniman, of the Western Book Exchange, and many others "too numerous to mention," all of whom have concluded to pass over the Baltimore & Ohio road from Chicago, this road having offered special rates to those wishing to attend the A. M. Tickets can be purchased of D. L. Miller, Mt. Morris; S. J. Harrison, Lanark, or at the Baltimore & Ohio depot in Chicago. We will leave Chicago at 5:15 Saturday evening, and reach Ashland Sunday morning.

The Chicago and Iowa Railroad will sell tickets to the German Baptist Conference at Ashland, Ohio, as cheap as any other line. M. L. Eltinger, Gen. Ticket Agent.

A FUNERAL HYMN.

(From the German)

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

Fare you well, ye loving kindred,
Fare you well in friendship dear,
Fare you well in your bereavement,
Who in love weep for me here;
I, however, from you go,
And you lay my body low;
But soon will rise again,
And I'll see you ever, then.

Oh! then, how I will embrace you
And will love you with desire:
I must leave you now a season,
And from you in grief retire.
Comes a day to meet again,
When we shall be happy, then
This will be our choice,
With each other to rejoice.

Oh! how fast, to end, doth hasten
The allotted time to live;
God of heaven lend assistance
That in thee we may believe,
And ourselves much less detain
In the world with things so vain:
Such avoidance we must make Ere we our departure take.

Quite against my expectation,
The destroying angel's dart
Struck my vital habitation,
Smote my body, pierced my heart,
Took me hastily away;
Therefore, we should watch and pray:
God deliver us from woe
That to heaven we can go.

My few tender, youthful Summers
And the pleasures I could see,
Fled away, like fleeting shadows,
That it seems it cannot be.
When we live without complaint
Death can quickly make us faint,
Soon he severs flesh and soul,
Death can all our limbs control.

Still I hope to find salvation
In the merits of my Lord,
Who to conquer can assist us,—
He can save from hell's reward,
And deliver me from woe,
That to heaven I can go,
With the angels there to sing
Hallelujah to their King.

Be consoled ye friends and brothers,
Be consoled ye sisters, too,
Be consoled ye loving members;
God's pure word is ever true,
Which declares in heaven's rest
All the righteous will be blest;
Like the sun they there will shine;
Be each glory yours and mine.

Did your parents love me dearly
And with God watch over me?
Did I often wound your feeling?
O, forgive my falsity!
What I did commit to you

I regret and sadly rue.
God be pleased to grant you grace,
That you think of me no less.

Now farewell, for I must leave you,
Lay my body in the grave;
Pains in death I had to suffer;
Jesus me, I trust, will save
By his love and saving grace,
That I may behold his face;
Me I trust he will forgive,
Me give endless life to live.

Since to end was brought my sorrow,
My respected parents' dear,
Thank the Lord for loving mercy,
Weep no more when I'm not here.
Father, mother, fare you well,
Think I went with God to dwell:
Does he bring you into grief,
He will also give relief.

Fare you well, my dearest children,
Fare you well, my loving wife;
Loved we not each other dearly,
One in spirit soul and strife?
We in love together dwelt;
God in love with us has dealt,
Who in Jesus' love hath faith,
Is not severed quite in death.

NINEVEH.

BY P. A. BOSS.

(Concluded.)

AFTER Jonah had delivered his message he returned to "the east side of the city" to await the fulfillment of God's warning, his perdition, or to "see what would become of the city." They having humbly repented of their sin God said that he would not do unto them the evil that he had threatened them with "and he did it not; but it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry," and "when the forty days had expired, and he saw no evidence of Divine wrath, he expostulated with God" "and he prayed unto the Lord, and said, 'I prayed thee, O Lord, was not this my saying when I was yet in my country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarsus; for I know that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, of great kindness, and repentest of the evil. Therefore now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live.'" The grandest answer we have ever read, and doubtless tradition will never furnish an equal, was spoken by God to that irritable prophet while raging with anger, when he, in all the calm majesty of his mighty power said, "Doest thou well to be angry?"

Jonah seems to have forgotten that in every threat God has made there is a provision—either direct or otherwise—for "Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." "He that believeth shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Jonah seems to have had more respect for his word than the death of Ninevites; for he did not care if it cost the death of 120,000 souls or not, just so his prophecy was fulfilled. "He was very angry" and he said, "Take, I beseech thee my life, from me, for it is better for me to die than to live," since as my prophecy has not been authenticated by the distinction of the Ninevites, for you commanded and forced me to go, even after I had fled to Tarsus, and to proclaim, upon your authority, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be destroyed"; but now you and Nineveh have repented, and Nineveh is still standing as of old, and now I would rather die than to be called "a deceiver or one that denounced a falsity." "Do not let me survive this disgrace. Thou hast spared this city. I thought thou wouldst do so, because thou art merciful and gracious; and it was on this account that I refused to go at first: as I knew that thou mightest change thy purpose, though thou hadst commanded me to make an absolute denunciation of judgment." God has left this example on record to show that an inconsiderate man is not fit to be employed in his work; and he chose this one example that it might serve as an endless warning to his church to employ no man in the work of the ministry that is not Scripturally acquainted with God's justice and mercy." So Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and there sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city. And the Lord God prepared a gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief. So Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd. But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered. And it came to pass when the sun did arise, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted and wished in himself to die, and he said, "It is better for me to die than to live." And God said to Jonah, "Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd?" And he said, "I do well to be angry, even unto death." Then said the Lord, "Thou hast had pity on the gourd, for which thou hast not labored, neither madest it grow, which came up in a night, and perished in a night. And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than six score thousand persons that cannot discern between their right hand and their left hand, and also much cattle?" (The great number of cattle to which reference is here made were for the support of the inhabitants, and probably, at this time, the Ninevites gathered in their cattle from the champagne pasture, expecting that some foe coming to besiege them might seize upon their forage, while they within might suffer the lack of all things.)

No doubt that ancient Nineveh was like ancient Babylon, of which Quintus Curtius says, "The buildings were not close to the walls, there being the space of an acre left between them; and in several parts there were within the walls portions of cultivated land, that, if besieged, they might have provision to sustain the inhabitants." Dr. Clark. "The last epostulation of God, it is to be hoped, produced its proper effect on the mind of this irritable prophet; and that he was fully convinced that in this, as in all other cases, God had done all things well." "And should not I have pity upon Nineveh? How much is the city better than the shrub? But, besides this there are in it one hundred and twenty thousand persons! And shall I destroy them rather than thy shade should be withered, or thy word apparently fail! And, besides, these persons are young, and have not offended; for they know not the difference between their right hand and the left. And should not I feel more pity for those innocents, than thou dost for the fine flowering plant which is withered in a night, being itself exceedingly short-lived? And to all this, they have now turned from all those sins, which induced me to denounce judgments against them. And should I destroy them who are now fasting and afflicting their souls; and, covered with sackcloth, are lying in the dust before me, bewailing their offences, and supplicating for mercy! Learn then from this, that it is the incorrigibly wicked on whom my judgments must fall, and against whom they are threatened. And know, that to that man will I look who is of a broken and contrite spirit, and who trembles at my word. Even the dumb beasts are objects of my compassion. I will spare them for the sake of their penitent owners; and remember with the rest that the Lord careth for oxen".

From this short prophecy many useful lessons may be derived. The Ninevites were on the verge of destruction: but on their repentance were respited. They did not however continue under the influence of good resolutions. They relapsed; and about one hundred and fifty years afterwards, the prophet Nahum was sent to predict the miraculous discomfiture of the Assyrian army under Sennacherib, an event which took place about 710 B. C., and also the total destruction of Nineveh by Cyaxares and his allies, which happened about 606 B. C. Several of the ancients, by allegorizing this Book, have made Jonah declare the Divinity, humanity, death and resurrection of Christ. These points may be found any where in which fancy may seek them; but he who seeks for them, will never find them here. Jonah was a type of the resurrection of Christ; nothing farther seems revealed in this prophet relative to the mysteries of Christianity."

We cannot for one moment doubt the truthness of this prophecy, for "God can do what he pleases." As his power is unlimited it can meet with no impossibilities. If we meet with insoluble mysteries in this Book, let us remember that God's ways are not our ways, and that all, from beginning to end, is an impenetrable miracle. That God created Jonah for the express purpose of serving as an endless example to all; that he gave the commission; he raised the storm; he caused the lot to fall upon Jonah; he silently directed the mariners to throw him overboard; he prepared a great fish to swallow the prophet; he heard his prayer and made the fish cast him forth upon the dry land; he gave him a fresh commission, and compelled him to predict, "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown;" he saw the Ninevites turn from their evil ways and repented of the evil he said he would do unto them "and he did it not; he miraculously produced the sheltering gourd which came to perfection in a night and withered in a night. It was God who answered all the complaints of the ireful prophet, and convinced him that his ways are beyond the comprehension of finite creatures and the reproach or censure of mortal beings. All these things were wrought for a design and by him who "moves in a mysterious way his wonders to perform."

Now, kind, patient reader, as we leave this short sketch and submit it to you for a perusal, if we could feel that when the hand of time shall have covered this paper with old age and stained it with its yellow touch, and that as the finger of remembrance shall leaf the pages of memory, that there would be found impressed thereon some word of this account that had produced a change in your life for the better, then for this condensed summary of all the most prominent and instructive notes of history, quoted from well-written pages, the productions of the finest historians who had, at heart, the interests of all who may read the narrative of events which occurred during the existence of the great city of Nineveh, great for its population, renowned for its affluence, and noted for its cruelty, we shall deem ourselves amply compensated.

Mt. Sidney, Va.

For the Brethren at Work.

A REVIEW.

BY STEPHEN JOHNSON.

CLosed a series of meetings in Green Co., Pa., last January, which a prominent Baptist minister has since reviewed, at least in part, and I feel it my duty to notice and make some criticism; also notice some assertions made. First, with reference to the supper which Christ ate with his apostles on the night of his betrayal. He states that I said no inspired man ever called it supper after it was eaten. My positive declaration was passover instead of supper after eaten and connected with gospel ordinances; and I will here say more in the absence of testimony. I am not willing to admit that it was called Passover before it was eaten; from the fact the term Passover will not apply to a meal or supper which is eaten perhaps twenty-four hours before the legal time to eat the Passover.

Second; he states that I said the Jews did not observe the Passover that year. My statement was that Christ did not, and probably the Jews did not under such exciting circumstances. He asserts that we add in baptism. Says there is one baptism, while we have three. I suppose he has reference to Paul: (Eph. 4: 6) "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Now let us understand Paul. He is not speaking with reference to what it takes to constitute one baptism, but speaks of it as an ordinance, just as we speak of a house, although built of several kinds of material, yet we speak of it as a house with no reference to what it is built of. Paul also says, one faith. Now there is one God, one Son, and one Holy Spirit. It requires a belief in each of these three to constitute one faith. Now one baptism, by three actions, is no more mysterious than one faith, which consists of a belief in three persons or powers; no more or less plurality in one case than in the other. Also asserts that Feet washing is a Jewish custom. Suffice it to say in this connection, the ancient custom of Feet-washing had no command of God or penalty attached to it. See Gen. 18: 4; 19: 2; 24: 32. It was only a part of the hospitality of that age. Later God made a law for the priests to wash their hands and their feet that they die not. Ex. 30: 21. This will not compare with John 13th, for there it had both command and example of Christ; also a penalty. (See verse 8).

Further, he makes light of the salutation of the kiss; says "where did they get it; the word kiss is not in the Bible." The elder certainly could not have searched with much diligence or he would have discovered it commanded five times. Rom. 16: 16; 1 Cor. 16: 20; 2 Cor. 13: 12; 1 Thess. 5: 26; 1 Pet. 5: 14. The word kiss occurs twenty-one times in the Bible.

The last position the elder takes is that we observe the Jewish Passover. Our position is defined above that Christ did not. The latter seems to be a question of importance among our Baptist friends. Permit me to notice it a little more at large. Let us have a proper understanding in the beginning of our investigations. All will reasonably admit the fact that the Passover must be prepared before it is eaten. The Jewish day commenced at sunset. Luke says, chap. 22: 7, "Then came the day of unleavened bread when the passover must be killed," which is in the evening of the 14th day of the month. See Ex. 12: 6. Here comes Jesus in the beginning of the preparation day. Mark says, "and in the evening he cometh with the twelve. Chap. 14: 17. When the hour was come he sat down and the twelve apostles with him." Luke 22: 14. Now allowing the night to precede the day as above, Christ and the apostles ate their supper in the fore part of the day, while the Jewish lamb was not to be slain until near the close; hence they could not have had the lamb at their meal. Consequently it could not have been the Passover. This is an argument sufficient of itself to prove that Christ did not eat the Jewish Passover with his apostles on the night of his betrayal. Christ and the apostles speaking with reference to the preparation of the Passover do not necessarily make of it the first meal, we find them engaged in eating the Passover. Christ says: "With desire I have desired to eat this Passover with you before I suffer." Luke 22: 15. Notice the preparation day has set in, consequently the above language refers to the Passover instead of the supper, which they are now eating. Further he says, "I will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God;" (verse 16) as much as to say, "I have eaten it with you, but will not any more," knowing he would suffer before the close of the day.

Is it not clear that the above language applies to the Passover rather than the meal which they were eating, from the fact he speaks with reference to Passover and not supper?

John says: "Now before the feast of the Passover he riseth from supper and washeth his disciples' feet." John 13: 1-4. The Passover is nowhere called supper, and this meal which John calls supper is never called passover, as remarked above. Two points we notice here; first, John says, "it is before the feast of the passover, consequently cannot be the Passover. Second, if it was the Passover why did he not call it by its right name—Passover, instead of supper? He undoubtedly did not understand it to be the Passover. Would any one doubt his testimony, knowing him to be an eye witness?

We pass to verse 26. Here the traitor is pointed out. Jesus says, "that thou doest, do quickly." (Verse 27.) It appears the apostles did not understand what he meant; but some thought because Judas had the bag that Jesus had said unto him, "Buy these things we have need of against the feast. (Verse 29). Two points here to which we call attention; first, the Passover is yet in the future. Second, from the foregoing it is evident that the preparation is not yet completed, but must necessarily be before eaten. If they are eating the Passover why speak of something more or a further preparation? We call on the elder to reconcile the above.

As they were eating Jesus took bread and blessed it; (Matt. 26: 27) also the cup, (Verse 27) after which they sang a hymn and went out. The point we notice here is, the going out would be a violation of the law, (See Ex. 12: 22) consequently the meal which they are eating could not have been any part of the law, from the fact Christ was never known to transgress.

Here we leave the large upper room and follow him to the Mount of Olives. Here we find him engaged in prayer. In agony he prays earnestly, and his sweat was as great drops of blood falling down to the ground." Luke 22: 44. We will let the reader picture the scene of agony. Soon the officers of the Jews came and took Jesus and led him away to Caiaphas the high priest. Mark 14: 53. Here he had his mock trial; here it was that Peter denied his Lord thrice. From here they took him to Pilate. Luke 23: 1. Now it is early in the morning; and the Jews would not go into the judgment hall lest they be defiled, but that they might eat the Passover. John 18: 28. Hence the point again that the Passover is yet in the future. Now Pilate sent him to Herod, and when Herod had asked him many questions he sent him again to Pilate. Now of necessity Pilate must release one unto them at the feast, and they cried, "Away with this man, and release unto us Barrabas." Luke 23: 17, 18. Notice he has not released the prisoner yet, but must at the feast. Again the point is made that the Passover is in the future. Pilate makes an effort to release him, but in vain; hence the language of the prophet: "He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrow, and acquainted with grief." Isa. 53: 3. He was delivered up to be crucified. See the soldiers leading him away to the place of execution. John 19: 16. And it was the third hour or nine o'clock, and they crucified him. Mark 16: 25. Also two thieves with him. Here the cruel mocking was carried on until the sixth hour or twelve o'clock. Then there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour or three o'clock. Mark 15: 33. Reader, what a scene is here, which nature is called to witness. The sun refused to give her light, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from top to bottom, and the earth did quake and the rocks rent. Matt. 27: 51. We have arrived at the point where the type and the anti-type meet in point of time. But we stop not here. John says, (chap. 19: 31) "The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain on the cross on the Sabbath day," etc. Again, "There laid they Jesus therefore because of the Jews' preparation day; for the sepulchre was nigh at hand." John 19: 42. Also Mark 15: 42: "Now when the even was come because it was the preparation."

Now we have arrived at the close of the preparation day—the twelfth hour or six o'clock in the evening, the close of the Jewish day. Now is the legal time for the Passover to be eaten at the beginning of the 15th day. Now we have followed the Savior to the tomb and the Passover not eaten yet. Can we ever be more certainly right than we are in this, that Christ did not eat the Jewish Passover with his apostles on the night of his betrayal?

For the Brethren at Work

EDUCATION

BY O R BALSBAUGH.

NOT so formal as some suppose. It is a simple necessity. No one can prevent it. The mind was made for it, and God has inlaid all things with his omniscience, so that the finite is obliged to be always in contact with the Infinite. The farmer has his style of education, the miller another, a different craftsman still another and so on, from the college president to the maid who grinds the coffee. Some know things mainly in their objectivity, and their necessary mental impressions. Others reach heights and depths in the commonest objects, and see the most entrancing revelations of Deity in the fire that cooks their food, and no less in the food itself. The highest idea of education is not the secular. Neither the common school nor the college fulfills its mission til God is found in the multiplication table, the geography and grammar. It detracts from no man's religion to know himself, and the elements of air, water, and food that sustain him. All things are parabolic, and he has the best education who has the clearest, highest moral idea of things. Many think they are educated, while they are only abnormal, disproportioned, all intellect, and no heart. This one-sided training makes fops, mishappen, bloated egotists. If our high schools are to be a real blessing to the church and the world, they must have a practical Christian basis, making the moral use of all facts and principles the leading object. Apart from this, "Knowledge puffeth up." No church can keep her colleges from becoming centres of corruption, unless all her branches of study are used as Christ used his parables—for moral instruction and elevation. Not for business, not for display, not for dandyism and self worship, but for the Divine glory in character and influence, are we educated. In all more intellectual expansion there is danger, no matter whether it is gained in the halls of Yale, or the old country log school house. God knew the peril of his work when he made man. His tremendous possibilities of evil, deterred him not from the creation of a being which fell almost as soon as God had put the last touch of perfection upon him. What peril in the objective institutions of grace! What perversions of the old ritual: what misapprehension and abuse of the new! God knew it all, but still went on to establish what would be turned into a snare by millions. What numbers rest on the sacramental, the external, and traditional, in our own Brotherhood! That which is designed as a shadow is taken for substance. The type is exalted to the place of the spiritual reality it represents. So with education. Our colleges will prove mighty powers for good or evil. Neutral they cannot be. "In Christ are hid all the treasures of wisdom and of knowledge." And yet He testifies of Himself, "I am meek and lowly in heart." But for this, God himself would be puffed up. God incarnate is what makes knowledge safe. Educated mind[?] means educated iniquity and graduated damnation, apart from the great fact of God manifest in the flesh. The Psalmist had a higher use for as tronomony than calculating eclipses, or piloting vessels across the deep. Ps. 8. He discovered a lesson in "all sheep and oxen, yea and the beasts of the field, the fowl of the air, and the fish of the sea," which our mislearned professors never think it worth while to put into their curriculum. He that can see God in the lily of the field, and in the seed from the germination to harvest, and from harvest to mastication, and from that on through all the chemicovital process of digestion and assimilation will have a higher and more Christ-congruing conception of the Incarnation, than one who knows no letter religion than outward compliances with types, and conscientious subscription to ecclesiastical enactments. The baptismal laver is vast enough in its significance to occupy our eternity. And yet to bow many it is but little more than enough water to immerse the body in. So with raiment, and with food and drink. Who has ever fathomed the religious thought of the conjugal relation, and the solemn institute of generation? God's college is every where, and the far-reaching problems of life and the universe meet us on the dung hill, in the kitchen, in the commonest drudgery, no less than in the professor's chair.

CULTURE.

WHEN it assumes its proper place, illumined by faith, and animated by devout aspirations, acquires a dignity and depth, which of itself it cannot attain. From faith it receives its highest and most worthy objects. It is chastened and purified from self-reference and conceit. It is prized no longer, merely for its own sake, or because it exalts the possessor of it, but because it enables him to be of use to others who have been less fortunate. In a word, it ceases to be self-isolated, and seeks to communicate itself as widely as it may. So culture is transmitted from an intellectual attainment into a spiritual grace.

Do we stand on Jordan's stormy banks? Do we look beyond to the beautiful Canaan and long to cross over and possess that goodly land? Have we been faithful in the wilderness of sin, and not departed from the true God? Happy then, if we have been true, will we be. Beyond, there will be for us sweet rest.

NON-CONFORMITY AND UNIFORMITY IN CHRISTIAN DRESS OR APPAREL.

BY JOHN WAMLER.

MUCH has been said and written on this subject, and a good deal of difference has obtained in the Brotherhood in regard to this simple matter of dress; and it seems a little strange that so many members either cannot, or will not see the beauty and wisdom of plainness and oneness in this matter. I believe all, or nearly all the brethren and sisters will agree that it is not right for us to follow all the foolish and vain fashions that are in the world; but then a good many conclude that we need not be so very particular, and that some little of the world's fashions will do no harm. But all admit that there is danger in going too far. Then if all admit that there is danger in going too far, then it is surely a part of wisdom to learn just how far we may go, and just where the danger begins.

All admit that Mary was safe at the feet of Jesus; but all will not admit that she would have been so safe to have taken a higher position. It has always seemed to me that there was safe ground in this matter of apparel, and I will try to show what is safe ground. I believe that unity is safe, and I suppose all my brethren and sisters will agree that unity is safe. It is very generally admitted that oneness or sameness is safe. But what is oneness or unity or sameness? When applied to Christian dress or apparel, can two distinct forms be called oneness, if both are plain? We claim that this is not oneness or uniformity. We have all seen what oneness or sameness—what a strict uniformity of dress existed among the soldiers during the late war: all dressed just alike, even to that of sameness in color. I presume all will admit that this was uniformity, that this was oneness. And will not all admit that the army was stronger in this way than it could have been in any other way? In this way there was no danger of passing a fellow-soldier, and supposing him to be an enemy. Why then cannot we have so perfect a oneness or uniformity? Would it not be entirely safe?

Suppose some of our ministering brethren should preach the Gospel where the Brethren are not known, and under their preaching sinners should become converted, and ask as they did at Pentecost, "what shall we do," and the brethren give them the answer that Peter gave, and then they come forward and are baptized. To illustrate we will suppose twelve young women come and are baptized, all having been brought up under the vain fashions of the world, all dressed in the latest and the most vain fashions; now suppose after they are baptized, the ministering Brethren call their attention to the Apostle's command, "Be not conformed to the world," show them that the Apostle teaches modesty in dress, not costly array, and in short, suppose all the Scriptures that have any bearing on this matter are presented to their minds, but no form of dress is shown them, and in this way the ministers leave them, warning them not to be conformed to the world. Now I ask, under just such circumstances what will these twelve young sisters do? will they not all understand that their present vain manner of dressing is not what the Apostle would teach when he teaches modest apparel? And I ask right here, if there is a brother or sister in our Fraternity that will deny that in just such a case these twelve young sisters will be very sure to consult each other as to what change ought to be made, and how they ought to dress so as to be not conformed to the world? Would not every brother and sister agree that it would be wisdom in these young sisters to consult each other? And now we will suppose that in their consultation they come to the conclusion, as we are all sisters in one family, we will get goods exactly alike in every particular and make them all of one pattern, and they then put their decision into practice; then when they meet again for worship there is no possible chance for envy in the matter of dress, no possible chance for any one to find fault with the dress of the other. There will perhaps be but little said about dress. No one need then ask how sister A, or sister B, was dressed.

We will now look at the other side. Suppose these twelve babes in Christ should each act independent of the other, each one conclude, that I know how I ought to dress, and I will consult no one and take no one's advice, each make an independent attempt at plainness, at fulfilling the teachings of the Apostle when he commanded unity in dress; I ask, is it not a fact that when they meet again with their new changed forms of dress that they will have just twelve forms, no two dressed alike? In this variety of forms is there not danger that some will not be as plain as others think they ought to be? Is there not danger that some will have purchased goods a little more costly than others, and that there may be a good deal of controversy about the matter? And as soon as the first love gets a little cold they may be tempted to envy each other on account of dress.

STAND FAST.

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

WE can have no better evidence of the power and truth of religion than to see God's people join in their position striving and contending for the truth. If we zealously study the Scriptures we can find enough there to establish us in our faith, and when the foundation is firmly laid on the rock of ages we are prepared and must contend with the adversary. Nothing is more worthy of our ambition than to be able to stand firm when the strong-holds of truth are assailed, and to be trusting and firm in the hour of peril, confiding and hopeful in trials and temptation; to be joyful and unyielding. The day has indeed come that every true follower of Jesus must watch and pray lest he be led into temptation. Perilous times have come and our only hope is to stand fast to the Word, make it the man of our counsel; follow in the footsteps of Jesus, and be guided by his spirit.

If we listen to this or that one's opinion we will soon be lost in the labyrinth of different views, and the Babel of confusion. Therefore let us be more zealous in our search of the Word, and by God's help we will be able to stand fast, and pass through the storm of confusion and conflicting theories that threaten us.

God has promised to be with his own in every trial, and many of the saints have suffered persecution in the most horrid forms, some even have been martyred for steadfastness of faith in Jesus.

Let us now show by a steady zeal for Christ and his Holy Word that we are possessed of his Holy Spirit.

THE CITY OF BETHLEHEM.

IT was about a mile in length, and is built on the top and upper slope of some hills—a favorite station in Palestine, where even now the hills and mounds are crowned by the ruins of towns and villages.

The hills about Bethlehem were made of a succession of terraces, some of which still remain and give a good idea of what the whole must have been long ago. And the terraces were entirely covered with fig trees and vines and pomegranates and olives, growing in the richest profusion, and looked like huge gigantic steps, reaching up from the lowest valleys into the highest ridges.

The vines of course, hung over the sides of this giant's staircase, with their beautiful leaves and large bunches of purple fruit resting on the limestone, of which the hills are made, in charming contrast to its dazzling whiteness.

Bethlehem is one of the oldest towns in Judea. It existed in Jacob's time, but its name then was Ephrath, or Ephrathah, and it was not until long after the days of Joshua that it was called Bethlehem.

THE HERMIT'S PRAYER.

A YOUNG man who had great cause of complaint against another, told an old hermit that he was resolved to be revenged. The good old man did all he could to dissuade him, but in vain.

The young man persisted in seeking vengeance; and then the old hermit said to him, "At least, my young friend, let us pray together before you execute your design."

The young man assented, and the hermit began to pray in this way: "It is no longer necessary, O Heavenly Father, that thou shouldst defend this young man, and declare thyself his protector, since he has taken upon himself the right of seeking his own revenge."

The young man fell on his knees before the old hermit and prayed for pardon for his thought, and declared he would no longer seek revenge of those who had injured him.—Selected.

THE quaint old emblem writer, Querles, says: "Has any wronged thee? be bravely revenged. Slight it and the work is begun; forgive it and it is finished. He is below himself that is not above an injury."

If in dark business we perceive God to guide us by the lantern of his providence, it is good to follow the light close, lest we lose it by lagging behind.

WHAT IS HOME.

What is home without a mother?
What is home without her face?
Beaming smiling with devotion,
Who is it can fill her place!

What is home without a father?
One so noble, kind and true,
He who always is so willing,
To do that which is to do.

What is home without the children!
Little beams of naughtiness,
Home is not complete without them,
Yes, we want them to be here.

HAPPY HOME.

A HAPPY home is above all treasures on earth, the most delightful, and the most to be enjoyed. It is truly a paradise on earth. Hence every home should be made happy, that all the inmates may enjoy the benefit derived therefrom. What a reformation there would be in society should a reform take place in many homes of our land. It is a duty, bound upon all who have homes, to make them happy. This can be done without difficulty. We certainly have the precept given to us in divine revelation, and by a strict attention, and a complete obedience to the precepts given by God, we may be able to adorn our homes with heavenly beauties, so much, that all who enter, will enjoy it, and be made to feel the necessity of a happy home. But it should be remembered that it takes more than one to make a happy home. Husband and wife should when starting on life's journey strive together in making their homes both pleasant and happy. It is too often the case that this great work is assigned to the wife alone and if she does not accomplish the end desired, she is racked among the unfaithful, when at the same time she had done all in her weakness to make her home desirable. But alas, her labor was all in vain, she could not accomplish the work alone. Her husband had refused to assist her. Husband, it is utterly impossible to have a happy home under such circumstances, if you desire happiness at home, assist your wife in making it so; do not expect wife to do the work alone, that is asking too much of her. As the care of the family devolves on the wife, and the children must owe the chief direction of their minds and formation of their manners to the mother, she sorely needs all the assistance and support which her husband can give her, and if she performs her duty well, she deserves the utmost of his love and affection. Husbands are called to love their wives, even as Christ loved the church. Also wives to obey and venerate their husbands. Hence love and protection on the one hand, affectionate submission and fidelity on the other. The law of God gives women equal rights and claims with man. But superior strength gives the man dominion. Husband keep your wife in subjection without making her a footman or a slave. The man who in the midst of family provocations, maintains a Christian character, being meek, gentle, and long-suffering, to his wife, children, and servants, willing to aid his wife in performing the duties which makes home happy, has a perfect heart, and adorns the doctrine of God his Savior in all things. We expect to give this subject considerable thought, therefore we will say more about it in the future.

MOTHERS.

"TWELVE or fifteen years ago," says ex-Governor Briggs, "I left Washington three or four weeks in the Spring. While at home, I possessed myself of the letters of Mr. Adams's mother, and read them with exceeding interest. I remember an expression in one of the letters addressed to her son, while yet a boy twelve years of age, in Europe. Says she: 'I would rather see you laid in your grave than you should grow up a profane and graceless boy.'"

"After returning to Washington, I went over and said to Mr. Adams, 'I have found who made you!'"

"What do you mean?" said he.

"I replied, 'I have been reading the letters of your mother.'"

"If I had spoken that dear name to some little boy who had been for weeks away from his dear mother, his eyes could not have flashed more brightly or his face glowed more quickly than did the eyes and face of that venerable old man when I pronounced the name of his mother. He stood up in his peculiar manner, and emphatically said, 'Yes, Mr. Briggs, all that is good in me I owe to my mother.'"

"Oh! what a testimony was that from this venerable man to his mother, who had in his remembrance all the stages of his manhood. 'All that is good in me I owe to my mother!' Mothers think of this when your bright-eyed little boy is about. Mothers make the first impressions upon their children, and these are the last to be effaced."

"All that is good in me I owe to my mother."

So good men say, and yet when did these men as legislators ever make woman's education a subject of public interest by providing for it as liberally as they do for the education of men? Does not the feminine mind need culture of the best kind as surely as the masculine? (N)

THINK WHILE YOU READ.

THE "Teacher's Journal," in an article on methods of study, reminds the student that the first essential to successful study is the power of concentration of thought. This power is largely a matter of habit and cultivation. Read five pages of history in a lackadaisical manner. Close the book and write out all you can remember. Then compare your production with the printed matter, and you will be able to judge your proficiency. Read five pages more with fixed attention and a resolution to retain the subject and compare as before. You will find a marked improvement. If your memory is treacherous read but very little, and always write out the subject. When you hear a sermon or address, hear it, and afterward reduce it to writing. Read no novels and do not read aloud to please others unless you care nothing for the article yourself. A practiced reader can read aloud for hours and carry on an independent train of thought all the time. This ruins the faculty of study as well as the memory. Dismiss all other subjects but the one in hand. Let the ear be deaf to all sounds, and the eye blind to all sights. Let the sense of touch sleep, and smell and taste be as though they were not. A lesson learned in this state of mind will stay with you, and will not need to be "crammed" again the night before examination. It will be like lines carved deep into the rock, or chiseled on the Rosetta stone. The other method is the dim tracing of obscure letters in the sand, which the next wave obliterates. (N)

ONE'S MOTHER.

AROUND the idea of one's mother the mind of man clings with fond affection. It is the first dear thought stamped upon our infant hearts, when yet soft and capable of receiving the most profound impressions, and all the after feelings are more or less light in comparison. Our passions and our willfulness may lead us far from the object of our filial love; we may become wild, headstrong, and angry at her counsels or opposition; but when death has stilled her monitory voice, and nothing but calm memory remains to recapitulate her virtues and good deeds, affection, like a flower beaten to the ground by a rude storm, raises up her head, and smiles amid her tears. Round that idea, as we have said, the mind clings with fond affection; and even when the earlier period of our lives forces memory to be silent, fancy takes the place of remembrance, and twines the image of our departed parents with a garland of graces, and beauties, and virtues, which we doubt not that she possessed. (N)

CLOTHING

WE greatly over-dress our children. They ought never to be oppressed with what they wear, and it should always protect the limbs. Generally the body is over-dressed, and the arms and legs too little dressed. It is downright murder to dress little ones with nothing on their arms and legs in cold weather, and it is also injurious to overheat and keep their bodies too warm. In the first case, children are liable to congestions of the internal organs, in the later, to debility and weakness of the skin. If however, they are properly clothed, and their bodies exposed to the air and sunshine, the skin may always be kept vigorous. The bowels must be kept free, not by physic, but by the right food, and, if necessary, an occasional injection. Constipated children will always suffer more from teething than those whose bowels are free.—Herald of Health.

A POOR SICK WOMAN, used to keep on her window sill a strawberry plant in a broken saucer filled with a little earth, because its new leaves and constant growth helped her to feel God's nearness. It makes no difference whether we live or die, we are always in the presence of God.

BRETHERN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill.

TO OUR BRETHERN AT ANNUAL MEETING.

It has been my expectation for a long time to enjoy this Annual Conference with you, but inasmuch as we expect our Northern District of Illinois to be represented in many excellent brethren, and Mt. Morris School in all her Trustees except myself, I feel that you will excuse my absence when you hear my reasons.

Some of my friends know that I have been contemplating a visit to Europe and Asia for a great while and, knowing of no better time and circumstances to put my purpose into execution than during the present season, I have determined, if the Lord will, to leave for a foreign land in a few days. It had been my intention to attend Annual Meeting and sail for Liverpool or London about July 1st, but finding the best lines of steamers already crowded for July, and desiring as most Summer months abroad as possible, I have thought it advisable to go a month earlier, and trust that the many dear friends whose familiar faces I would have loved to look upon in June, will not feel that we are indifferent to the important interests which will engage the deliberations of our general council. I have confidence in the integrity of our Brethren, their purpose to do right, and the supervising wisdom of our Heavenly Father who makes "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are so called according to his purpose." With reference to

MY MORRIS COLLEGE,

I will say that while I do not expect to be with it for six, eight, or more months (not having determined the full extent of my journey), its interests will be in the immediate management of excellent brethren, such as M. S. Newcomer, D. L. Miller and L. R. Peifer, whose warm Christian hearts, excellent financial and executive ability, with the able and earnest corps of teachers provided for next year must, with the blessings of God, render the work a success and will do all for the school that could well be done if I were present. The school will really be under the same management it has been under during; the present year. We bespeak therefore the continued confidence and hearty co-operation of our brethren and friends generally, feeling that all will be done in our power to merit the same. Besides, we hope to extend our facilities, make our work if possible more thorough, and add to the number and strength of our Faculty. Desiring an interest in your prayers, and wishing you the abundant grace of our Heavenly Father, and his directing wisdom in all your deliberations, I am,

Fraternally Yours,
J. W. STEIN.

A FILE TO SHARPEN MATTOCKS.
1 Samuel 13; 20.

CONCERN for business, pleasure, ambition and honor cause men to neglect the Gospel—God's power unto salvation. A careful study of the Gospel and a diligent application of its teachings to himself, by himself, will make a man a follower of Christ, a student of God, and acceptable to the Lord.

Knowing how easy it is for a people to turn aside, seeking their own strength, and inventing means to overcome evils, we come pleading for the Gospel of Jesus, and beseech all the people of God to accept the Gospel as being profitable for reproof, for correction, and for instruction. These, with doctrine, constitute the four corners, or the foundation stones, for good government and evangelic faith. Does a man need doctrine? The Gospel contains sufficient for him. Do any need reproof? The Gospel furnishes all the power for reproof. Must some be corrected? The Gospel contains power enough to correct. If it contains power enough to reprove and correct, need we long and seek for more than enough? More than enough is useless. Are there those who need instruction in righteousness? Then to the Gospel for it; for any righteousness not urged by the Gospel is filthy rags, and filthy rags do not become essents who have been made uh-te.

"Well," says one, "what harm is there in a statement of faith?" Let us see. If a statement of faith embraces more than the Gospel, it embraces too much, and whatever embraces more than the Gospel should be rejected because it embraces too much. If a statement of faith embraces less than the Gospel, it embraces too little, and that which embraces less than the Gospel should be rejected because it embraces too little for the believer. If a statement of faith differs from the Gospel, it is wrong in so far as it differs from the Gospel, and by all lovers of truth should be rejected because it differs from the Gospel. If it be claimed that a statement of faith is nearly like the Gospel, it should be rejected because it is not precisely like the Gospel; and if it be precisely like the Gospel it is to be rejected because the Gospel itself will do. It is dangerous to Christian liberty to make something nearly like the Gospel and pass it for the Gospel, or as an addition to the Gospel.

To demand a statement of faith differing in any respect from the Gospel, is an admission of the insufficiency of the Gospel, and a confession of the weakness of the Gospel is not a condition of salvation in heaven. A people therefore, who demand a statement of faith nearly like the Gospel, or differing from the Gospel, or embracing more than the Gospel, regard the Gospel as embracing too little, and will be held accountable. A statement of faith embracing more than the Gospel, is to be rejected because it makes a man comply with more than God demands. A thing that demands more than God demands, is to be rejected because it demands too much. Such is Romanism. A thing that demands less than God demands, is to be rejected because it demands too little. Such is modern Protestantism.

If a system of applying the Gospel to car hearts, embraces more than the Gospel it embraces too much, and whatever system embraces more than the Gospel, is to be rejected because it embraces too much. If a system of applying Gospel principles embraces less than the Gospel, it embraces too little, and should therefore be rejected because it embraces too little. If any system of applying truth differs from the Gospel, or prevents a man from walking humbly before God, it is to be rejected because it differs from the Gospel and shuts a man out of the kingdom of God.

"O" says one, "we took our statement of faith from the Gospel, hence it is the same as the Gospel." What do you mean by that little word "our"? If the statement of faith is the same as the Gospel, then you will lose nothing by throwing away the statement and accepting the Gospel; for a thing like the Gospel can certainly be no more than the Gospel.

Any attempt to make the means of union greater than the object of our love, must result disastrously. If the means designed to hold us to God, are appointed by the Lord, then we will hold to him; but if in any respect the means differ from God's means, then they are to be rejected because they are not of God. Any rules made for the application of the Gospel, and differing from the Gospel, are wrong, and are to be rejected because they are wrong. If any manner of applying the Gospel, alienates the hearts of the saints from God and creates strife, discord, division and confusion among the meek and lowly in heart, then that manner is to be rejected as not of God, for God worketh by love. If any human rule is made a bar to the promulgation of the Gospel by the lawfully chosen ministers of Christ, the rule is to be rejected because it is more than the Gospel.

A man cannot be more than saved. All the power to save a man, is placed in the Gospel. The Gospel as it is was designed by the Lord and sent to reach man as he is and make him a new creature. Whatever, therefore, is set in between man and the Gospel with a view to make him more than a new creature, is more than God designed, hence is to be rejected because it is too much. Men and women are required to love the Lord their God with all the heart, and with all the soul, and with all the mind. Matt. 22: 37. Whoever is set up to prevent men and women loving God with all their heart, soul, and mind is a bar to perfect communion with God, and is to be rejected because it alienates man's affections for God.

Israel once forgot the Lord's ways so that no smith could be found in all the land to make them swords and spears, but a file was left them to sharpen their mattocks, and coulters, and forks, and axes; but they laid aside the old file and went to the Philistines to sharpen their mattocks, and coulters, and forks, and axes. To give the figure due weight and expression, permit us to urge our "chief men" to use God's file, the Holy Ghost, to sharpen their wisdom, judgment, will, and knowledge so that they with their wisdom, may dig down deep into the Gospel for the pure gold, and with their coulters of knowledge turn down the weeds and throw up the rich soil of good will, and with their forks of judgment do justice and equity to all men, and with their axes of truth cut off all decayed limbs and superfluous growth. This will be for the glory of God and the edification of the one body; but if the "chief men" shall go to other nations to whet their implements so that they may make something nearly like the Gospel, and demand that we take that as our rule of faith and practice, then we shall begin to sail on the sea of distress where billows run over the ship and tear away the masts and rigging, and cause the people to be seized with consternation. We therefore plead that the Gospel, its power, wisdom, and judgment may not be forgotten.

Paul the aged advances and beckoning with his hand wishes to be heard. Hear him: "When on the earth 1800 years ago, I told you that the Gospel is God's power unto salvation, and that it is profitable for doctrine; and not only for doctrine but for reproof; still more, for correction also; and more yet, not only profitable for doctrine, reproof, and correction, but for instruction in righteousness, that ye may all be perfect and thoroughly furnished unto all good works. What more do you need? If you have that which is profitable for doctrine—the thing to believe, and that which is profitable for reproof when members are refractory, and that which is profitable for correction when one errs, and that which is profitable for instruction in righteousness so that you may be perfect and thoroughly equipped for every good work, what more is necessary? If you will cling to the Gospel you will have power enough to do all the good necessary and power enough to correct all abuses."

Then let all noise on the Gospel, for that does not deprive any man from uniting on it. No man can go above it; and he who goes below it is too low. Leaving the Gospel is leaving God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, the church, the early Christians and the saints of all ages. The exact thing to do is to keep before the people the Lord's Gospel, his cause and kingdom, the whole of it, no more or no less. Those who are for God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the cause and kingdom, must stand out and cry aloud lest sudden destruction come upon us. We cannot be indifferent, or stand for nothing, but we must stand up for the Lord and his Gospel—the bond of union—the inflexible guide—the perfect rule of faith and practice. The Lord will condemn no man for urging and advocating his Gospel, his kingdom, cause, and religious system. Then back to the "old fathers," beloved of the Lord, where there are no briars and thorns to tear the righteous garments or obstruct the onward progress of the church of God. Let every saint plant his feet upon the Rock, and the cause of the Lord, and ultimately he will receive a crown of glory that fades not away. O God, righteous Father, may they all be one that the world may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the Living God!

M. M. Z.

We note, with much interest, the following paragraph from the New York Times: "A wonderful change has taken place in Jerusalem of late years, and it is probably now a more comfortable residence than ever before in its history. Mr. Schick, who makes the appointment of Surveyor of Buildings in the Holy City, has lately issued a very instructive report. He tells us that ruined houses have been restored or rebuilt by individuals or companies, and buildings on the Peabody plan have been erected by associations. The streets are now lighted, and kept, for an Eastern city, most exceptionally clean; and the aqueduct from the Pools of Solomon has been restored, and water brought thence to the city. Tanneries and slaughter-houses have been removed outside of the town. The Sanitary Department is under the control of a German physician. Bethlehem and Nazareth are eagerly emulating the progress of the capital. In the latter place windows are becoming quite frequent. It is asserted that there is a fixed resolution on the part of thousands in Prussia to make that country as hot as possible for the Jews, and it is not unlikely that this in a measure increases the already considerable number now returning to Palestine, more especially as the German Jews already are a power in Jerusalem. The improvements are further likely to lead to many Europeans wintering there."

We read the other day of a little boy who was in the habit of saying his prayers before going to bed, accosting his mother as follows: "Mamma, how long will it be before I'm big enough to quit saying my prayers? You never say yours, do you?" The good mother said: "Little boys shouldn't ask so many questions. Go to sleep my child!"—Gospel Preacher.

ON THE WAY — TO — PALESTINE!

BRO J. W. Stein left Mt. Morris last Wednesday morning en route for Europe and Asia, intending to spend sometime in Palestine and other parts of Bible lands. We would have been pleased to have him attend the Annual Meeting and start from there, but he found it to his convenience to cross the ocean as soon as possible, hence after bidding his friends here farewell he turned his face towards the East, and ere this paper reaches most of our subscribers he will be far out on the great deep. He goes with the prayers and well wishes of thousands of brethren, sisters and friends.

Bro. Stein has had this trip in contemplation for some years. His mind has been trained to Bible research and he desires to gain more information regarding the Bible lands—the places where once lived the prophets and apostles of old. To tread the sacred soil, that was once pressed by the holy feet of Jesus himself will make his heart thrill with emotion.

We have arranged with him for regular correspondence while on this journey. All his correspondence, intended for publication, will be sent direct to the BETHLEHEM AT WORK, thus enabling all our readers to get the full benefit of the letters soon after they reach us. These letters will likely be a most interesting feature this year, hence we hope to see a general effort upon the part of every reader to get the paper into the hands of all his neighbors, especially members, for they will want to read what Bro. Stein has to say about Palestine and other places he may visit as he passes around the world.

Only 60 cents for the paper from now till the end of the present year.

PEACE is far from the minds of the European powers, if we may judge by the condition of things in the immense Krupp gun-works in Germany. These factories are in a feverish activity. The numerous buildings have received more additions, the army of employees has been increased and work is carried on day and night. The next country to have an order filled is Roumania, for which 100 field guns, with complete accoutrements, have been in process of manufacture. Greece will come next with 700 field pieces, completely equipped. Next in order is Sweden, with fifty field guns, Holland with 120, and Italy with 400 siege guns.

The man or woman who gives their tongue a vacation occasionally will have time to store up good thoughts in the heart.

BE NOT FEARFUL

EACH year as the time of Annual Meeting approaches nearer and nearer, there is a feeling of fear and dire forebodings that something terrible is about to happen. Some behold, with an eye of alarm, the sad state of the Brotherhood; others predict divisions and disruptive fearful in their character; while a third class with souls filled with divine love and heavenly resignation refuse to believe that any calamity is about to be visited upon the church of Christ. We are not ignorant of the possibility of resting in carnal security; but there is a difference between concern over vexed questions, and indifference concerning our soul's salvation. Because there is some agitation over certain questions, and this locally, is no evidence that all things are going to destruction. True there always have been men who for love of honor and the praise of men, would rend families, churches, communities—yea even nations, but the many letters from various parts of the Brotherhood warrant us in concluding that the union will not be dissolved—that while a faction here and there may in their own wisdom set up for themselves, the great work of the church will go on, and on, "bright shining as before." In all ages of the church, there have been discontented parties who finally "went out" from the body of Christ, but their work was short-lived, and the church was not the loser as she steadily moved forward in her great mission.

Let us therefore not think of divisions and schisms, but of the mission and character of the church, and resolve that each of us will do his part in seeking holiness, in which state there can be no disruption. If we do not think of divisions, we will not talk divisions, and it is pretty evident if we do not talk divisions there can be no divisions. Let us talk about being better, doing better, and loving more. This will cement the bonds of union more and more, and make no one unhappy. M. M. E.

TRUE WORTH.

EARLY in the history of the apostolic church, bold and valiant defenders were called "chief men" (Acts. 15: 22); and it was neither wrong nor dishonorable to be found foremost in a good cause. Paul before Felix, Agrippa and Ananias rehearses his life, and Luke as a historian gives us brief biographical sketch of Paul. We also have in mind one who has golden qualities, and of whom we shall briefly make mention if you will "hear us of thy clemency a few words."

Addison Harper was born in Augusta county, Va., September 15th, 1809, and when a child his parents moved into Rockingham county, same State. In 1822 or at the age of thirteen he went to Philadelphia where he remained three years, and then returned to the old home in Va. He however remained at home but a short time until he again went to Philadelphia, and here six months later he enlisted in the United States Navy, and sailed in the ship Vandalia for South America. He spent three years in that country, visiting the different sea ports on the Brazilian station and then returned to the U. S., during the first administration of Andrew Jackson. Feeling the need of more education he attended school, and after diligent application was prepared to teach school. After taking unto himself a wife, he engaged in farming and mercantile. In 1849 his fellow citizens chose him to represent them in the State Legislature where he performed his duty faithfully during the administration of Governor Henry Wise.

When the war broke out in 1861 he organized a company of cavalry and entered the Confederate service where he remained until near the close of the war when he resigned, went home and enlisted in the army of the Lord. In this army he is still serving his Captain and his people with zeal and humility. Brother Harper drives his arguments home with Holy Ghost power, and makes one feel under his discourses that he has been with Jesus and learned of him. After the war he moved to Missouri where he now lives.

During last Winter he made a tour of the Northern Illinois churches, and endeared himself to us by his faithful and earnest appeals for true principles. While with us he acted as Moderator at several church councils, and we hesitate not to say that with such a man as Moderator at our meetings there would be less unnecessary talk, and little evading of the main questions. Bro. H. can keep a man right to the question, or step him in a manner that is effective—especially such as "talk too much." He is not harsh or overbearing, but he has ability as a parliamentarian, and knows whereof he speaks. We admire his governing qualities, and the sooner we all learn the same lesson, the better the order and the greater the harmony. M. M. E.

EZRA'S BIBLE

DR. E. P. INGERSOLL, now traveling in the East, writes to the New York Observer of a visit to a Jewish synagogue near to the old Coptic church of Cairo, Egypt. He was accompanied by Dr. Lansing, a veteran missionary. Of what they saw he writes: "A historian of the fourteenth century writes [of this synagogue]: 'It was built forty-five years before the destruction of the second Temple, and within is a manuscript written by Ezra the scribe.' Dr. Lansing said: 'For ten years have I known of this manuscript, and twice I have succeeded in seeing it, but they are very jealous of it. A prominent American tried in vain to get a sight of it.' Happily, 'the old folks' were not at home. A young man had the keys. He knew Dr. Lansing, and at once opened the door of the synagogue and promptly closed and locked it after we had entered. Then forth from his little chamber in the wall, fifteen feet from the floor, a part of the roll was brought. We saw it; we handled this rare old vellum, upon whose time-yellowed surface is written, in a bold, beautiful hand, the five books of Moses. Unmistakably it is very ancient. Having a Bible, with both the authorized and Samaritan-Hebrew versions, we sat down and compared them with the ancient roll, and found, after reading several verses in fifth chapter of Deuteronomy, that it coincided, literatim et punctatim, with the Hebrew from which our Old Testament is translated. The tradition is that Ezra the scribe came down into Egypt about the time of the "return of the captivity," in order to correct and complete the genealogy of the Jews who had fled to and found shelter in Egypt (Exra 2: 62); and that before his return to Jerusalem, and at the request of the rabbis, he left this "Roll of the Five Books."

If this roll of the Pentateuch dates from the time of Exra, then, if I mistake not, we have to-day handed a Hebrew manuscript of the Old Testament which is (unless we except the claims of the Samaritans at Nabulus) more than fifteen hundred years older than any now known to be in existence."

PASTORS.

WE call ministers who serve churches pastors. What is a pastor? The English word comes from a Latin root which means to feed. It is defined by most authorities to mean a shepherd. In the Old Testament it translates a word which also means to feed, as the feeding of a flock; and the substantive means a shepherd. The same is true of the only instance in which the word occurs in the New Testament. If pastors, then, really are shepherds, feeders, there is a volume in this name touching their duties, their behavior, and their responsibilities. Peter was three times instructed to feed the sheep and lambs. The pastor who spends his time whipping his flock will soon find the sheep extremely shy of him and even the food he offers. Kind treatment is what a people stand most in need of.

HERE are six facts: In Iceland the Bible is constantly read by all the people. There is not in that land a theatre, or a prison, or a sheriff or a canon, or any military drill. Now look through these six facts again and tell which is the cause of all the rest. Is it not the peace principles produced by a careful study of the Scriptures.

THOMAS Clarkson says that in the first two centuries, when Christianity was the purest, there were no Christian soldiers on record. The war degeneracy of the church began very early in the third century, and went so far in the fourth, that under Constantine the Great, Christians engaged in war, as they generally have ever since. We do not know how accurate this statement may be; we cannot challenge it; but we do know that if the spirit of Christ controls both of two men or two nations, they will never go to war with each other.—Golden Censer.

Will some one explain Genesis 4: 15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark he set on him?
ROBERT T. CROOK.

Please explain Hebrew 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different: "Von der Taufe, von der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter?

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not?

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven"—was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and there stopped, or is it right to pray it yet?

THE RIVER OF LIFE.

"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb"—Rev. 22: 1.

ORIENTAL writers were accustomed to introduce into their compositions, figures,—of objects in natural life, in order to make the greater impression on the mind of those whom they addressed. The Book of Revelations abounds in this style of writing.

When the Revelator would impress our minds with the purity and life-giving properties of the Gospel, he uses the figure of a pure river of water of life, having its source in God. We notice, first, that it is a river of life; not a stagnant pool, producing malaria, disease and death.

Our organization is such that the elements of a two-fold life are enhanced within it. The one is a life unto purity and endless bliss, the other is a life unto sin, corruption and endless misery. Either one or the other of those lives is predominating within us all. From our experience we are led to believe that the life of sin is largely in the ascendancy. Men and women are living merely for their present sensual gratifications, and the low, groveling desires of the flesh. "Like brutes they live, like brutes they die. To enter a life of purity, "WE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

Having been convicted of sin, and exercised repentance towards God, and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and having "put on Christ in baptism," we are a new creature. Those elements of our organism, that lay dormant, or were exercised in a wrong direction, are quickened and restored to their legitimate place in our spiritual organism. We now begin a new life; a PURE life, being born of God.

At regeneration we are at our weakest stage of spiritual life; as "babes we desire the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby." As we advance on, this divine life runs deeper and stronger in our hearts. This is beautifully illustrated in Ezekiel 45, by the water first coming to the ankles, next to the knees, then to the loins, and lastly a river so large and deep that it could not be passed over. Naturally a river at its source is small; but as it flows down the mountain side, through the valleys, and over the plains; brooks and other rivers, flowing in on either side, thus causing the river to run deeper and wider, till at last its volume of water is such as to carry upon its bosom mighty vessels, that carry our products to other climes. Thus, the life of Christ in the heart, is fed by streams of grace that pour in on every side. On one side comes in a stream of humility; on another side a stream of love; of patience, of charity, of devotion, of peace, till our peace "becomes like a river, and our righteousness as the waves of the sea."

Naturally, there is scarcely another element that is susceptible of such life-giving properties as water. We drink it daily in some form or other. How refreshing a cool drink of water is, on a hot Summer day! How it quickens our life! We use it constantly in the preparation of our food. Without it, vegetation could not exist, nor the earth yield her strength. Remove water from us, and we must die.

It is thus spiritually. The child of God thirsts for a drink at the Fountain opened in the house of David. The more he drinks, the stronger he becomes, and the more he wants.

"We drink and drink and drink again,
And yet we still are dry,
But when we come to reign above,
And all surround a throne of love,
We'll drink a full supply."

The life of a river of water is such, as to impart of its life-giving properties to the soil along its banks; for there we find our most fertile lands. This well illustrates the influence of Christianity on either side of the stream of our life. Others, who are still drinking of the polluted waters of Babel, are favorably impressed with the excellency of Christian life. And if the church is in gospel order, she becomes a power for good in our midst; is as "a city set on a hill,"—its influence reaching out wider and wider on every side, reflecting heavenly light all around. "Fair as the moon; clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners." Her power and influence will be such that the powers of darkness cannot withstand.

Again, it is not only a River of Life, but its waters are pure,—clear as crystal.

This presents to our mind the purifying character of the Gospel of Christ. Naturally, when we look into pure water, we see our image reflected. It is thus, in our exhibition of Christianity, i. e., its manifestations before the world reflect the image of Christ. It purifies our thoughts, desires, affections, conversation, etc., till the whole man is purified and made meet for the "Master's use."

Water is used to purify and cleanse almost everything; hence is an excellent figure to represent the purifying character of the Gospel of Christ, as applied to our hearts. The apostle says truly, "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth, to an unfeigned love of the brethren," etc.

Next, we notice water as a power. There is hardly another element in the world, capable of producing power equal to water, either in its natural or condensed form.

Those mighty locomotives that move with lightning speed over our railways, and carry immense burdens, cannot move an inch without water. Those ponderous wheels of the tens of thousands of our factories, that move all the lesser ones, cannot move without water. About all our implements are made by the power of water, as well as the garments we wear, and the bread we eat. The very Bibles we read are printed by the power of water.

This is a fitting representation of the power of the Gospel. Paul says, that the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation.

It contains awakening power.

It contains quickening power.

It contains sanctifying power.

It contains overcoming power.

It enables us to overcome the powers of the grave, and to shout exultant victory in the resurrection from the dead.

Then, friendly sinner, why will you continue to drink of that stagnant pool, filled with the filth and scum of human depravity, causing sickness and death, since the waters of life are offered so freely? Then come and drink, that you may live; and bathe in its waters, that you may become pure and made meet for God's glory in the world to come.

A CORRECTION.

IN my article on the setting up of the kingdom of God, as published in B. at W. No. 17, in fourth paragraph from the beginning, and next to last line of paragraph, several important words are omitted, which partially destroys the sense to be conveyed. The words are, "at a kingdom, but." The clause will read, "Peter in referring to that event, does not even hint at a kingdom, but that it was the fulfillment of the prophecy of Joel," etc.

THE DANGER BEFORE US.

TO-DAY many are anxiously looking to Annual Meeting for something to avert the dangers that threaten our peace as a church. It is a fact too apparent to be denied, that feelings have been wounded so deeply that many are ready for division, or cutting off sooner than have the present state of things continue longer. For peace is a virtue, yet there is a time when it wears out, and there is danger of the collapse being too great and arising up in jealousy, and cry against those who have been the object of our forbearance. Caution is most needed when forbearance ceases, and if there are any coming to Annual Meeting without forbearance, they need greater caution.

We think our troubles have come from the want of our principles and doctrine being clearly defined and faithfully enforced. For the future we need them made clearer, defined plainly, and guarded strongly so there is a well defined union to give us strength and power to have us work a union and a foundation for it, that is worth contending for and defending. This union must embrace our faith and practice as a people, and it must be defined so it is understood and known by all. The Minutes as they are do not do that plainly. They are encumbered and imperfect in their arrangement; many of them are void because they are out of date, belonging to a former age, and have passed away with it. Many of them are too indefinite, and some stand in conflict with others; some are only advice, others are binding, which makes them altogether an imperfect system, or rather a lack of system, and we are not united on them as we should be on a system of rules and government to secure our peace and harmony, and give us strength and influence. Would it not be better to revise or select out and make a code of Minutes as will unite us in one understanding, one judgment, that we can live up to, defend, and protect as our rule of faith and practice?—R. H. M.—in Gospel Preacher.

Correspondence.

From the Rockies to the Alleghenies,—Notes by the Way.

NUMBER II.

It was our intention to leave Carleton, Neb., on Sunday, the 8th inst., but after filling our appointment, north of town, and hurrying to the depot, we missed the train owing to a discrepancy in time pieces. Arrangements were put on foot at once to have a meeting in town at night. To our surprise the capacious Presbyterian church was filled with attentive listeners. It was said that nearly all the people in the town were out, the greater portion of which had never heard the Brethren preach.

About noon next day we were off for St. Joseph. We passed through a good deal of most excellent looking country in Northern Kansas. Corn planting was in progress by the farmers and the crops of growing grain looked promising. Though it was night when we entered the low lands of the Missouri Valley yet by the light of the moon, the terrible destruction of property and general devastation was plainly visible. Many farm residences were yet standing in large lakes of water; some places the water was near the top of the fences; other places the fences were entirely swept away.

Coming to a break in the road-bed, the passengers had to be transferred, or rather transferred themselves from one train to another by wading through the mud, and walking narrow logs across deep pools of water; but the transfer was made without the loss of any passenger so far as we know, but good humor was at rather a low ebb. A short run put us into the depot at St. Jo about midnight. Owing to the state of the road-bed, we could not get on to Kansas City, as we expected to do. Our baggage was not transferred until next day at 3 o'clock, P. M. We were off for Kansas City, passing down on the East side of the river, opposite Atchison. We there crossed over and went down on the West side. The ravages of the great flood were visible all around, large areas of rich bottom lands, that had been sown in wheat, were barren,—the crop entirely destroyed; parts of houses were scattered here and there. At one point three different tracks of railroad were swept away in sections, their iron rails bent almost double around trees. We noticed a number of houses that had been undermined by the soggy torrents, and were toppling over. The Gossett gardens at Fort Leavenworth were destroyed.

At Kansas City the usual hubbub incident to large Union Depots was our experience. About night we were again off over the Mo. Pacific, for Warrensburg, Mo. Although very late at night, we were met at the depot by Bro. Wm. Mohler and wife (sister Luzzi). The latter met with her sister, Miss Gertrude Reese, just out from Denver, Colorado, where she had been the past year. We enjoyed their hospitality until next day, when Bro. John M. Miller took us to his home near Mineral Creek meeting house.—Meeting at night; also the following night. We were sorry we had not longer time to visit at this point, with the dear members. Wife and Susan V. Crumpacker are sisters in the flesh, not having met for over fifteen years. Our time was principally taken up visiting her and the hospitable family. By them we were conveyed to the home where sister Nancy Root and her husband reside, with such pleasant surroundings. At night, meeting in the Brethren's new church house, near Warrensburg.—Met with Bro. A. W. Rees, who is the minister in charge of the little band of faithful members at this point.

Next day, Saturday, aboard the freight, we went to Centreville. Had meeting at night; also two appointments next day. Good congregation out. Here is the home of Eld. A. Hutchison; he is the only minister here now, but will soon have help by a brother who will move here from Ohio. A more credibly body of members we have never met with, than we found here, and all seem to be in peace and harmony. The prospects for good crops here, are promising, more so, than at Mineral Creek, as the chinch bug is very bad there.

Monday evening, the 15th, we had adieu to the dear members at Centreville, and boarded the train for Kansas City. Bro. Hutchison so-compensated us as far as Pleasant Hillia his way to attend appointments. As an evangelist he spends much of time in the field; yet cannot attend only a small proportion of the many calls made for preaching. In preaching the Gospel, defending the doctrine of the church, upholding the distinctive features of the Brethren, as expressed by the principles of Christianity, as in working for union and peace in the church, he is the right man in the right place.

A Sad Accident.

In the Lick Creek congregation, Williams county, Ohio, April 26, 1881, near Bryan, Christian Newcomer, while engaged in pruning, fell from an apple-tree and broke his neck, which caused instant death. He lay perhaps fifteen minutes before he was discovered by the family, and was dead when found. Brother Newcomer was one of the standard bearers in Israel. He lived near the church, and his door was always open to the brethren and sisters. He was well respected and the loss of him will be very much felt by the church, family and community. He was a member of the church for over 40 years, and served as deacon about 21 years. He had ten children living and two dead, and 33 grandchildren in all, and an aged companion to mourn his loss. The deceased was born Dec. 29th, 1812; aged 68 years, 3 months and 27 days. Funeral services by J. J. emiah Grumb assisted by the writer, from Job 7: 1-10, to a very large and attentive congregation.

JACOB KINTNER.

Sherwood, Ohio.

From David L. Williams. — Our special district meeting has passed off quite satisfactorily. It is true, like always, the different parties had to some extent, different views of some few things, yet the deliberations were all pleasant, and we have every reason to believe, that we all parted, entertaining the best of feelings. The meeting was organized by choosing Bro. S. S. Mohler, Moderator; A. Hutchinson, Reading Clerk; J. S. Mohler, Writing Clerk, and D. L. Williams, Assistant Clerk. The greater number of the churches was represented either by delegates or by letter. There are now sixteen organized churches in this district. It is pleasant for Brethren thus to meet under the exercise of the divine spirit; to confer with one another, and thus labor in the interest of the good and glorious cause, and for a harmonious work in the churches, and unless we can harmonize our efforts and keep in the unanimity of sacred principles, we need not expect a success in our efforts. We should always do church work with due regard for the feelings of others. Though we may feel stirred to so earnestness in our deliberations; yet we should always be loving and forbearing. I am now with the Mound church, of Bates county, for the purpose of working with them for some days, in the interests of the church and the Master's cause. Though this is a busy season of the year, the work is progressing finely. — The church is now in a prosperous condition; they have a good country, and members that intend to move West, would do well to see this country, and we would be glad, if some good, experienced elder would locate here, and we think that he could enjoy himself. If any desire to correspond with this church, they should address F. M. Peak, Archie, Cass Co., Mo., or John Kusby, Adrian, Bates Co., Mo. — Adrian, Mo., May 24.

From Emily R. Stuffer. — Our quarterly council-meeting convened at Lammersville, Saturday, Apr. 30. Was changed from the regular appointment, first Saturday in May, for convenience. Decided to hold our Love-feast at the Duncanville church, Saturday, June 4th, commencing at 4 P. M. Also services on Sabbath. To-day, (May 8th) Bro. David D. Sell preached the funeral sermon of little Alexander, youngest child of Peter and Hannah Doll, who died two weeks ago, aged 2 years, 4 months, and 2 days. Bro. Sell spoke from Isaiah 38: 1, latter part, "Set thine house in order, etc." Dear parents do not neglect the one thing needful, but prepare to meet your dear child, who has gone to join the angel band in the shining courts of bliss. — Duncanville, Pa.

From I B Lair. — I desire to say through your valuable paper that I expect to leave this section of country in the Spring of 1882. — if spared so long — and having my face set westward, I desire to open a correspondence with members in the western States. Think I should prefer Kansas, and if there are any members in that country, needing or desiring my services, they should write me at once. I am thinking some of taking a trip through the West, the coming Fall or Winter. I should prefer locating among members of our fraternity, — a few at least, and would locate where my labors would be most needed. Please respond soon. — Antioch, Ind.

From J Calvert. — We have had snow-weather. It has been warm, and the corn is now planted nearly everywhere. Health is very good; do not know of any sickness at present. Our Sunday-school, May 15, was largely attended, and an interesting lesson was Luke 16: 19 to end of chapter, — the facts stated by the Saviour concerning the rich man and Lazarus. "Is he in sight of heaven?" The answer was, "Yes; the rich man talked to Abraham." — Warsaw, Ind., May 16.

GOOD HEALTH.

PERSONS of regular habits, generally have good health. All labor, rest, eating, pleasure-taking, rising from sleep and retiring to repose, can all be systematically arranged with the precision of clock-work, so when the time for each arrives, the person has a natural inclination for the exercise and can better enjoy it, and his wants better satisfied. By this precision, more labor can be performed and much easier, rest can be relished better, the mind more at ease, and the body in a healthy condition.

Early rising and continuing at stated hours regularly each morning, will greatly promote health. The morning breeze inhaled into the lungs is far better than powders, plasters or pills. Eating should be at regular hours, and the food of the more simple and plain kind with plenty of fruits added. Nothing should be eaten between meals, so as to allow the stomach to rest, then no danger of foul stomach, dyspepsia, &c. Less aches and pains, and physicians so far as professional labors are concerned, would almost be strangers to the household. The mind becomes clearer and stronger, perceptive faculties keener, and as a result, happiness and comfort are made available. Much of life's misery is brought upon the human family by their own acts.

By obeying the laws governing the body and living up to the laws of life and health strictly, disease can be driven from the body. By obeying the gospel of Christ, sin can be removed from the soul. Hence, by obedience, sickness as well as sin can be put away from us. This power is in Christ, who is the great physician of body and soul, and has all power committed to him both of heaven and of earth. His gospel is very extensive, and every student of this gospel of Christ will find in it the gospel of eating, the gospel of drinking, the gospel of labor, the gospel of cleanliness and the gospel of temperance regulating our lives in all its conditions.

In obedience to this gospel, the power of the Author can, and will be applied and we are well, and health and happiness is the great boon for us to enjoy. II.

THE DANGER OF WINE.

I HAD a widow's son committed to my care. He was heir to a great estate. He went through the different stages of college, and finally left, with a good moral character and bright prospects. But during the course of his education he had heard the sentiment advanced, which I then supposed correct, that the use of wines was not only admissible, but a real auxiliary to the temperance cause. After he had left college a few years he continued respectful to me. At length he became reserved. One night he rushed unceremoniously into my room, and his appearance told the dreadful secret. He said he came to talk with me. He had been told during his senior year that it was safe to drink wine, and by that idea he had been ruined. I asked him if his mother knew this. He said no; he had carefully concealed it from her. I asked him if he was such a slave that he could not abandon the habit. "Talk not to me of slavery," he said; "I am ruined, and before I go to bed I shall quarrel with the bar keeper of the Tootime for the brandy or gin to satiate my burning thirst." In one month this young man was in his grave. It went to my heart. Wine is the cause of ruin to a great proportion of the young men of our country.—Prof. Goodrich. (B)

SIMPLICITY IN LIVING MEANS HEALTH AND LONG LIFE.

WM. Cullen Bryant, the great poet writer and orator, who died recently, in New York, attributed his long life of health and activity to the fact of his having lived temperately and only regarded the laws of health. He was 84 years of age when he died and might readily have lived longer had he not met with an accident that caused his death. He was apparently as full of activity and the prospect of many more years of life as a man of 30, all because he took good care of his health.

From under his own pen we learn something concerning his manner of life. In winter he usually arose at about half past five; in summer an hour earlier; took exercise immediately after arising and practiced daily bathing. "My breakfast," says he, "is a simple one—hominy and milk, or in place of hominy, brown bread or oat meal, or wheaten grits, and in the season, baked sweet apples. Buckwheat cakes I do not decline, nor any other articles of vegetable food, but animal food I never take at breakfast. Tea and coffee I never touch at any time. My drink is water. Fruit makes a considerable part of my diet. In the country I dine early, and it is only at this meal that I take either meat or fish, and then sparingly, making my dinner mostly of vegetables. As to the meal which is called tea, I take only a little bread and butter, with fruit if it be on the table. In town, where I dine later, I make but two meals a day. I never meddle with tobacco except to quarrel with its use."

How much suffering might be avoided and how many useful lives saved if a more temperate manner of living was adopted by all classes? The same diet and manner of living will not properly apply to all classes, yet each should know what is the best course to pursue that good health and long life might be attained. (B)

TO CURE A COLD.—The Herald of Health says: "Upon the first indications that you have taken cold, stop eating until the cold is cured; drink freely of cold water; induce free perspiration over the entire body, either by exercise, the Turkish vapor, lamp, or hot-water bath, or wet sheet pack, followed by a tepid spray or sponging; go to bed, cover up warm, and breathe all the pure air you can. Nine cases out of ten will yield to this treatment in less than twelve hours, and the tenth one will hardly continue twenty-four hours." (B)

A RUM-SELLER.

A POOR old lady, says Gough, who formerly lived in sfluence, had a husband and two sons, who gave themselves up to intemperance. One day the father and sons were drinking at the tavern, with others like themselves, when a hearse passed the door. One of the sons swore, with an idiotic grin, he would be the next that rode in that carriage. The next morning he was found dead with his face in a muddy pool of water not large enough to drown a cat. In view of this awful judgment, the mother wrote a petition to the rum-seller, entreating him to sell her husband and son no more liquor. The petition, under such circumstances, one would think, might have melted a heart of stone. But the rum-seller cut it up, and rolled it into matches, which he put into a tumbler and set on a shelf; and every time the old man and his son came into the bar-room, he would give them a cigar, and hand down the tumbler of matches to light it, till they were all consumed; and then he boasted that he had made husband and son burn up the pious petition of the old woman!

"CLARA BELLE," in a recent letter, says: "There is a girl under treatment at Bellevue Hospital for inability to use her legs. She wore gaiters with inordinately high French heels. The distortion of her feet and ankles caused an undue tension of the cords and muscles in her calves. She persisted, however, until her legs became misshapen, and finally she was wholly disabled by lameness. She lies unprofessionally on her back now, with her handsome feet and legs in a shaping apparatus, enduring a great deal of pain and uncertainty whether she will ever be able to walk without crutches."—Medico-Literary Journal.

SUGGESTIVE.—If men gave three times as much attention as they do to the ventilation, ablution, and exercise in the open air, and only one-third as much to eating, luxury and late hours, the number of doctors, dentists and apothecaries, and the amount of neuralgia, dyspepsia, gout, fevers and consumption would be changed in a corresponding ratio. (B)

USEFUL INFORMATION.—Watch the children's feet. The following advice from the New York Evening Post is very important. Let every mother remember it. "Life-long discomfort and sudden death often come to children through the inattention or carelessness of parents. A child should never be allowed to go to sleep with cold feet; the last thing to be attended to is that the feet are dry and warm. Neglect of this has often led to a severe attack of croup, diphtheria or fatal sore throat. Always, in coming from school or entering the house, from a visit or errand in rainy, muddy, or thawing weather, the child should remove its shoes, and the mother should ascertain whether the stockings are the least damp. If they are, they should be taken off, the feet held before the fire and rubbed with the hands till perfectly dry, and another pair of stockings, and another pair of shoes put on. The reserve shoes and stockings should be put where they are good and dry, so as to be ready for use on a minute's notice. (B)

This is the fourth death in this family, in a little over two years, and two within the last six months. E.—

BRINKWORTH.—Feb 27, 1881, Fannie, wife of John Brinkworth, of Iowa Township, Jewell county, Kan., aged 58 years and 9 days. Disease cancer in the left breast.

Deceased was born in Wiltshire, England in Feb. 1823. Was married and lived in the bonds of matrimony 38 years. In 1870 they emigrated from Liverpool to Oshkosh, Ill.; afterwards to Kansas, where she was baptized, and held out faithful until death.

CRUMPACKER.—In Middle River congregation, Augusta Co., Va. May 26, 1881, sister Rebecca Crumpacker, aged 55 years, 6 months and 7 days.

The subject of this notice had been an extreme sufferer, for over three years, with chronic rheumatism and rheumatism. She united with the church in August, 1876, at which time her suffering was so great that she could not be taken any distance, so by her request, a large box was prepared, sufficiently large for both administrator and applicator to enter. This being placed in the yard, with sufficient water in it for the purpose intended, she was carried out and placed in the box, where she was immersed with ease; and amidst her suffering she would not cease in the service of her Savior, until she had attained to all the ordinances of the household of faith, down to the anointing with oil, and then expressed herself ready and willing to depart and thus could not be faithful to the last. Peace be to her ashes. Funeral services by the Brethren from Luke 2: 28-30.

LEVI GARDNER.

BUNFAIN.—In the Squirrel Creek congregation, Wabash Co., Ind., May 6, 1881, of pneumonia, Eliza Ellen Bunfain, aged 44 years, 7 months and 7 days. Services by Bro. David Switzer.

JOSEPH JOHN.

FUNK.—Died at Ripon, Cal., May 9, 1881, Daniel E., eldest son of Bro. John and sister Susan Funk, aged 15 years, 7 months and 10 days. Funeral services by the writer from Rev. 21: 4

Annual Meeting Business.

BY ORDER OF COMMITTEE.

As many brethren get to place of meeting on Saturday, as at Lankark, last year, we will inform you in first one business of the meeting begins on Tuesday, and we will look for them to come on Monday. But if more than the standing committee come on Saturday, there will be no boarding arrangement, except in the tent, where 15 cents per meal will be charged until Monday morning.

According to the decision of last Annual Meeting, boarding tickets good during the sessions of the meeting, will be furnished to males for $1.00 and females for 50 cents.

All letters, papers and telegraph dispatches should be directed to "A. M. B. Co." care of D. N. Workman, Ashland, Ohio, as he will have charge of mail, telegraph and baggage departments.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.

The Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago agents have been instructed to sell round-trip tickets to Ashland for not more than half rates. Call upon your nearest ticket agent and he will give you the necessary information.

So far as we can learn excellent arrangements have been made with the leading railroads to carry passengers to the next Annual meeting. Quite a number intend to go from Lankark, and good arrangements have been made from that point, Mt. Carroll, East Newton and Leaf River. Parties going on this road will not be put to the inconvenience of changing depots in Chicago, as the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul trains run into the depot from which the trains on the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago R. R. start out. This depot is one of the handsomest we ever saw. We recently visited this immense building and were surprised at its grandeur, the order and quietness and the conveniences for passengers. Certainly the people who travel will appreciate these efforts to make their stopping places pleasant.

On taking a look at the different lines centering in this depot, we must conclude that behind it all, there is business tact. We believe to the view of the Postmaster General, who says, "A Pennsylvania Railroad has always shown more public spirit than any other of the great trunk lines.

While passing over the mountains, through the valleys, and on over the prairies, we are made to feel that behind this excellent road there is pluck and admiration." M. M. ESHELMAN.

The Wabash, St. Louis & Pacific Railway will place tickets on sale at the following-named places to Ashland at one fare for the round-trip: Omaha, Neb.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Kansas City, Mo.; Glenwood Junction, Mo.; Moberly, Mo.; Hannibal, Mo.; Burlington, Iowa; Keokuk, Iowa, Quincy, Ill.; Canton, Ill.; Peoria, Ill.; El Paso, Ill.; Springfield, Ill.; Decatur, Ill.; Cerro Gordo, Ill.; De-mont, Ill.; To-land, Ill.; Danville, Ill.; Lafayette, Ind.; Delhi, Ind.; Loganport, Ind.; Peru, Ind.; Wabash, Ind.; Antioch, Ind.; Huntington, Ind.; Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Mexico, Ind.; North Manchester, Ind.; Defiance and Toledo, Ohio. Tickets on sale May 20 to June 7, 1881, good to return up to and including June 17, 1881. Passengers have choice of routes, either via Fort Wayne or Defiance Junctions, as both roads make direct connection to Ashland. Passengers coming by this route, will have the best of accommodations, and the company will do all they can to make it pleasant for them. Hoping to receive your patronage, we remain,

Yours,

N. WEDD,
AGT. W. ST. L. & P. RY.

The undersigned committee have conferred with the officers of the Pittsburgh, Fort Wayne & Chicago, Baltimore & O. R., New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio railroads, and they all agree to carry our people over their roads at half fare.

This arrangement includes all their branches—Parties living along the line of other roads can make their own arrangements to where they intersect any of these roads. The A. M. Committee only gave us jurisdiction over the arrangements with the three roads named above.

We are willing to assist any one, however, if locality, name of road, and probable number coming, are given us.

D. N. WORKMAN, { Committee
J. H. WORMAN, }

To whom it may concern: Greatly reduced rates to A. M., and return, over N. Y., P & O. R. R. I have made arrangements from Springfield, Ohio, to Ashland and return for $7.50. Same rate also from Enon or Osborn. Tickets good until June 15th. Tickets can be had either from me or J. D. Ruliger, St. James Hotel, Springfield, Ohio.

HEAVY FRANTZ.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. will sell excursion tickets from Meyersdale and other points on the Pittsburgh Division, to Ashland and return, good for thirty days, at eleven dollars and fifty cents ($11.50). Both trains on this division will make direct connection at Cumbe land with express trains for Ashland, via Mansfield, Ohio, Time from Meyersdale to Ashland via this route, twenty hours. Parties desiring tickets or information, will call upon or write to the undersigned, who will sell you tickets and give information desired. Tickets will be put on sale June 1st. Those wishing to go earlier, will please let me know.

C. G. LINT,

Meyersdale, Somerset Co., Pa.

We very much regret that we could not visit some of the churches in Indiana and Ohio, as we had intended before A. M. The putting in of a new engine to do our work on our papers, prevented us leaving home a week sooner than we did, and as we had some time ago promised to be with Bro. Bashor on his debate at Denton, we go there direct.

There were 10 baptized in the Beaver Run congregation, Va., on the 15th of May.

Three of Bro. Abram H. Cissel's daughters spent a few days in Mt. Morris last week.

Bro. D. Bechtelheimer and family have reached their new home in Saline Co., Neb.

Bro. Peifer preached in Lanark last Sunday evening. He goes with us to the Annual Meeting.

Brethren R. H. Miller and P. J. Brown are on the Standing Committee from N. E. Ohio. S. H. Enobar is delegate.

The Revised New Testament is the work of many eminent scholars. It required ten years to produce the translation.

Bro. Martin V. Sward, our former presman for several years, started to Colorado week before last. He expects to work in the mining regions.

Bro. Martin Nether's letter concerning Bismark Grove, Kansas, should have appeared last week, but it reached us too late for that issue.

Quinlan and Brumbaugh Bros. will publish a full Report of the sayings and doings at the A. M. It promises to be an interesting Report.

This season of the year Communion services may commence at six and thus avoid the necessity of extending the meeting far into the night.

Bro. D. F. Ely and wife, after returning from Jefferson county, this State, went to Iowa, expecting to travel still farther west—looking for a home perhaps.

Bro. Peifer preached for the Brotherhood at Hickory Grove last Sunday. One was baptized in the afternoon of the same day. Bro. George Zollers officiated.

The North Manchester church, Ind., is building a new building in the town of North Manchester. It is 40 by 60, built of brick, and will cost about $3,000.

Bro. J. M. Saylor, of Grandy Centre, Iowa, has become one of the editors of The Brethren. He expects to attend the A. M. and work up the interest of the paper among the German readers in the Brotherhood. Bro. Paul Wetzel will be present also for the same purpose.

Bro. John Flory, of Va., was preaching in Pennsylvania week before last.

We are pleased to see the Brethren responding liberally to the support of the Danish Mission.

Five miles east of Lanark the River Brethren are building a meeting-house. The foundation is laid.

S. S. GRAY, of Warriorsburg, Pa., has sent $100.00 to the Danish Mission. He gives one tenth of his profits.

Any person having books to donate to the Cassel Library should send them to D. L. Miller, Mt. Morris, Ill.

The Western District of Pennsylvania sends C. G. List to the Standing Committee, and J. I. Cover, delegate.

In consequence of high water, papers sent from here March 12th, did not reach Yankeo, Dakota Territory, till May 7th.

Bro. John Forney, of Abilene, Kansas, is said to be in possession of an excellent cure for cancers, and has also cured a number of cases.

We are well pleased with the Standing Committee as a whole this year. It is composed of men who have the good of the Brotherhood at heart.

The Feast at Cherry Grove, last Wednesday evening was well attended, about 250 commended. Brethren Shultz and Grubill, of Iowa, were present.

Bro. D. P. Saylor spent eight days with the members in New Jersey a few weeks ago. He speaks most encouragingly of their Christian lives and manner of worship.

Steven Wealthy A. Charles left Lanark week before last en route for the A. M. by the way of Southern Illinois from the A. M. she returns to her home in Pennsylvania.

We were mistaken last week in saying that J. Nicholson and N. U. Keagy were delegates to the A. M. They were delegates to the District Meeting of N. E. Ohio.

We finish this issue and get it ready for the press Friday evening, June 3rd, expecting to start to Ashland tomorrow morning. The next issue will be printed on our absence.

The item in last issue, written by Bro. B., in regard to visiting churches in Indiana and Ohio before A. M., was placed on last page by mistake. It should have appeared on this page.

Bro. D. L. Miller concluded to do a little work for the B. at W. last week, the result was twenty-six new subscribers in a little over one hour. We want some one to beat that. Who will do it?

Bro. J. S. Flory's article—We should go to A. M. with fully—reached us too late for last issue, and though a few days out of season now, it deserves a careful reading for the good it was intended to do.

Those who are endeavoring to throw light on the light mentioned in Gen. 1:3 will find deep water. Bro. M. Myers' position may not be tenable, but perhaps it may put others to thinking and working for more light.

Whenever we receive better terms on clothing, our patrons shall profit by it. This week we are enabled to offer the Methodist free one year to all who will send us $1.50 for 1882, or take the paper for one year from now.

Our Advocate says there are four or five meeting-houses in the Pipe Creek Church, Maryland. There are no prospects of the congregation being divided into two or more parts.

Many of the national notices that we should have copied from the Providence did not reach us in time for insertion last week, hence we could not give them, as it is now too late.

Bro. French Ely has been sick for several days and it was feared that he would not be able to attend the A. M., but we now learn that he is improving and will likely be on hand.

Our office was favored with a number of visitors last week. We were pleased to have them call, but could not entertain them as we would like to have done on account of much work.

Bro. L. R. Peifer, and family, of Waterloo, Iowa, moved into the College building last week. They come to make their home among us. Bro. Peifer owns an interest in the College and will labor in behalf of the institution.

Joseph B. Miller wants the address of his paper changed to Sumner, Pulaski Co., but gives no State, nor does he tell from what place the address should be changed. These we must know before any change can be done.

Every family in the Brotherhood will want to read Bro. Stein's Confession from Europe and Asia. They will expect some good things from the hand of our dear brother. Only 60 cents to B. at W. from now to end of the year.

A SAMPLE COPY—half sheet—of Widow's Literary Mission is before us. A copy will be sent to each of our subscribers, that they may judge of the merits of the paper. Hope it may prove both interesting and profitable to all who receive it.

Bro. D. L. Miller, of Mt. Morris College, expects to spend a few weeks in Colorado during vacation. If circumstances favor, he may also visit New Mexico. We hope to have him favor our readers with an interesting description of the country he may visit.

The Anniversary Meeting of Silver Creek, last Thursday and Friday, was well attended. About 200 commenced. The singing service commenced at six and closed shortly after eight, giving the people ample time to get home before six o'clock in the night.

H. M. EDWIN, of the Ashland College, sends a commendation addressed to those who expect to visit the school during the A. M., but as it reaches us too late for last issue it cannot now appear. For this paper will not reach our subscribers till after their return from the A. M. Hope this explanation will be satisfactory.

We clip the following from The Standard, published at Dunbar, Ohio:

Work has commenced, and is progressing rapidly on the new brick building for the German Baptist congregation of Dunbar. It is situated on the north side of West Wayne street, and when completed will be an ornamental and a profitable addition to that part of town.

Bro. Evans' letter, in this issue, addressed to Bro. B. P. Monahan, though on a controverted subject, we do not understand to be of a controverted character. His object seems to be, to throw light on the paper's rendering of John 13:14, and permit the people to form their own conclusions. We hope his article will be read and considered in this light and not in the sense of controversy.

CHARITY NECESSARY TO GODLINESS.

BY LIZZIE M. BROWER.

"Every man according as he purposeth in his heart so let him give; not grudgingly or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9:7.

How vain the thoughts, how frail the man,
Who seeketh not the praise of God.
Would rather strive to please this world
And thus be led to lose his soul.

Some give their aims because they know
That others will expect it so,
And thus they indicate that obey
The command of giving do they.

Not thinking that the Lord can see
Into our stony hearts when we Do not with cheerfulness bestow
Unto the poor the gifts we owe.

Others will cling to pennies rare,
Of them the poor can never share;
They vow to hoard up wealth; in time
They'll freely give to poor mankind.

Then they will leave their ways of yore,
And heed the Bible teachings more,
And spend a few days for their God,—
A life-time spent in vanity.

O, could we ever hear in mind,
Delaying is a thief of time;
There is a time approaching fast
When time forever will be past.

Some so-called Christians claim if they Engage in giving 'aids' so free,
'Tis not for proper purpose used
And thus their charity abused.

Could Christians in this way go on
And hope to gain a heavenly crown,
When truth doth unto us declare
That such the crown can never wear?

Ah, let us carefully peruse,
That great and noble, blessed Book
Where Christ doth teach that unto him
That asketh thee, unto him give.

In this we learn that if we would
His humble followers prove,
We'll take his yoke and soon will be Clothed in sweet humility.

INFANT BAPTISM.

BY JOHN HARNSEBAEGER.

INFANT baptism originated with man. It has no higher authority, and it will terminate with man. When he goes to the grave the authority for infant baptism will go with him. I have looked over the confession of faith of the Pedo-baptist churches, and see that while they do not all use the same words, yet the substance is about the same. They say that all things in Scripture are not alike in themselves, nor alike clear to all, yet those things which were necessary to be known for salvation are so clearly propounded in some place of Scripture or other, that not only the learned but also the unlearned, in the due use of the ordinary means, may attain a sufficient understanding of them. We infer from this language that every one who has an ordinary mind, though a limited education, is considered a competent judge of testimony in a due use of the ordinary means without any commentator or religious teacher. The confession of faith also says, that "baptism is a sacrament of the New Testament, ordained by Jesus Christ." The term sacrament, when defined, signifies a "Holy Ordinance." Then it is a holy ordinance of the New Testament, authorized by Jesus Christ. Who would go to the Old Testament to find an ordinance which is not in it, and belongs exclusively to the New? We will then appeal directly to the law of Christ, which we find in the commission to baptize: "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them," etc. Matt. 28: 19. We shall also refer to the law of baptism as given by Mark: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." To teach the nations signifies to disciple or make learners of them. To disciple is to bring persons by faith, unto the school of Christ, in which they learn his will. Those whom Matthew calls disciples, Mark calls believers. According to this commission, then, as authorized by Jesus Christ, none are warranted to be baptized but disciples or believers, and every sane man must confess that this does not include infants; consequently the confession of faith by the authority of Jesus Christ condemns the practice of the whole Pedo-baptist world.

Pedo baptists agree, as well as Baptists, that adults are lost without an atonement, and we find perfect unity in trinity. 1. The atonement. 2. The law. 3. The resurrection. The law of Christ could not reach man without first having been atoned for, and both the atonement and the law would be worthless without a resurrection. Then as infants are a neutral party, and cannot believe or disbelieve any proposition or truth, either the atonement nor the law or gospel concerns them. All infants that have died from Adam to the present are in a state of innocency and harmlessness. There never was any religious service enjoined upon innocent children since the world began. There never was any law to reach them; all laws were given to and intended for adults. Consequently all who are in infancy will have the benefit of the first resurrection, while adults, who do not obey the law according to the commission, have no promise of the first resurrection, but are subject to the second death. It is only upon the condition that adults obey the law or gospel that they have the promise of the benefit of the first resurrection. "Upon such, death hath no power."

Again, we read "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." If there were an infant baptism then it would read this way: "One Lord, one faith, and two baptisms"; one for the believer and one for those who cannot believe. There is only one law and one baptism, and that one is a believers' baptism. And there is only one commission, and that is a limited commission; the duties of those who act under it are clearly pointed out. The term itself implies something committed from a superior or a supreme person. The items contained in any commission are all the things that the commissioners are authorized to perform, hence the commission of a magistrate points out and circumscribes the duties of his office. If this were not the case, he might attend to the duties of a Notary Public or that of a High Sheriff. His commission prohibits him from acting in the capacity of a High Sheriff or a Notary Public, and authorizes him to act as a Justice of the Peace only. In like manner the commission to baptize believers or disciples prohibits the baptism of others; it forbids the baptism of infants as clearly as "Thou shalt not steal," implies that you must be honest. And I will just here remark, that unless our Pedo-baptist friends could show a new commission from heaven confirmed by miracles authorizing them to baptize infants, they should ground their arms and frankly yield to their cause; for this argument completely overturns it and uncovers the entire foundation of a false theory. All their genius, learning and talents combined are unable to remove it. This commission excludes all except believers from the baptism it enjoins. If there were even another commission enjoining the baptism of infants, when such, who have been baptized in infancy according to this supposed infant commission, believe the gospel for salvation, they must be baptized according to the commission in Matt. 28: 19 and Mark 16: 16 without any regard to their baptism in infancy. Such a baptism could not excuse them from the command that enjoins all believers to be baptized. The command of Jesus Christ to every believer stands engraved in indelible characters in the commission, and until the trumpet sounds for the Day of Judgment, it cannot be effaced. "Heaven and earth will pass away" before it will cease to be a most solemn duty for all true believers to be baptized. It is impossible for any explanation, or any command, or any other baptism, to excuse us from this one. There is no power on earth to abrogate this believer baptism, which the confession of faith says is a sacrament of the New Testament ordained by Jesus Christ. Then who can alter it, or substitute another baptism in room of it? Where is the man that dares to substitute infant baptism for the baptism of believers? Whoever he is, he is the character who by his tradition makes void this sacred rite which the confession of faith says was ordained by Jesus Christ.

We are told that children are born in sin, and for this reason must be baptized. We will in few words show the weakness of this argument:—children born in sin. Suppose I should introduce you to a friend of mine, and would say unto you, This man was born in Harrisonburg, would you conclude from this expression that Harrisonburg is in the man? Evidently not.

Idiocy would not be found in so great an error; but when Drs. of Divinity say that children are born in sin, and in consequence of which sin is in them, by thousands of intelligent persons it is accepted as truth, yet it is just as idiotic as to conclude that Harrisonburg is in the man. Sin is the transgression of law. There can be no sin in children until they knowingly transgress law. All those who hold that there is sin in children, and in consequence of which they need baptism,—and this is the reason because there is sin in them by their actions—strongly imply that they baptize them in order to remit or remove this sin. That is just what it speaks every time they perform what is called infant baptism. In support of this argument would be water salvation, sure enough. Such persons have a great deal of faith in water when applied to infants, but have very little in the command of God relative to adult believer baptism. Such have more faith in the command of men than they have in the express command of God. No wonder there is so much infidelity in the churches. It is also asserted by those parties seemingly have so much faith in water that baptism came in the room of circumcision as its substitute. Now it is admitted on all hands, that in all cases where there is a substitute obtained that it is to fill the design of the principal to fill the same office and to discharge the same class of duties. Since all do make this submission, we will proceed to make the application.

1. Circumcision was intended, or designed to make members of a national church and not of the Christian church. Then baptism, its substitute, is also designed to make members of a national church and not of the Christian church.

2. Circumcision was administered to males only.

3. Circumcision required no faith in its subjects. Then baptism, its substitute, requires no faith in its subjects either.

4. Circumcision was administered on the eighth day, under the penalty of breaking the law.

5. Circumcision was administered by parents and not by preachers. Then baptism, its substitute, is to be administered by parents and not by preachers.

6. Circumcision was not performed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, but was identified with the law of Moses, and must share the same fate. Then baptism, its substitute, is not to be performed in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, and is identified with the law of Moses, and must share the same fate.

7. Circumcision has come to such a crisis from what the apostle affirms that whosoever is circumcised Christ shall profit him nothing. Then baptism, its substitute, has come to or will come to such a crisis that whosoever is baptized, Christ shall profit him nothing. Thus we are made to see the inconsistency and entire basis of false principles.

For the Brethren at Work.

ABOUT BISMARCK GROVE, KANSAS.

BY MARTIN KEKER.

Dear Brethren:—

OUR District Meeting is now in the past. It took only one day to dispose of her business; left nothing for Annual Meeting to dispose of. The question sprung up, "Will we call for the Annual Meeting next year?" The meeting seemed very much in favor of having it in Kansas next year, but as the churches were not counseled in regard to it, it was dropped for the time being, till the necessary steps could be taken.

You have, no doubt, read about the Bismark Grove, what a well arranged place it is to have large assemblies.

The above Bismark Grove is owned by the Kansas Pacific Railroad Co., and said railroad Co. offers to let the Brethren have their well arranged grove with the tabernacle to hold their Annual Meeting next year, free of charge. The tabernacle is circular in form, 116 or 120 feet in diameter, well seated. On one side the seats are elevated and in a circular posture, room enough for the Standing Committee and delegates to be seated, with a platform large enough for the speaker to step down on it, almost on a level with the seats over the tabernacle; so all can see and hear. The tabernacle is a solid frame, closed up within eight feet to the ground; covered with shingles. Another building close by the tabernacle can be rented at low rates. In connection with this, the company has tents calculated for families and companies. These they offer to rent cheap. Water is very plenty; there is a lake or pool in the grove that affords plenty of water. Outside, there is a fountain pump so arranged that one can drive under with the vessels in the wagon, and let the water down, like railroad tanks are fixed. Other pumps are put in through the grove during meetings, that are not always in use. I have seen said Bismark Grove myself. Have more to say, if desired. Would say the railroad goes right by the ground; depot right there; telegraph office at the tabernacle. The grove is neatly set with tame grass, surrounded by a high plank fence. Have not learned how many acres are inclosed. The trees composing the grove are mostly black walnut. These arrangements are within two miles of Lawrence, Douglas Co., Kansas, if I have learned it rightly.

What do the Brethren of the adjoining States say? will we have the Annual Meeting in the State of Kansas next year or in two years?

The reason I wrote the foregoing is, the Brethren wished me to give the Brotherhood to understand what I saw with my own eyes.

I just returned from Vernon Co., Missouri. They had a good time at their District Meeting and their Love feast; the members seemed to be alive in the cause of their Master, and there seemed to be a desire that Annual Meeting should be in Bismark Grove, Kansas. Think about it.

For the Brethren at Work.

TO BROTHER B. F. MOOMAW.

BY JAS. EVANS.

Beloved Brother:—

OUR first acquaintance was of the most pleasant kind. I was not a member of our Brotherhood then. But I loved you and your family from the first. What separated us then was not the gospel, but circumstances, not of our creating. I was then striving to follow Christ in his appointed ways, with an imperfect knowledge of and some prejudices against the Brethren. Our acquaintance has ripened into full fellowship and unity of spirit. We are both in the decline of life, and let us live as sojourners here but seeking a better country.

I have read your articles on "The Union must not be Dissolved," and like the spirit that pervades it through out. All who are loyal to Christ will labor for union. To seek to rend and tear down is disloyalty to the throne of Christ. All lovers of pure religion want to see our union preserved till the Master returns and separates the good from the bad. Your style is conciliatory and just what we need at present. Let us leave bitter invectives and inflammatory speech to politicians; ours is the meek spirit of the Nazarene.

There is only one point in your articles that calls for comment from me just now. You say that the German translation favors the double mode of feet-washing, but in your candor you admit that the English favors the single mode. Although you seem to favor the double mode, still you would not arbitrarily exclude the single mode. If all were of your spirit, there would be no strife, but peace and love would prevail. You are too well read in church history not to know how vain are all arbitrary acts of uniformity. You understand the genius of Christianity too well to compel conscientious men and women to do what they believe is a defective mode. They do not charge their brethren with anything wrong, only so far as it fails to do the whole will of Christ. We can practice the double mode when we are with the churches who believe in it. We do nothing wrong, only we cannot do all we want. We have now attended two Love-feasts since we united with the Brethren, and we have not washed the feet of any. We had no opportunity. True our feet were washed, and Bro. R. H. Miller assures us that is sufficient. But he is not infallible, and his reasonings might turn out to be fallacious before the flaming eyes of the Judge of the living and the dead. It is much safer ground to wash the feet of our Brethren as well as to have our own washed. But you inform us that our old brethren were led by the German translation of John 13: 44 to adopt the double mode. But as the English favors the single mode, as you acknowledge, the task before us is to ascertain which translation is most in harmony with the Greek original. Luther was no more an inspired translator than King James' bishops. In his days Hebrew was almost an unknown tongue to Christian divines. They were better acquainted with Latin than with the ancient sacred tongue. Luther sometimes follows either the Septuagint or Vulgate instead of the Hebrew text. He does not always translate literally, but substitutes his own comment instead. For example, the Hebrew words "Vayithhallaik Enoch ath hael'heem." Enoch walked with God, he renders by "He remained in a divine life, (bleiben in einem goetlichen Leben) Again, the Greek expression, "Hee dikaiosunee tou Theou," he paraphrases "the righteousness which avails before God" (Die Gerechtigkeit die vor Gott gilt) instead of "the righteousness of God. And we know the blunder he made in John 13: 2. Instead of supper being prepared (Greek deipnen aenomenou) he says, "after the evening meal" (nach dem Abendessen.) The original of the latter part of John is "Kai humeis opheliete niptein touz podas." Luther renders these words, "So sollt ihr auch euch untereinander die Fuesse waschen," (so should you also wash your feet among one another.) In Montanis' Latin Testament published by John Leussen we find it rendered thus: "Et vos debitis alii aliorum lavare pedes." (Also you ought to wash the feet of one another.) David Martin's French version, used generally in protestant pulpits, renders the Greek text thus: "Vous devez aussi vous laver les pieds les uns les autres (ye ought to wash the feet the one the other. The Dutch version has it: "Zoo zift gij ook schuldig elk schuldig elkanders voeten te washen.") (So be you also obliged one another's feet to wash.) Here are now three translations agreeing with the English and opposed to the German. — The preposition unter (among) has no representative in Greek. Allesoon (one another) is in the genitive plural, and not in the dative, as it would be if "among" was a correct rendering. Then it would either be "en al'oisiois" or the word in the dative plural as in Luke 22: 17, when Jesus said: Take this and divide it among yourselves (Greek cautois). Now as unquestionably the Greek is in harmony with the English you virtually acknowledge that it favors the single mode. We hope then our brethren who follow false translation will follow better counsels than to attempt to coerce A. M. to pass a decree compelling blind obedience to an inactional uniformity. We have no words of censure for those who practice the double mode. We do not love them less because they see it in a different light from us. May God bless them all, is my prayer.

COVET EARNESTLY THE BEST GIFTS.

BY C. HARADER.

MAN is a being made in the image of God, endowed with the faculties of reason and judgment, with capacities to improve his talent. He has power to communicate thoughts; therefore, each aid his fellow in improving his talent, and it is the indispensable duty of Christians to do so. The most effective way to do this is in the assembly where one can instruct many at a time. In no other way can the people of God so well assist each other in giving encouragement and strengthening their faith; the Scriptures are read and expounded; we sing and pray together. How it builds up! One has almost felt like giving up, his cold feelings are aroused to a sense of duty, warning is taken; hence finally made to conclude that this one or that one is not so bad after all. May be some of the faults were in himself, so by a continuance of the work the leaven is worked out and superseded by love and good will. Many times more is accomplished in a series of meetings than we would anticipate; though there be no additions, moreover interchange of thought is profitable. Paul says, "If anything be revealed to another that setteth by, let the first hold his peace." 1 Cor. 14: 30. In God's wise arrangement he has not given it all to one person but has given gifts differing from one to another. Therefore covet earnestly the best gifts. Some excuse themselves by saying they stay at home to read the Bible. Well, reading the Bible is a duty, but generally we find the faithful Bible reader the faithful church goer. That good Book says: "Forasmuch as the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some is," and "be of one mind."

No people can be united in faith without interchange of thought: they must see alike, understand alike, and also appear alike.

We may conclude, because we are set on the walls of Zion, that all we need to do is to command and it must be done, when by milder means we accomplish much more. It is a hard matter to drive our fellow-being. There is more power in reason than in the rod. Many who believe the gospel think there is time enough to attend to their religious duties. How contrary to the Savior's teaching: "Seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Matt. 6: 33. "Procrastination is the thief of time." How often do we hear it said, "Too late! Too late!" The business man goes to the bank just after the banker closed the door; too late! He goes to the post-office just after the mail has been closed; too late! Or the traveler comes in sight just as the train moves off; too late! Just a little exertion, a little more activity, and all would have been on time. But ah! the tardy traveler can wait for the next train. But not so with the tardy sinner; no other train coming; too late! forever too late! Dear sinner, don't delay on the barren hills of sin; don't let the world and the devil cheat you out of your soul so dearly bought; be entreated to make your calling and election sure before it is too late—the day past, the Summer ended and you not saved!

Another good means placed in our reach to form character and instill noble sentiment is the Sabbath school. When the tree is small it is easy to bend; the large oak is more difficult. In order to obey Eph. 6: 4, there is an all important duty to perform. This work begins in the family—an every day work. Every faithful Christian will daily gather around the altar those who are entrusted to his or her care, read the Scriptures and kneel with them in prayer. But our duty extends further: we have all around us those neglected ones. These we should gather in and instruct in the Sabbath-school, which is the most powerful means in the reach of man to disseminate either truth or error, and how in the name of all that is good, can we afford to surrender into the hand of the world and Satan all that power, and thus Satan triumph over Christianity! I have opposed popular Sabbath-school, but fully favor a Brethren Sabbath school where and when it can be.

WAS ADAM DECEIVED?

BY JOHN FORNEY, SEN.

THE above question is often asked by brethren and sisters, and I think the cause of it is because we hear nun isters sometimes say the serpent deceived Eve and Eve deceived Adam. The Bible says, "Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression." 1 Tim. 2: 14. Here Paul would seem to contradict the idea that Adam was deceived. And the language implies that Adam knew what he was doing when he took the forbidden fruit from the hand of the woman, and did eat, as he confessed to his Maker, "The woman thou gavest me, she gave me and I did eat." This he did because he loved her, and was ready to cleave to her. As he had answered his Maker (God) when he presented the woman to him, he said "This is bone from my bones and flesh from my flesh: she shall be called woman because she was taken out of man." Here Adam recognized God's whole intent in woman, and exclaimed, "A man will leave father and mother and cleave to his wife." And the woman now had partaken of the fruit, violated the holy law of God, had died the death of sin; for God said, "The day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Hence the woman was not alone dead in trespass and sin; that would make a separation between her and her Maker (God), also between her and Adam. In that condition she could not have existed, could not have lived in the garden and enjoyed the tree of life and the happiness there was in the garden, for she would be separated from Adam who would have still remained innocent, in communion with God and in the enjoyment of all in the garden. Adam would have remained in possession of all this happiness, yet separated from Eve, had he not also partaken of the forbidden fruit from the hand of the woman. The result would have been a separation of fellowship and oneness as husband and wife; the woman could no longer be an helpmeet to Adam and multiply and fill the earth. This Adam well understood, and because he knew God's intent in woman, joining her to man, not to be put asunder, he (Adam) was fully determined that the serpent (Satan) shall not have power to separate between him and the woman. He was ready to take from her hand, and did eat, to be with her, and be one with her, and be like her, as we hear him in his answer to the Lord: "Yes, Lord, the woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat." Gen. 3: 12. The Lord gave her to be with man; Adam with full knowledge of the fruit to be with her. Hence Paul saith Adam was not deceived, but the woman being deceived was in the transgression. I accept Paul's language to be correct.

Never choose those for your friends who laugh and make sport of holy things.

One of the reformers being told, "All the world are against you," replied, "Then I am against all the world."

WORDS AND DEEDS.

BY JAMES M. NEFF.

"So speak ye, and so do, as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty." James 2: 12.

WE are led to the conclusion, from the above Scripture, that our words and deeds should be righteous; that our walk and conversation should be chaste and godly; that we should avoid coarse and obscure language, and rude and nugentle actions, if we expect, at the day of judgment, to be set upon the right hand of the Great Judge.

"So speak ye!" The apostle tells us that we should speak "as they that shall be judged by the law of liberty;" yet he does not say how much, or how little we should say; nor upon what subject, or at what place, or under what circumstances we should speak. Therefore we think that it would be well to refer to other passages of Scripture, in order that more light and information may be gained upon the subject.

"But when you pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking." Matt. 6: 7. Hence we see that not only should our social conversation with our neighbors, be chaste and sensible; but in order that our prayers be heard and answered, we should pray for what we want, and no more; avoiding "vain repetitions," for it is evident that we are not heard for our much speaking. Brethren, this should be remembered as something of importance. I fear our brethren forget this sometimes while engaged in prayer in the public sanctuary.

But let us notice other points. "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice." Eph. 4: 31. "Wherefore lay aside all malice, and all guile, and all hypocisies, and envies, and all evil speakings." 1 Peter 2: 1. We have learned, from the foregoing passages, that we should not be too free to speak. We also learn that we should avoid evil speaking; for it is indeed a great and a prominent evil. How many hearts have been broken? How many happy skies have been clouded by sorrow and grief? Yes, how many souls have been lost by evil-speaking. Brethren, let us avoid it, and be very careful; for "the tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity; so is the tongue among our members, that it defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature; and it is set on fire of hell." James 3: 6.

We now have told of some of the evils of "vain repetition" and "evil-speaking," and advised the avoidance thereof; but we have not yet found out what we should speak. Let us hear Paul for a moment on this part of the subject: "But speak that which becometh sound doctrine." Titus 2: 1. Now we have it laid here before us in a very few words. Yes, dear brethren, we should be sober and earnest, ever abounding in the work of the Lord. We should not let our whole conversation be upon the frivolous things of time, but let us be more earnest, and more studious; "for by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

Now let us offer a few thoughts upon the second branch of the subject. If ye fulfill the royal law according to the Scriptures, "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself; ye do well." James 2: 8. Here we see that love must be exercised in the work of the Lord. We must love our neighbors and brethren as we love ourselves. And not only should love be exercised; but patience, charity, and godliness; in short, the whole law of Christ must be obeyed if we expect to be justified in the end. Yes, dear reader, our life throughout should be characterized by deeds of kindness and words of love and encouragement.

Let us all try to cultivate gentle words and a pleasant countenance; and love and obey the Gospel of our Lord and Savior.

ROMAN, IND.

THE LIVING FOUNTAIN.

IN a village on the Welsh coast, the people fetch all their water from a well.

"Is it spring ever dry?" I inquired.

"Dry? yes, ma'am; very often in hot weather."

"And where do you go then for water?"

"To the freshet, a little way out of town."

"And if the freshet dries up?"

"Why, then we go to the rock well, higher up, the best water of all."

"But if the rock-well fails?"

"Why, ma'am, the rock-well never dries up, never. It is always the same—Winter and Summer."

This precious well, which "never dries up," reminded me of the waters of life and salvation, flowing from the heart of the "Rock of Ages," and freely bestowed upon all men who believe in the gospel of Jesus Christ. Every other brook may grow dry in the days of drought and adversity; but this heavenly spring never ceases to flow.

Without waiting till earth's wayside brooks shall fail, let us hasten at once, with hearts athirst, to the heavenly well which never dries up.

"HOLINESS UNTO THE LORD."

Zach. 14: 20.

SELECTED BY THOMAS D. LYON.

THE Prophet tells us that the time is coming that the above motto shall be written upon the bells (bridles) of the horses, and upon the pots, by which we are to understand that God's glory is to be considered in all the minor and ordinary matters of life, and that God's worship is to be put into all kinds of service, and every thing is to become religious. When the time comes that farmers shall write, "Holiness unto the Lord," on the fences of their fields there will be no more tobacco raised in those fields, nor barley to be manufactured into beer.

When this motto is written on the corn-crisps, no more corn will be sold to distilleries. When this motto is written over groceries, no more tobacco will be sold inside. When this motto is inscribed on all the buildings of cities, no more buildings will be used for casinos, or theatres, or dancing halls. When "Holiness unto the Lord" is written on all our churches, not for appearance, but in truth, no more fairs, or festivals, or concerts, or exhibitions, or political, or masonic, or any other secular meetings will be held in the churches; but on the contrary, they will be used only for the spiritual worship of God to which they are sacredly dedicated. When "Holiness unto the Lord" is written on all "pots," and other cookery vessels, there will be no more rich food cooked that breeds dyspepsia and other diseases, instead of nourishing the body. When this motto is written upon all sewing machines, they will be run no more for no more for frilling, and fluting, and flouncing, and tucking; but all garments will be made simple and plain. When "Holiness unto the Lord" shall be written upon the hearts of all Christians, they will then appear in all the departments of life.

Dear reader has "Holiness unto the Lord" been written upon your heart? Are all your affections, and all your words, and all your actions, and all your property, and all your influence, in a word, your whole life, "Holy unto the Lord?" If not let the Holy Ghost stamp this blessed motto in your hearts to-day.—Banner of Holiness.

YOU'LL BE A DUKE, BUT I SHALL BE A KING

A CONSUMPTIVE disease seized the eldest son and heir of the Duke of Hamilton, which ended in his death. A little before his departure from the world, he took his Bible from under his pillow and opened it at the passage, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." As death approached, he called his younger brother to his bedside, and addressing him with the greatest affliction and seriousness, closed with these remarkable words:

"And now Douglas, in a little time you'll be a Duke, but I'll be a King."

MEMBERS who habitually stray away from meeting when they can conveniently attend are sure to become weak and sickly in the spirit.

MANY times persons think that when they have done their duty, all is right. That is true only when their duty is done in the right way. There is often so much impotence in the way a duty is performed as there is in the duty itself.

We approach Mt. Zion, the New Jerusalem, our Heavenly Home. The glimmer of its light begins to appear in the distance, and we will soon be there. Home at last! All our sorrows left behind, and our imperfections swallowed up of mortality. Not another struggle with the great enemy, for he cannot harm us there. Our rest will come by-and-by, and our reward will be a glorious one. We patiently wait for this glorious day of the Lord to come. Let us be ready when we are called up higher.

WHAT ARE WE GOING TO DO?

What are we going to do, sweet friends,
In the year that is to come,
To baffle that fearful curse of death
Whose messenger is run?
Shall we fold our hands and bid him pass
As he has passed before,
Leaving his deadly poisoned draught
At every unbarred door?
What are we going to do, sweet friends,
Still wait for crises and pain,
Then bind the broken and heal the wound,
And soothe the we again?
Let the dead still torture the weary wife,
Still poison the coming child,
Still break the suffering mother's heart,
Still drive the sister wild?
Still bring to the grave the gray-haired sires,
Still murtur the brave young soul,
Till the waters of death, like a burning stream,
O'er the whole great nation roll;
And poverty take the place of wealth,
And sin and crime and sinners
Drag down to the very lowest depths
The highest and proudest name?
Is this our mission on earth, sweet friends,
In the years that are to come?
If not, let us rouse and do the work
Against this spirit of ruin,
There is not a soul so poor and weak,
In all this godly land,
But against this evil a word may speak,
And lift a warning hand.
And lift a warning hand, sweet friends,
With a cry for home and health,
Adding voice to voice, till the sound shall sweep
Like rum's death-knell, o'er the earth,
And the weak and wavering shall hear,
And the faint grow brave and strong,
And the true and the good and great and wise
Join hands to right this wrong.

AS we have said before, A happy home is the most delightful place on earth; and when there we see peace and union prevail, we are made to exclaim, that home, is founded upon love. Love is the foundation of all good. This is a fact undeniable. It was love that actuated our blessed Lord to come to earth and die for the righteous. Love, who hath measured its dimensions, its breadth, its length, its depth and its height? It surpasses by infinite degrees the most advanced knowledge of saint's and angels, yet, in a sense, it is apprehended, it is enjoyed, it is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Spirit. A home where love does not exist is, to say the least of it, a miserable hovel. A home cannot be happy without love; nor is it merely a place to eat and sleep; nay, but a place where all is confiding Love, meekness, gentleness. Forbearance, patience, peace and contentment prevail in a true home. Therefore you see, something is connected with home to make it happy. It is not wealth, learning, nor clothing that renders a home happy altogether; you may possess all these, and true they are needful, but if love does not exist, which wins affection, your home is not happy. The kindly dispositions in our family are not only desirable, but indispensable; there is no domestic happiness without them. One must be courteous, and amiable to another. The law of kindness must be the rule, governing, moulding, harmonizing the family. There should be nothing hard, stern or unyielding, but mutual tenderness, mutual love. If these feelings be manifested in the family circle, there will be no canker worm at the root of domestic love and happiness.

What can be more desirable than peace in our dwellings—that peace which is the result of love, which springs from mutual respect and forbearance, which is associated with principle, which is the consequence of the fear of God, which is identified with filial and unwavering trust in him? A tranquil, happy home is the very emblem of heaven. The existence of happiness in a family is not to be concealed. The observant eye will soon detect whether happiness prevails in our homes. As long as we are happy, we are eager to announce it by smiles, bright looks, cheerfulness, energy and activity. Remember the world is peeping through your window, let it find you making happiness in your house.

TYRANNY OF FASHION.

RICHARD the Third had a humped back. And, as ancient story goes, humping became fashionable during his reign. The courtiers, the lords, the ladies, and the under-gentry, wore, each, a fashionable crook in the back; so that the English of that day were "a crooked generation" sure enough. Be this, however, as it may, our point of ridiculous absurdity it hardly exceeds what is frequently seen among ourselves.

Though we would be called a Christian people, it is a fact, as notorious as a fact, that an anti-Christian deity is worshipped among us in town and country, and by immense numbers of all classes and both sexes. Look where you will, you will see all ranks bowing, cringing, bending the knee—to what? To Fashion. This is the goddess of their idolatry. They yield implicit obedience to her laws, however absurd and barbarous; and though she changes as often as the moon, they follow her in all her changes, and ape her in all her freaks—humping when she humps. (N)

A CHILD'S DEFINITION OF HOME.—A little brother and sister were talking about home and their love for it. "I wouldn't swap my home for any other in the world," said the sister. "Oh, I don't feel so," was the boy's response. "I think that Willie A—'s home is as pretty as ours. It's bigger and it's got more things in it. I think I'd like to swap ours for that." "But would you like to give up your father and mother for his?" asked his sister. "And would you rather have his sister than yours?" "No, I wouldn't want that," said the boy. "Well to swap home means that," said the sensible sister, "for a home itself isn't a home. A home is your father and mother, and brothers and sisters, and everything you have in the house." Wasn't that well said? Isn't there a truth in those words which is hid from many of the wise and prudent and revealed unto babes? A well-furnished house is not a home. A home is the life and love which the family in the house represents. Who would swap his home for a rich neighbor's! (N)

He who's false to present duty breaks a thread in the loom, and will find the flaw when he may have forgotten its cause.

THIRTEEN Indian mothers in Alaska confessed to missionary that they had killed their girl babies to save them from the misery which they themselves suffered, and which is the lot of all women in most of the Indian tribes of that country.

PATIENCE is strength; impatience, weakness. By striving for patience you calm the soul, and even the patient body will help to give patience to the spirit. To sit quiet, even though what is going on wears you, is a gain. And for one thing, strive against the disposition to fly from one place to another. Wait; buds do not come up in a day, and you may yet find flowers where only a little while ago you thought it was all a barren waste. (N)

MANY professors, teachers and seekers remain on the outside and surface of things. They ornament the exterior of the ark, forgetting that God commanded Moses to first overlay the inside with gold, and afterwards the outside; like the Pharisees they make clean the outside, but leave the inside impure. They try to make a good appearance to men outwardly while inwardly they are full of self-love, self-esteem, self-conceit and self-will. (N)

A STORY is told of an old hunter in Michigan, who, when the country was new, got lost in the woods several times. He was told to buy a pocket compass, which he did, and a friend explained to him its use. He soon got lost, and lay out as usual. When found he was asked why he did not travel by the compass. He said he did not dare to. He wished to go north, and he "tried hard to make the right point north, but wasn't no use, 'twould shake, shake, right round, and point south-east very time." A great many people fail of the right direction in life for the same reason of the mishap which befell our Wolverine friend—they are afraid to take the Bible and follow just as it points. [N]

A DYING CONFESSION.—When Samuel Budgett, a distinguished English merchant, was dying, he said: "Riches I have had as much as my heart could desire; but I never felt any pleasure in them for my own sake, only so far as they enabled me to give pleasure unto others." This dying confession of a rich man is worthy of being noted and remembered by every young aspirant after wealth. It teaches the wholesome truth that none but the most sordid natures can find any pleasure in the mere possession of riches. No millionaire is happy merely because he owns a million of dollars. Ordinarily, that fact entails vexations, cares and duties which burden and disgust him. But when he uses money to feed the hungry, clothes the naked, and instruct the ignorant, and build up the cause of Christ, it becomes a fountain of blessing to his heart. (N)

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

At no time within our recollection was any publication awaited with such widespread and deep anxiety as has been the case with reference to the Revised New Testament. One of the most striking indications of this fact is seen in the publication of the entire Revision in several daily newspapers within a few days of the appearance of the first copies. The advance demand for the Revision is another proof of the general anxiety to secure the work. Before the day fixed for the sale of the first copies the New York agent for the English edition had received orders for about 400,000 copies. American publishers doubtless received even larger orders.

In this country the work was to appear May 17th, but on account of a fire the date was changed to the 20th. In England, however, the sales commenced on the 17th, and in Canada, it is said, even earlier, on account of some peculiarity of the copyright law there. A telegram announced that on Tuesday, May 17th, a copy, elegantly bound and printed in the highest style of the art, was presented to Queen Victoria, and that immediately thereafter the Revision was put into general circulation.

It was put on sale in New York on Friday morning, May 20th. Before night hundreds of thousands of copies had been sold and shipped. Nothing in the history of the book trade can be compared with the immense demand. But if this sale of English books was remarkable, much more so was the energy of a number of publicizing houses in reprinting copies from American presses. One firm, it is said, had five hundred compositors ready and had the whole reprinted before night. New York dailies published the whole in their Sunday editions, and the Times and the Tribune of Chicago did also, receiving the entire New Testament over the wires on Friday and Sunday nights. This was an exploit seldom, if ever quelled in the history of telegraphy, and the Tribune issue of thirty-six columns pages is one to prating. Had such marvels been foretold to King James' committee of revision it would have been counted incredible.

We have not yet had time to read the entire work, but judging from what we have seen of it, we think we will like the Revision. Most of the obsolete words are corrected, and the sense of some passages is made much clearer. In many instances the language is greatly improved so as to conform to the established usage of our language. Most of those not very familiar with the old translation will not likely notice the difference between that and the Revised. Below we give a few extracts:

Mat. 12: 43. But the unclean spirit when he goeth out of the man, he passeth through waterless places, seeking rest, and findeth it not.

Mat. 23: 19. O ye therefore, and make disciples of all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.

Mark 16: 9 to end of the chapter is given as doubtful, the translators saying that these verses are not found in the two oldest Greek manuscripts.

Luke 2: 1. The term taxed is rendered enrolled, thus making the sense more complete, while in Luke 3: 7 we read "ye offspring of vipers" instead of "ye generations of vipers."

Luke 10: 15. And thou, Capernaum, shalt thou be exalted into heaven? Thou shalt be brought down unto Hades.

In Luke 16: 23 the term hell is rendered hades, meaning the abode of disembodied spirits before the resurrection, instead of the place of final punishment after the resurrection.

John 3: 3. Jesus answered and said unto him, Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born anew he cannot see the kingdom of God.

The rendering in John 13: 2 is a little curious. It says: "and during supper" &c., rather indicating that while supper was going on, Christ arose and commenced washing his disciples' feet.

1 Cor. 11. We read a little different from our common version. We give the following:

Now I praise you that ye remember me in all things, and hold fast the traditions, even as I delivered them to you. But I would have you know that the head of every man is Christ; and the head of woman is the man, and the head of Christ is God. Every man praying or prophesying, having his head covered, dishonoreth his head, but every woman praying or prophesying with her head unveiled dishonoreth her head; for it is one and the same thing as if she were shaven. For if a woman is not veiled, let her also be shorn; but if it is a shame to a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be veiled. For a man indeed ought not to have his head veiled, forasmuch as he is the glory and image of God; but the woman is the glory of the man. For the man is not of the woman; but the woman of the man; for neither was the man created for the woman; but the woman for the man; for this cause ought the woman to have a sign of authority on her head, because of the angels. Howbeit neither is the woman without the man, nor the man without the woman, in the Lord. For as the woman is of the man, so is the man also by the woman; but all things of God. Judge ye in yourselves: Is it seemly that a woman pray unto God unveiled? Doth not even nature itself teach you, that if a man have long hair it is a dishonor to him. But if a woman have long hair it is a glory to her; for her hair is given her for a covering. But if any man seemeth to be contentious we have no such customs, neither the churches of God.

We close with the Lord's prayer, which in this translation is much shorter than the one to which we so long have been accustomed:

After this manner therefore pray ye: Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done as in heaven, so on earth. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we also have forgiven our debtors. And bring us not into temptation, but deliver us from the Evil One.

We would advise everybody to buy the book, read it carefully, and regarding its merits, be fully persuaded in their minds. J. H. M.

AMONG THE BROTHERS.

If there be any highest enjoyment on earth for a Christian, it is the company and association of his brethren—those of like precious faith. Brethren means more than a society; it means love, affection, concord, oneness; hence the joy when among brethren. Our heart's desire is, that we may live amongst the brethren, die amongst them, be resurrected with and sing the song of Moses and the Lamb with them in the Father's Kingdom.

On the 25th, accompanied by brother and sister Teeter, our mother, and daughter Vinnie, we had a pleasant ride across the beautiful country from Mount Morris to Leaf River, where we entered the cars for Chicago. While in the city by the kindness of we were sheltered and fed under his roof until the morning of the 26th. Bro. Fahney is as busy as ever preparing "Vitalizer" for the removal of the ills of the human body. We found him cheerful; and though he and family have not the meeting privileges that many others have, they seem to have lost none of their affection for the Brotherhood. We hope that there may soon be a place found in the city where meetings may be held. Jesus went to and among the people, and taught them; so should we; why not?

DUNKIRE, OHIO.

No sooner had the train stopped at Dunkirk, than we spied our beloved brother S. T. Bossmer, who had come up to meet us, and show us to "Brightside," which being interpreted means, the brilliant, beautiful home of Bro. B. and family. O that every family were so peaceful that it would turn out only the bright side, and show poor, sinful men and women, the loveliness of Christianity! Bro. B. needs no encomium from us; he is well known; and while he has grown a little older since last we met, he has lost none of his zeal and ardor for pure and undefiled religion before God and men.

In the afternoon of the 27th, Bro. B., invited us to go up into the western part of the town to help lay the timber part of the foundation of a new meeting-house. Throwing off our coats, we went to the work with a hearty good will, and rather enjoyed the labor. The foundation is sare, for it is built of rock and strong oak. The building is 36x54, and being in town, will enable those who seldom or never have the Word of God preached in all its soul-converting power, to come up and learn the whole truth. In the evening we were taken to the home of near the Eagle Creek meeting-house. O the beautiful home on the farm! We wished and wished that we could enjoy the free and undisturbed comforts and blessings of a home in the country away from the care, vexation and annoyance of public life. Perhaps some farmer would exchange places with us.

The 28th came in grand and beautiful, and we felt that the Feast at Eagle Creek would be one full of heart-joy to many of the born of God. These feasts are God's bounties given to us not by spoonful, but by the cart load.

THE HOUSEKEEPERS

of this church are Eleazer and Samuel T. Bosserman. An assistance in the ministry, they have Peter Fessel, J. C. Wilmore and Wm. Bradford. The former will soon move to Johnson county Missouri. There are about 175 members, and the prospects for more are encouraging. It is a matter of rejoicing to hear that some are being added to the church every few weeks. Where there are additions frequently, there love and zeal will more and more abound, and mischief makers grow pale and thin. There are many readers of the B. AT W., in this congregation, and we hope that in the future the crumbs from the Work may be so rich and plentiful as to give them strength for every trial, and enable them to persevere in the right. "Peace be unto the Brethren, and love with faith, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ."

THE LOVE-FEAST.

The saints at Eagle creek, were made glad in the Lord in seeing one soul come to the Lord at the close of the first meeting. Baptism before communion services gladdens the hearts of the communicants, and prepares them for a more complete enjoyment of the holy ordinance. The feast was rich, and all seemed to be strengthened thereby. We have thought that for the sake of tired and wearied mothers who have small children to look after, the service should be prompt, short and without lagging. And the Lord in instituting these ordinances did not, so far as we can learn, make them wearisome through want of system and order. He sent Peter and John before the time of the feast to prepare, so that when he and the others came they found all things ready. Promptness in the work, accompanied with solemnity and holy feelings, will greatly add to the success of a Love-feast. We shall long remember the Eagle Creek feast, as being pleasant and profitable. The order among the spectators was excellent. In this we praise them. Met again on Sunday for worship. The Lord gave us a good meeting.

The brethren in this church have a noble Sunday-school. The attendance is large, the interest and order excellent, and the whole work of the church. Bro. Andrew Banghman is Superintendent, and understands Sunday-school work, and so conducts the school as to bring out much good. May we hope that even of the abuses of this good work, shall ever spoil the efforts of the Eagle Creek church to instruct young and old in the way of the Lord. We left on the morning of the 30th for the debate at Daville. M. M. E.

THE PREACHERS MISTAKE.

J. H. MOORE, Dear Brother.—I have been buying tracts of the Brethren ever since I connected myself with them, and distributed them among my neighbors. To one Campbellite preacher I gave your little work on True Immersion traced to the Apostles, and he has purchased some of those works of Antiquity on baptism, and I am sorry to inform you that he showed two places, references of yours to Robinson, which seem to be errors, to which I now call your attention. Please see True Immersion, page 9, referring to Robinson, page 143 (also True Immersion, page 16, referring to Robinson, page 143. On page 23, you refer to Robinson page 69 was found correct. He is making quite a blow about it. C. P. LONO.

MOOREVILLE, ILL.

REMARKS.

IT seems that this Campbellite preacher is making a noise for no legitimate purpose. Our quotations from Robinson's work on baptism are correct. We have just re-examined them and fail to find any errors. Now in order to place the proof in reach of our readers we will take the pains to copy nearly one entire page from Robinson on Baptism, so that those who have our work on True Immersion may turn to pages 14 and 23 of the fourth edition and see for themselves. We give the following from Robinson:

"A font remarkable in ecclesiastical history, is that belonging to the church of Notre Dame, in which Clovis the first catholic, if not the first christian king of the Franks, was baptized, it stood without the church, and is mentioned here for the sake of observing, that two opinions of baptism generally received are mere popular errors, expressly contradicted by this as well as by other ancient and authentic monuments. It is commonly said, by such as allow immersion to have been the primitive mode of baptism, that dipping was exchanged for sprinkling on account of the coldness of the climate of some countries in conjunction with the Roman church. Here are two mistakes the one that dipping was exchanged for sprinkling by choice; and the other that coldness of climate was the reason. It is not true that dipping was exchanged for sprinkling by choice before the reformation, for till after that period the ordinary baptism was true immersion, and sprinkling was held valid only in cases of necessity. In this font Clovis was dipped three times in water at his baptism

(2). Modern French writers observe with becoming dignity, that their first Christian king had too much spirit to submit to profess a religion before he had examined whether it were true; and that Valast and Remigius first instructed him in the doctrine of the holy trinity, which he afterwards professed to believe by being thrice dipped at his baptism (3). More than three thousand Franks were baptized at the same season in the same manner: nor did sprinkling appear in France till more than two hundred and fifty years after the baptism of Clovis, and then it was invented not as a mode of administering baptism in ordinary, but as a private relief in a case of necessity."

If the book in possession of that Campbellite preacher does not read just like the above then it follows that he has the wrong book, for our extract is taken from the first edition of Robinson's work on baptism, an old book printed in London 91 years ago.

When we wrote True Immersion Traced to the Apostles we were very careful with the quotations and aimed to give them correctly in every instance, but it seems that this preacher, who is making so much noise, has had care to sustain and the only way he can do to make the least shadow of defence is to try to have it appear that we have quoted Robinson wrong, but in this he is sadly mistaken, and if the people had in their possession copies of Robinson's work they could at once see how he is trying to deceive them.

Suffice it to say that Robinson was one of the ablest Baptist historians of England. His object was to give a true history of baptism, and when he says that prior to the reformation [A. D. 1517] the ordinary baptism was true immersion, we accept it as truth coming from one who would not be expected to give false testimony against his own practice. J. H. M.

Who ever knew a lamp that never needs refilling, and that never needs trimming and other attention? But many professing Christians seem to act upon this impression; for they do nothing to nourish and sustain the holy life within their own souls.

The native Baptist church in a Karen village, India, took up a collection for sending missionaries to the Ka Khyens. The amount was so large that the missionary, Mr. Carpenter, who knew their poverty, declined to receive it. They insisted, saying: "We can live upon rats; but the Ka Khyens can not live without the gospel."

The world has read with inexpressible pain of the burning of lunatic asylums, where poor unfortunates perished. Poor-houses and orphanages also burn, and lives are lost. The Scotch excel us in building for the insane. We build high and large houses, with barred windows and heavy bolts upon doors; they build rows of cottages, and abolish all appearance of restraint. The insane are employed and amused, and are so interested as to show few signs of insanity. There is no visible restraint, though they are closely watched, and escape very seldom occur. It would be wiser for us to follow the Scotch plan than our own. Why not do it?

READ! READ!!

EVER awake to the interests of our readers. We have arranged with Bro. Stein for the exclusive use of his correspondence, to be published in the B. AT W. We are spending money to give our readers good reading matter, and we feel that they appreciate it by the manner in which they are extending the circulation of their paper. Bro. Stein needs rest, and also wishes to visit the land of Christ's work, and the birthplace of Christianity. He will no doubt entertain us with much that is useful and entertaining, and as it costs him considerable to travel and us to print, we kindly ask all our readers to do what they can to secure us new readers. This correspondence with our unparallelled club rates, should induce thousands to subscribe. Read our terms on page 15, and then visit your neighbors and tell them of the letters that will appear from Bible Lands.

AROUND THE WORLD.

PRESIDENT J. W. Stein left yesterday morning upon his European tour expecting to be absent until sometime next February. In his travels he will make the circuit of the Globe, returning home by way of China and Japan through San Francisco. The trip promises to be one of unusual pleasure and importance to Mr. Stein. At Berlin he will visit an uncle, present Mayor of that city, and also a cousin who is principal of one of the leading Colleges of Europe. All the principal countries in the old world will receive a visit including an extended tour through the Holy Land. In China he will visit a long absent sister working in the interests of the Baptist mission. During his absence he will contribute a series of interesting letters to the BRETHREN AT WORK, which will appear at an early date. These letters will be copyrighted and will afterwards be published by that paper in book form, no doubt presenting a volume of rare interest and profit. During the extended tour and stay of Mr. Stein, we wish him the best of health and a safe return to us.—Mt. Morris Democrat.

WE SHOULD GO TO A M, WITH FAITH.

BY J. S. FLORY

DOUBT unnerves us for the work before us; but a confident trust in God makes us strong, and through faith we can move mountains. Shall there be occasion for the Lord to say of us, "O ye of little faith?" God forbid! Let us, brethren and sisters, go up to our A. M., with strong faith in the mercy of God and his all-prevailing power, that he will give his people wisdom and nerve to do their duty. "If God be for us, who can be against us?" God will be for us, if we go up there trusting in him and his gracious love. This is no time to make concessions with any party who has gone so far as to reprove, rebuke, reproach and revile the more humble followers of Christ; it is not safe to let railers go on in the general tenor of their way. If there be such, we know what the Word says concerning them. Though dark, lowery, threatening clouds may appear, it is nothing more than what the church has always had to experience in a more or less degree. If we have faith, and acquaint ourselves as becometh the humble and meek followers of Christ, the clouds shall disperse, mountains will be cast into the sea and the white winged dove of peace will spread her blessed wings over the church. Let us have faith, courage and fortitude and we shall, through the mercies of God, come through all right, so far as it is possible for us to be in this world of sorrow. In the event there should arise, or appear an element unwilling to be obedient to the decisions of A. M., decisions that simply require an expression of humility and obedience to the eye note by which we may know whether genuine conversion has taken place or not, what to do if would they be to the church? We hardly think it possible that any one fully imbued with the adapting principles of the Gospel, including those of humility, self-abasement and obedience to the church, will ever think of severing themselves from the body, and unless they have the true spirit of obedience what use has the church for them? The world needs her own, and knows them too, no matter what the profession is. The church needs all her devoted subjects, and it is no great puzzle to know who they are. Look at the catalogues of the fruits that emanate from the spirit of truth which Christ promised to his followers, and the catalogue on the other side and he who runs may know (act judge) who are the children of God and who of darkness.

We are such a strong believer in God's power to save that we believe he will save his church, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against it. With this faith let us all go forth, and mighty works can be done through God. "Have faith in God," have faith in his people, yes, let us have faith in one another and we shall have occasion to rejoice. May God fit and prepare us for his use.

It is not good to criticise sermons too much; it is far better to endeavor to obtain from them all the information and edification you can.

An infidel said to a workman, sneeringly: "Your Christ was a carpenter." The reply he received was: "Very true, master; he was a carpenter; but he was a good one, mind you. He has placed some pretty hard knots out of us."

An exchange tells of a little girl who raised a turkey, sold it for one dollar and gave the proceeds to the cause of missions. This may serve as a mild hint to a few hundred who would like to help the Danish mission along by raising something for the Lord.

A SECULAR paper says: "There is getting to be less show and more business about war. France has abolished the drum, England has dropped the regimental colors and distinctive corps uniforms, while the bayonet, sabre, big epaulets, imposing knapsacks and bearskin caps are fast taking their places among the things of the past." We hope the time is not far in the future when war itself will take its place "among the things of the past."—Zion's Watchman.

THERE WAS NO JUDAS among the Marys and Matths whom Jesus selected as his friends. When he was crucified the devotion of the women did not abate. They came to his sepulchre early in the morning, and they alone were not incredulous about his resurrection. From the cradle to the grave, women are the best friends a man has.—Alliance.

FRANKLIN, when a boy made application in London for a situation as a journeyman printer. In answer to the inquiry "Can you, an American, set type?" he stepped to the case and set the following passage from St. John: "Nathaniel said unto him, Can any good come out of Nazareth? Philip said unto him, Cms and see." He obtained the desired position.

THE papers publish some horrible stories from Southern Russia concerning the outrages upon the Jews. A people who are guilty of such barbarities are unworthy as they are incapable of self-government. The strictness of the Jews often becomes extortion, but this is no provocation for a race war upon the rich and poor alike. It is said that the Nihilists are stirring up the agitation against the Jews, in order to bring about a conflict between the peasants and the government.

THE Christian Union says: A missionary was selling Bibles for the first time in a town in India. A Hindoo seeing the books, rushed eagerly forward, and said, "Have you a copy of the New Testament of Jesus Christ? How much must I pay? I will give you whatever you ask." On the money being paid, and the book given him, he said, "I have been looking for a copy of this book for years, and now, thank God, I have found it at last!" He did not stop, but went away eagerly kissing the book on all sides as he went.

THE Inter Ocean publishes a very encouraging report of the Mt. Morris College. It says:

Mount Morris College is prospering finely, having an attendance of about two hundred students. The grounds are in a beautiful condition, the lawns being as smooth as any parterre on the Hudson, and the young maples, elms, and evergreen in fine leaf. The institution is making an excellent reputation for thoroughness. The fine English, German, and classical library lately obtained by the college is now on the shelves, and would do honor to any institution in the land.

At the Union Sunday-school Convention of South Carolina, recently held, the venerable Rev. Dr. Martin, in his address of welcome (the joy note of the occasion), said: "You have this our beautiful city in a most auspicious period. If you were to go into any one of our churches and hear one of our ministers next Sunday, I venture to say you could not tell to what denomination he belongs. There is so much unity—such a feeling of oneness pervades all our churches."—Church Union.

The reason there is so much unity is because they all agree in leaving certain parts of the Gospel out of their preaching and practice. There was unity in the apostolic age too, but it was because they all preached the Gospel of Christ and not the Gospel of man.

Will some one explain Genesis 4:15—"And the Lord said unto him, therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Please explain Hebrew 8:1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different: "Von der Taufe, von der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLER.

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," was fulfilled on the day of Christ, and then stopped, or is it right to pray it yet? ANNA GUILERY.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 43rd. WM. LONG.

Does Gen. 4 infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living. If so, who was his wife? MARY C. NORMAN.

ITEMS.

RECENTLY we visited a few scattered members living in Cass county, Mo., held three meetings among them; four united with the church, making a little body of fourteen members. An organization will be effected in that county soon.

Our special District Meeting is in the past. The religious pulse, at times, beat pretty strong, but—in the end,—the fever cooled down, and the "budy religious" seemed convalescent at least, and we fondly hope, that after A. M., the body will resume its wonted health and activity again. Visitors from abroad were, Eld. Martin Neber, of Crawford Co., Kansas; J. Hollinger, Bourbon Co., Kansas; Bro. Stump and Samuel B-cker of Indiana; and Bro. Taylor of Ohio. An interesting Love feast was held at the close of the District Meeting.

Another church was recently organized in Saline county, and is under the care of Eld. D. L. Williams.

A visit is ordered to Dallas county soon, to more fully organize a church at that place.

WHO WERE THEY?

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CROOK.

THEY were all Jews. As a proof I will refer to the German and French translations,—German by Dr. M. Luther, French by J. F. Ostervald. In the German we read: "Es waren aber Juden zu Jerusalem, die waren (shu were) gottesfurchtigit Maenner," etc. We see only Jews who were devout men, or god-fearing men, mentioned here.

The French reads: "Or il y avait alors 'a Jerusalem des Juifs craignant Dieu," etc. Here we have but one sentence, terminating in speaking of the Jews like Luke 2: 25, at Simon: "Cet homme etait juste, et craignant Dieu." — That man was just and fearing God.

The English, Danish and Swedish texts include the same meaning but not so obvious. — These are the only texts I know.

There were, however, others dwelling at Jerusalem, not called "devout men," as we see in verse 14, where Peter addresses them thus: "Ye men of Judes, (in other translations "ye Jews" or "ye Jewish men,") and all ye that dwell at Jerusalem.

THE CAUSE OF LIGHT.

Gen. 1: 3, What was that Light, seeing the sun and moon were only made the fourth day? Some one please explain. LIZZIE B. MYERS.

LIGHT is the substance by which things are made visible to man. It also enhances the growth and perfection of the vegetable and animal kingdoms. Without light, the earth would soon become destitute of vegetation and inhabitants.

We read in the Word, that God is Light, and in him is "no darkness at all." 1 John 1: 5. The light here spoken of, far exceeds the light of the world or the common light of day. In Acts 26:13 we are told of a light appearing from heaven, above the brightness of the sun. One testified, "I could not see for the glory of that Light." "That was the true light that came into the world in the person of Jesus Christ, that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He answered, Are there not twelve hours in the day? If any man walk in the day, he stumbleth not, because he seeth the light of this world."

Here evidently is the light referred to in Gen. 1: 3. Before we further proceed, we wish to ascertain the condition of the earth at the first time. The sacred historian records in the first verse the creation of the heavens and the earth. In the second, the condition of the earth, as it would have appeared to man, had he been present with his Creator. "The earth was without form and void and darkness was upon the face of the deep."

We further find, by reference to the ninth verse that the earth was not only enshrouded in darkness, but also submerged in water, having passed through a long period, known as the "Chaotic Period." The apostle speaking of the earth in this state, says, "Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished; but the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store." 2 Peter 3: 6, 7.

Here is, we hope, sufficient evidence of the submergence of the earth by water. "And darkness was upon the face of the deep. As the earth was covered with water, so was the water covered or hid in darkness with mists and clouds of the darkest hue, covering as with a mantle the whole face of nature. Notwithstanding the cheerless condition to which the earth had been subjected, it was upheld by the word of his power, who brought out of chaos and confusion, order, system and harmony. — Under these circumstances did the Creator will that light should be, "And there was light." They are asked, "What was that light?" The light of day, from the sun in an obscured state, not in the power and splendor it attained on the fourth day, but sufficient that it was called day, and numbered with the days of the week. The chaos and confusion were receding and at each alternate day and fiat of the Almighty were order and system restored.

"And God made two great lights, the greater light to rule the day." We are informed that "in the Hebrew Bible the word here translated 'made' is not the same as that rendered 'created.'" It is a term frequently used in Scripture, and signifies constituted or appointed. (See also the Bible, by H. W. Morris, page 353.) So on the fourth day, the sun was made a more powerful light and fully constituted or appointed the luminary of the day, and the darkness that on the first day was separated from the light, since then retires before the approaching rays of his light, and the whole face of nature is beautified by his benign influence, and the inhabitants of the earth are not only supplied with his light, but also a bountiful supply for their sustenance, while journeying on this, the "holy-stool or the Almighty. It may be, you or some one else will differ widely with me on this subject. If I am wrong, set me right. M. MYERS.

THE NICOLAITANS.

Will some one explain Rev. 2:6—15. Who were the Nicolaitans, and what were their deeds and doctrines? A Brother.

THE Nicolaitans were the disciples of Nicholas, who was a Gentile by birth and was chosen one of the first seven deacons. [?] Acts 6: 5 Their deeds were extravagant and criminal. They did not abstain from a meat offered unto idols,—Acts 15: 20—and taught polygamy.

SALOME STONES.

THE church needs more preaching — not so much from the pulpit, as by the conduct and conversation of the laity.

It was one of the ancient ages who said: "The goodness of gold is tried by fire, the goodness of women by gold, and the goodness of men by women."

An important discovery has been made in Egypt. A telegram from Cairo says, "M. Maspero has just opened some more pyramids at Sakkara, including the tombs of kings of the fifth dynasty. The mortuary chapel of each contains about eighty square metres of the smallest and most closely written texts, giving precise details of the religious belief of that age. Except the finding of the Rosetta stone in 1799, no discovery in Egypt equals this in scientific value. The entrance passage is difficult and dangerous on account of the loose blocks that encumber it. All the Sakkara pyramids, about sixty in number, will be opened as soon as possible.

Correspondence.

Census Matters.

In making out a list for Northern Illinois District, I have the churches in order, furnished by Bro. Eshelman, and "Marshall church" occurs. No corresponding schedule was found.

I wrote Bro. Eshelman, who replied that C. S. Holsinger sent the report of the "Pigeon Creek, Marshall Co., church. This makes all all clear and shows how errors occur and how they are detected. Always give the official name of your congregation and avoid local names. Pine Creek and Vallon, Wisconsin are needed to complete Northern Ill.

The following returns are published with a view of getting the California church straightened up, if anything is wrong. Write promptly if there is anything to say.

CHURCH	NUMBER	BISHOP
1. Chepparal,	41	G. O. Wolf
2. El River,	45	J. Meyers.
3. Napa Co.,	33	Chas. Myers.
4. California,	63	G. O. Wolf.
5. Stanislaus,	32	P. S. Garmon.

The above schedules have been received and are verified by resident ministers. Explanations must be written direct and not printed, at least not now.

NUMBER III.

Arriving at Kansas City at night, May 16th, from Centerville, Mo., we put up at the Barcum Hotel. Next day we were invited to take dinner with friends in the city, and in the evening boarded the train for St. Jo, Mo.

Next morning we recrossed the Missouri river, and 55 miles West arrived at Merrill, Brown Co., Kansas. Soon we enjoyed the hospitality of Bro. W. J. H. Bannan and family, who live in town; also visited other members who reside in and near town. Meeting at night in the commodious school-house. There are near 200 brethren and sisters belonging to the district, it being the home district of the much loved and lamented Eld. J. Lichty. He is much missed, as he was indeed a pillar in the church. Some neighboring districts were also under his care. Next day Bro. Myers took us to Bro. Jacob Lichty's. Meeting at night, near by.

Next day the District Meeting of Nebraska, Northern Kansas and Colorado, convened at the home of Bro. Lichty. There was a good representation and a good meeting which lasted two days. The district was divided into three districts. Nebraska's district to herself, North eastern Kansas one district; and North-western Kansas and Colorado one district. A portion of the Southern District of Kansas will be added to the North east District of Kansas; at least the District of Southern Kansas so proposed. At our District Meeting it was agreed to join with the Southern District of Kansas, at their request to ask for A. M. for 1883. Biemark Grove, near Lawrence is the place proposed. It is said to be one of the best arranged places for holding an A. M. to be found. The proprietors offer the large pavilion and convenient surroundings free to the brethren, if they wish to hold their meetings there. It is immediately on the K. P. and A. & Topeka R. R., not far from Kansas City.

Sunday, 22nd, we were taken by Bro. Lichty to the school-house near Falls City in Nebraska, where we found an attentive congregation. Bro. Warner and Bro. Fry, ministers, live near.

This part of Nebraska and Kansas is a fine country; the land is rich, lays well and crops seldom fail. Land can yet be bought at reasonable prices. Crops look promising.

In the evening we returned to Morrill, which is a thriving town. Bid adieu to the dear members, whom we shall ever remember for their kindness. Soon we were on our way again to St. Jo, where we arrived at 9 o'clock at night. Put up at the International Hotel. This evening, the 23rd of May, we expect to leave this Valley for Iowa. Since leaving home, we have experienced considerable of damp, rainy and sultry weather, we are already longing for the healthy breezes of Colorado; however our trip so far has been pleasant. J. S. FLOYD.

Sad and Fatal Accident.

Wednesday forenoon, May 20th, while attempting to board the train at Allegripus, a few miles West of Altoona, Henry Eiler, son of Bro. Jacob and Lydia Resp, met with a dreadful accident. He missed his hold and was thrown under the train; his left leg was badly crushed from the ankle above the knee, and the right leg was badly mangled. As reaction did not occur, the physician deemed it imprudent to perform an operation. At 11:40, Wednesday night, God relieved him by death. Aged 11 years, 10 months, 26 days. His remains were brought to the Brethren church near Duncanville. Funeral services, Friday A. M., by Bro. David Sill, from 2 Cor. 8:9, after which the body was consigned to the tomb in the Brethren's graveyard. Certainly this is severe shock to the aged father who is nearly blind. The parents truly have our heartfelt sympathy. EMILY R. STENZEL.

A Few Kind Words.

Dear Brethren of Work:—

You are a welcome guest among God's people, here in this part of God's moral heritage, and also among the unregenerated. We know wherof we affirm; when we write thus.

We have had some to say to us, "We could not do without the paper." We know you are laboring hard for the salvation of souls. God will therefore bless you in this noble work.—Though clouds hang drearily over you, Jesus has promised to defend thee. He is a mighty captain and will lead to victory.

Therefore we can holdly say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what men shall do unto me. (Heb. 13: 6.) You have our heart-felt prayers. Yes, we know you have the prayers of all the saints of the Most High; for thou art a sweet messenger, bringing forth out of the great store-house of God, things new and old.

We believe in the power of prayer; for the prayers of the righteous availeth much. We have many examples set forth in divine revelation, where the prayers of God's people ascended to the courts of heaven, and God verified his promise in that he answered prayer. By terrible things in righteousness wilt thou answer, thou God of our salvation who art the confidence of all the ends of the earth and of them that are afar off upon the sea. (Ps. 65: 5)

Cornelius was a just man, one that feared God with all his house; he prayed to God always. Certainly this just man had faith in God. Hence God gave him assurance that his prayers and alms had come up before him for a memorial. (Acts 10: 4) We believe that God is the same God to-day and will answer the prayers of all who come to him in faith, believing that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

If there ever was a time in the history of our world,—that prayer was wont to be made, it is now. The apostle evidently foresaw the days of peril, (when looking down the shores of time), when men would be lovers of their own-elves, boasters, blasphemers, despisers of those that are good. (2 Tim. 3) O may we, with confidence call upon the Lord for help, seeing that he is the almighty God. Time and space would fail us to recount all the instances of success which attended those who cried to the Lord for help and can we suppose the compassionate heart of Jesus will feel less for us? Certainly not. Therefore let us by a continual waiting upon the Lord, keep on board the old ship of Zion.

The Old Ship is seaworthy, although she may be tossed to and fro under the mighty storms of persecution and also infidelity, she will ere long cast anchor on the other shore with her crew, there to dwell with Jesus evermore.

Let us, therefore, rest in the full assurance of hope, through faith, till we inherit the promises; till hope be exchanged for the full fruition of all those unspeakable glories which God hath prepared for them that love him.—This hope will resign the Christian to the will of God, believing that all things work together for good. This good hope taught St. Paul to reckon all is suffering slight and momentary. When poised in the scales with the far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, reserved in heaven for him, the Christian can say:

"Amidst temptations sharp and long,

My soul to this dear refuge flies;

Rope is my anchor, firm and strong,

While tempests blow and billows rise.

MARY C. NORMAN.

From Daniel Barnhart.—The Communion Meeting of the Eight Mile church, of the 11th of May, passed off in love and union; good congregations convened. Ministers present from different parts of the State, sixteen in all; one from Missouri. Ninety-six members commanded, and the best of order prevailed during the entire meeting. Brethren Robert Edgecomb, Sidney Hodgden and A. J. Hixon, met with us again on last Sunday and preached for us. So upon the whole, we had our best meeting. Our little church feels revived and built up in Christian fellowship. Prospects for the future are encouraging. My the grace and blessings of God rest upon us and all the Israel of God, is my sincere prayer.—Centropolis, Kan., May 19.

From S. T. Boaserman.—Angels again rejoice and saints on earth join in with the chorus, "Sinners are still turning to Christ." On last Saturday, at our council, one more was added to the fold by baptism. May the heaven still continue to work.—Dunkirk, O., May 23.

From J. Calvert.—Nothing of importance to report, only the weather is very dry. Crops look bar. A very sudden death occurred in this neighborhood. One of our stoutest and heartiest neighbors was out fishing with three of his little children, and fell dead in the boat. Brother Adams from Waterloo, Iowa, is here and preached a very interesting sermon for us yesterday from the sixteenth Psalm.—Warsaw, Ind., May 23.

From Jacob Hilderbrand.—Four more baptized in Pine Creek District. Others are coming nearer. Lord, be near thy people in these days of vanity and sin. May we worship the Lord, and serve him in humbleness of spirit.—Walkerton, Ind.

From N. C. Workman.—We have good news to tell the readers of the B. A. W. The good tidings are these: "None of our ministers in the Maple Grove church use tobacco in any form and this Spring two of our most inveterate tobacco chewers, have quit entirely. Others have cut down to about one-half the amount, they have been in the habit of using with a view of quitting all together. Oh may God give them strength to overcome the filthy habit. Brethren, pray for them that they may conquer. We sometimes hear men say, that they cannot quit using tobacco. We believe any one can quit. These Brethren quit without much difficulty. I hope I shall soon be able to inform you that all our dear members in the Maple Grove church have conquered the monster.

From H. P. Binkworth.—On Monday, the second of May, I left Brn. Arnsbarger's, two miles North of Guide Rock, Neb., for the Maple Grove Colony, in the North-western part of Norton Co., Kan. My mode of conveyance being almost apostolic, I did not arrive as quickly as I might have done, had I followed the modern way of car travel. On Saturday eve I arrived at the church, and found the Brethren in council. Met Sunday morning at 10 A. M. for divine services Sunday school at 3 P. M., and evening meeting at 7:30 P. M. We can truly say we were indeed surprised (although a Westerner) to find a thrift and energy that seems to abound amongst these Western brethren. The country is simply beautiful and claims are cheap. A railroad is now being surveyed through the southern part of the county.—the M. Pacific. Wheat looks well and all seem evidently satisfied with their new home, and labor for peace, union and harmony. Division and grumbling is not in the least encouraged, and if a chronic mischief maker has packed his goods and headed for the colony, I advise you to keep clear of the same, they evidently will not allow the same, and, Brethren, I am glad if it is not the church the place for good feeling? N. W., if you want to go further West, brethren are scattered each way and especially do we invite co-laborers in the ministry; for we will give you a chance to work each week. The calls are great and cannot be filled on account of work to support the family of the speakers. Brethren and sisters, don't entertain big fears, but come and see; for experience is worth a great deal and where there is a will I know there is a way.—Bell, Kan.

From N. C. Workman.—We have had splendid weather for several weeks past. Our Winter wheat was badly killed during the Winter; some places may make half a crop.—Spring wheat never looked better; the prospect is very flattering. Corn looks well and is growing rapidly. A great deal of breaking is being done in the colony this Spring and everybody seems to be hopeful and cheerful. Our church seems to be in a prosperous condition. Six have been baptized since the middle of March and several applications yet for membership. The Brethren have full houses of eager listeners, wherever they go to preach. Our ministers here have been preaching this Spring in localities where the Brethren never preached before. The doctrine seems to be strange to the people, but they seem to like it, and press the Brethren to come again, and make expressions like the following: "That's Bible doctrine, that's the kind of doctrine for me; never knew there was a people on earth that preached the doctrine. Pray for us!"—Bell, Kan.

From J. M. Ridenour.—Still consider me as your agent. I have sent you a list of six or seven from this place and hope to send you more. Move on in your mission, for it is a noble one,—calling back the prodigals. It was through the instrumentality of our church literature, that father always kept lying upon the table, that I owe my conversion. It enabled me to more clearly understand the Bible, as well as teaching me morally.—Garrison, Iowa, May 25.

From John A. Studebaker.—Our prospects for good crops are favorable now. What is all headed out; some corn plowing has already been done. Had a good soaking rain last week, the most at one time for two years. We have a good farming and stock-raising county. Our church here, has three speakers and about forty-five members. Any of the Brethren, desiring homes, would do well here in this part of Southern Kansas. Grenola is our nearest railroad station. This church, at the present time is under the oversight of Eld. Jesse Studebaker.—Grenola, Kan., May 25.

From James M. Neff.—On the 21st I had the pleasure of meeting with the Brethren of the Ogan's Creek church in council-meeting—Elders present from abroad were Jacob Funderburg, Benjamin Neff, and Joseph Ziegler. A spirit of love was manifested throughout the meeting.—Boam, Ind., May 23.

From D. Bowman.—Our quarterly church meeting came off yesterday. Everything passed off pleasantly and we felt that it was good to be there; expect soon to have our church house up. We are a little slow in building, but we are poor, and we want to pay as we go. We want a good, plain, substantial house. Our plan of working is, for each brother to head his own subscription and canvass his own neighborhood. The people are liberal; some give as much as ten dollars, a good many five and nearly all give some.

I write this to encourage other weak churches to try to build, as the people in the West are liberal. We are building a house 40x70, with two aisles, and have money enough to pay for all the lumber. We need several hundred dollars yet; but we intend to persevere in the work. If there are any Brethren or churches that would feel to make an investment in the Lord's treasury in Mo., and receive every in eternity and the thanks and prayers of a little band in the one faith? Here is an opportunity and I will acknowledge all donations in B. A. W. Brethren traveling west over the M. Pacific R. R., and stopping off at Tipton, dropping us a card; or taking the Osage Valley R. R., and stopping off at Jones' Pond, which is 14 miles of my house, will receive a hearty reception by the Brethren and shown over the county. Some of the best improved farms are for sale now. We have timber and prairie, rough and smooth land, springs and ponds and cisterns on our lands. Men can buy all prairie, or part prairie and timber. Quite a number of emigrants are coming in, but no brethren. We would be much pleased to have brethren to move in, who are in the order, or are willing to live up to the plain teachings of God's Word. As there are so many calls for ministers, we will make no special call; but if any would feel to come, we could give them employment, especially some well-established elder. Any brethren wishing to know our standing as a church, can write to J. S. or S. S. Mohler, or A. Hutchison. Cannot brethren Moore and Esbman visit us this Summer?—S. Martin's, Mo.

From John Wise.—The Feast in the Mulberry Grove congregation is among the things that have been enjoyed. We had happy meetings. God be praised. The membership was unusually well represented. Some loved ones from other congregations were present with us, and added to the enjoyment. We expected brethren to stop with us from the West, but were disappointed. Bro. Henry Jones was the only minister, from a distance, with us. The weather was dry and nice, and we had a happy meeting. May the bread cast upon the waters be gathered for many days.—Mulberry Grove, Ill.

"Do all the good you can, to all the people you can, as long as you can." This is the advice given by old Scotch David to his lassie, and is good for this side too, and, if joined with Watts' ch'd rhyme,—

I'll not willingly offend,
Nor be easily offend-d,
What is ill, I'll strive to mend,
And endure what can't be mended,— might serve us home or school or life motto to our young Americans.

"MANY ARE WEAK AND SICKLY."

BY N. J. HOOP.

SPEAKING of eating and drinking unworthily, Paul says: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." No doubt this was spiritual sickness, but since we have a page devoted to "Health and Temperance" we may speak of another very important matter, viz: The declining health of the women of this generation, women who should be in the prime of life, feeble and discouraged by suffering, notwithstanding the labor-saving machinery in use. Almost every mother seems to be tax'd beyond her strength. Reform is needed, and now let us begin searching out the real cause of our trouble.

Knowing that the precept of Christ and the laws of health are in perfect harmony, the questions arise, are we not offending God, and thereby bringing upon ourselves this feebleness? Is not the preservation of our health one of the most sacred duties? If then we submit to the teaching of the Scripture, we will observe simplicity in our dwellings, in our clothing, and in our food, and might find therein the secret of health, or has this generation observed these simple habits? No, our object has rather been to make as much ado over these things as possible; luxury has been the aim of most of us; our dwellings show it their structure, and furniture. Windows, were originally intended to admit light and air, but we put up blinds and curtains to exclude both, and make our houses something like caves. Then there is the carpet with the dust in it, and under it, so that we live in a dry dusty atmosphere, inhaling particles of wool and cotton, which float around us. Had we better not take up carpets when Spring comes, and live on the floor? This is almost too much to ask, but can we enjoy good health as we live now? The walls of our houses too, are not white-washed as in years gone by, but covered with fresh paper each succeeding year, which only covers and does not remove the fly specks and other accumulations,—the ceilings are painted, or calomined, which has not near the purifying effect of old-fashioned whitewash; so while we think we are much more refined than our grandfathers were, we are not half so cleanly. Perhaps we may find in our clothes another source of ill health; we wear thin garments with but little warmth in them looking much to our appearance, accepting that as a recompense for discomfort. Corsets are thought indispensable, while health journals have warned us against them for years. We hang heavy garments to our hips, when our shoulders should bear them, and our chests need the additional warmth.

We expose our heads to the cold wind; and then think the Lord has afflicted us with asthma, when he even gave us the means to prevent it, and we are too careless of health to use them.

We wear high-heeled and high-laced shoes, when we have proof that the high heels throw the hip joints out of their natural position, and produce what is thought to be rheumatism in the hips. I know of one case several years standing, which was cured in a very short time, by wearing at home and abroad, low broad heels and low-cut shoes,—low shoes are the warm-er in cold weather by allowing free circulation of the blood to the feet.

Our food, too, has become matter of vast importance, and yet too much money exists in its preparation. We toil over the hot stove in Summer to can fruit for Winter, scarcely having time to enjoy it in its season. Are we any better by so much Summer fruit eaten out of season? or is its perishable nature a sign to us that it is only good in its time. The common vegetables that keep with little trouble, are meant for our Winter use, and perhaps the cultivation would conduce to health as well as eating them; and when we consider that men enjoy good health in spite of eating and drinking we must conclude that our door fork is a stimulant to the body; but as we live, we have no time to be out; we have laid down the garden tools, and hung up the side saddle.

I have made some suggestions, let others take up the subject, and help to bring about some course of life, that will save our daughters from imbecility. It is a grave subject,—a sad comment on our boasted advancement in knowledge and practicality. Let us begin to think and to act.

DANGER OF CANNED FRUITS.

THE exigencies of trade appear to be in continual conspiracy against the health of the human family. Some sharp man once found out that it was economical in the manufacture of tin plate to introduce into it a small quantity of lead, and now the cheaper grades of tin are all adulterated in this way. This discovery is fraught with mischief, for when acid fruits come in contact with this mixture of tin and lead, they are liable to become contaminated and produce lead poisoning in those who eat them. The eating of fruits in this country is now carried on to a much greater extent than ever, and cases are frequently brought before the public in the newspapers, of injury done to families or individuals by eating fruit which has thus been preserved. For those who preserve their own fruit or vegetables, glass or earthen ware vessels are absolutely safe, and much to be preferred to those made of metal.—American Rural Home.

CONCERNING BEDROOMS.

A PHYSICIAN was lately called to prescribe for a young lady who lives in one of the most charming villages in Louisiana.

"Nothing the matter with her," she declared, "nothing but terrible headaches." Every morning she waked with a headache and it lasted nearly half the day. It had been going on for months—ever since they moved into their new house. The old doctor tried all the old remedies and they all failed. Rudiog and arobery were faithfully tested, study and practice were cheerfully given up. Nothing did any good.

"Will you let me see your bedroom?" asked the doctor one day, and he was shown up into the prettiest little nest imaginable.

Nothing wrong about the ventilation. The windows were high and broad and left open every night, the patient said. The bed stood in one corner against the wall.

"How do you sleep?" says the doctor.

"On my right side at the back of the bed, with my face to the wall. Lou likes the front best."

"The dickens she does!" says the doctor.

"So do I. Will you do me the favor to wheel the bed into the middle of the room and sleep so for a week? Then let me know about the headaches."

Doctors are so absurd! The middle of the room indeed! And there were the windows on one side, and the two doors on the other two sides, and the mantel with its Marmite lambrequin on the fourth side. There was no place for the bed but just where it stood, in the corner.

"Never mind! Sacrifice you lambrequin," urged the doctor—"just for a week, you know."

The lambrequin was sacrificed, the bed moved where it had free air on both sides, and the headache disappeared.

It may be only an exceptional delicate system that would be induced to actual headache by breathing all night the reflected air from a wall. Yet possibly some of the morning dullness we know of may be traceable to a like cause. At any rate, plenty of breathing space around a bed can only be an advantage to everybody.

In visiting three or four newly-built and beautiful houses, recently, the lack of a good place for the bed was the most striking feature of the bed rooms. Some of these rooms were finished in shining mahogany, ebony, or walnut. Some were hung with rich modern tapestry. All were elegantly and a few were airy. But in the most of the best of them, where was the bed to stand? A bay window, perhaps, would occupy the middle of one side, another window another, a door another, a mantelpiece another.—Sophy Winthrop, in Christian Union.

ON THE USE OF LEMONS.

THE lemon tree is a native of Asia, although it is cultivated in Italy, Portugal, and the south of France. In Europe, however, it seldom exceeds the dimensions of the smallest tree, whilst in the native States it grows to over 60 feet in height. Every part of this tree is valuable in medicine, though we rarely employ any of it but its fruit, that is the lemon itself. And every one knows how to employ this, as in lemonade, etc. There are three ways of making lemonade: To squeeze the juice into cold water, this is the shortest way; or to cut it in slices and let it soak in cold water; or to cut it in slices and then boil it. Either way is good. Lemonade is one of the best and safest drinks for any person, whether in health or not. It is suitable to all stomach diseases, is excellent in sicknesses—in cases of jaundice, gravel, liver complaints, inflammation of the bowels, and fevers. It is a specific against worms and skin complaints. The pulp, crushed, may also be mixed with water and sugar, and be used as a drink. Lemon juice is the best anti-scorbutic remedy known. It not only cures this disease, but prevents it. Sailors make a daily use of it for this purpose. I advise every one to rub their gums daily with lemon juice, to keep them in health.

ISAAC BILLMEIER.

HYLTON.—In the Knob Creek congregation, Washington Co., Tenn., May 6th, 1881, Elder Anstie Hylton, aged 83 years, 2 months and 9 days.

Grandpa was born in Floyd Co., Va. He was married in 1822 to Rachel Booth of Patrick Co. They were both brought up under the influence of the Primitive Baptists. But when they became concerned about their souls' salvation, they sought refuge with the Brethren. He proved so devoted to the Lord that by degrees he was promoted to the full ministry and his name is now recorded as one of the pioneer preachers of that day. In 1847 he moved to East Tennessee, where his companion preceded him to her reward.

In a few years he married sister Annie Bowman, who also preceded him to her long home. He leaves six children, 35 grand-children and 26 gr. 52-grand children to mourn their loss. He died as he lived,—full of faith in the all-redeeming blood of Jesus Christ, and his spirit has crossed over the dark river of death, and awaits our coming.

C. D. HYLTON.

Thus in a few transient hours these darling children were grasped, from their dear parents by that dread disease, scarlet fever. Little Mary repeated the Lord's Prayer, and sang the little hymns she had learned. Although in weakness, she sang lovingly and then God took them both home to sing more lovingly with the angels in heaven.

EMILY R. STIFLER.

NESB.—At Conemaugh, Cambria Co., Pa., March 2, 1881, of scarlet fever and lung disease, Jacob M. Nesb, son of H. D. (deceased) and sister Sarah Nesb, aged 24 years, 10 months and 10 days.

He belonged to the Lutheran church. His dear mother reached his sick-bed only a few hours previous to his death. His body was brought by private conveyance and was buried in the Brethren's graveyard, near Duncansville.

EMILY R. STIFLER.

ELLIS.—In the Coldwater church, Iowa, May 24, sister Ma. y Ellis, (the widow of Bro. B. Ellis, who died last January) aged 57 years, 9 months and 29 days. Occasion improved by Bro. J. A. Murray of Waterloo, to a large and attentive audience, from 2 Cor. 5: 1. ELIUT MOORE.

HOOVER.—April 11, 1881, in the Salomonic church, Huntington Co., Ind., Elizabeth Hoover daughter of Bro. Samuel and sister Hoover, aged 2 years, 4 months and 26 days.

Thus we again called upon to record the death of one so young, so gentle and so lovely. Her sickness was brief, when her happy spirit winged its way over the river, to sing the song of angels, the joyful refrain of "Safe at Home — "Nearth the quiet shades of the Salomonic cemetery she "sleeps, sweetly sleeps," from which she will never wake to awake, and the wind will play its requiem over her grave, until time shall be no more. Funeral services conducted by Daniel Shidler and the writer. JOHN A. EKENBERY.

Life in the Polar Regions.

It is impossible to form an idea of a tempest in the polar sea. The icebergs are like floating rocks, whirled along a rapid current. The huge crystal mountains dash against each other backward and forward, hurting with a roar like thunder, and retreating to the charge until losing their equilibrium, they tumble over in a cloud of spray, upheaving the ice-fields which fall afterward like the crack of a whip-lash on the billowing sea. The sea gulls fly away screaming and often a black, shining whale comes puffing to the surface. When the midnight sun grazes the horizon, the floating mountains and the rocks seem immersed in a wave of beautiful, purple light.

The cold is by no means so insupportable as is supposed. We passed from a heated cabin, at thirty degrees above zero to forty-seven degrees below zero in the open air without inconvenience. A much higher degree of cold becomes, however insufferable, if there is wind.—At fifteen degrees below zero, a steam, as if from a boiling kettle rises from the water. At once frozen by the wind, it falls into a fine powder. This phenomenon is called ice-smoke. At forty degrees, the snow and human bodies also smoke, which smoke changes into millions of tiny particles, like needles of ice, which fill the air, and make a light continuous noise, like the rustle of a stiff silk.

At this temperature, the trunks of trees, burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. Knives break in cutting butter. Cigars go out by contact with the ice on the beard. To talk is fatiguing. At night the eye-lids are covered with a crust of ice, which must be carefully removed before one can open them.

Two strong shocks of earth quake occurred on the Island of Ohio, May 20.

THE BLISSFUL LAND.

Know'st thou that land of bliss
Where beauty finds her home,
The land the sun doth kiss
And joyous creatures roam?
In tropic seas this land
Like shining pearl is set,
And her bright coral strand
By laughing waves is met;
The palm doth raise its head,
The fern tree spread its leaves,
And soft the brilliant bed
The flowering vine there weaves.
All fruits do their abound
In juicy sweetness rare,
And lovely birds are found
Filling with songs the air.
No beast of prey their lives,
Nor ugly frog or snake;
Nature her best there gives
As Eden fair to make.
Soft breezes blow all day
From the bright, gleaming sea;
At night the cooling spray
Gladdens each bush and tree.
No sickness e'er is known,
No pain was ever felt,
And to no sigh or groan
Was being ever lent.
Love here its home doth find,
And peace and plenty dwell,
Such blessings God designed
The joy of life to swell.
This isle set in the sea
Like to a jewel bright,
Know'st thou where it may be,
This land of pure delight?
Seek thou where thou thy heart,
By seeking thou may'st find
That when-so'er thou art,
If peace dwell in thy mind,
If love within thee live
And in thy life shines bright,
The blessings they will give
Will fit thee with delight;
Around thy path will lie
This beautiful island fair,
And ever to thine eye
Its beauties will be near.
This island is the mind
By peace and love possess'd;
Seek there and thou wilt find
The region of the bless'd.
Love warms this beautiful land,
The sea of peace surround,
And on its quiet strand
All blessings may be found.

THE HANGER AND BASHOR DEBATE.

THE long-looked for discussion at Danville, Ohio, began on Friday morning, May 27, on the following propositions:

1. The action of baptism, as taught and practiced by the Christian church, is authorized by the Gospel.

2. Feet-washing is commanded of God as a church ordinance.

3. The doctrine of the Lord's Supper, as taught and practiced by the Christian church, is authorized by the Gospel.

4. Baptism as commanded by Christ and practiced by the apostles is in order to the remission of sins.

Elder A. C. Hanger chose as his moderator, Elder M. M. Lohr of the Christian or New Light church, Bro. Bashor chose Bro. J. H. Worst, editor of the Gospel Preacher, and these two chose Paul Weiker, a member of the Universalist church as referee or chief moderator.

The discussion was held in the Danville church, one-half mile south of Rosstown. The house stands on a hillside overlooking a beautiful country, and surrounded with many of nature's charms, so that one's heart is gladdened as he goes up to worship the living God.

Among the many brethren present were J. W. Beer, John Hunsaker, W. C. Murray, Josiah Keim and J. H. Worst, on the other side were Elders Marvin, an old debater, Manville, Black, Lohr and several others whose names we have forgotten.

We did not reach Danville until late in the evening of the 30th, hence did not hear the first three propositions debated. On Tuesday morning at 10, the house was well filled, and after singing and prayer, Bro. Bashor opened the discussion by explaining the proposition (4th) and sending forth a few neatly-put points. Elder Hanger, a man upwards of sixty years of age, finely built, well developed intellectually, and in manners and courtesy well up in the scale, arose to present the negative of the proposition. He understands discussion, having met fifteen or twenty men thus far in public debate. It will thus be seen that Bro. Bashor had to meet an experienced debater, and a man who had the prestige of having defeated the present editor of the American Christian Review at Danville a little more than a year ago. It required nerve to meet the leading debater of a church in a community where he seemed to have won a victory over an able opponent only a short time ago. Under these circumstances the weight of favor would incline to Elder Hanger; but Bro. Bashor, with the strength of God on his right and on his left, entered the contest hopefully, and laid down the declarations of the Gospel so clearly and forcibly that no lover of the truth need be ashamed.

We are glad to say to our readers, and we say it not to puff up our brother, that the doctrine of the Lord Christ was ably defended and vindicated. Thank the Lord that there are brethren who can meet and ably and dignifiedly defend the whole truth. Bro. B is quick to see a point. He clothes it with good common sense language and drives it home to the head and heart with such force that ignorance wince, yields and vanishes.

The debate closed June 1st at noon amid a general good feeling. In fact all though the discussion the disputants manifested the most kindly feeling and Christian bearing towards each other, and as they conducted their work in such a lovely manner, it had its effect on the audience which manifested attention and kindness. We never saw a debate close with such good feeling on all sides. The general expression was, "How nicely the discussion was conducted." Some disinterested parties (men of intelligence) say they are now convinced that the Brethren's position is Scriptural, and believe good will result from this discussion. Some of the Elder's members favor Feet-washing and such were pleased with Bro. Bashor's arguments on Feet-washing. We are satisfied—yea pleased with Bro. Bashor's part, and think we express the feeling of the Danville church when we say that the Brethren's position of the several propositions was ably sustained. We might give the views of a number of disinterested parties, who expressed themselves freely as being pleased with our brother's part of the work, but think they can tell it much better themselves. Now please do not get the idea that Bro. B. did this work in his own strength. We believe God helped him; and that he did the work according to the ability which the Lord gave. As Bro. Beer remarked, "We are glad we were there." We have now heard the strong points against the Gospel theory that baptism is for the remission of sins. So long as a minister will make no distinction between an act of God done in heaven for man, and the thing done in the heart of man, he can not fit his Scriptures together in harmony. Bro. Bashor did make this distinction so plain, and proved it so conclusively that his opponent seemed not a little puzzled and considerably annoyed. He was smitten where he least expected it and the result was, his points were dulled at the first blow. Bro. B. would not walk in the path laid out for him by the Elder, but struck into new fields, and brought up new pebbles of truth in such a manner that the Elder thought it was "too bad." Well it was "bad" for the Elder, but that was owing to his getting on a "bad" theory and persistently refusing to leave it for a better one. Bro. B. told him the difference between them was that he was pleading and advocating the whole Gospel, while the Elder was working for only a part of the Gospel, and the Elder did not deny it. It is hard work to pull a wagon with one front and one hind wheel off, and it seemed the Elder realized that three wheels of his wagon were wanting before he got very far into the debate.

THE REALITIES OF WAR.

CAN any one read the following and then say that war is not cruel? What think you of Christians, who claim to be peace-makers, engaging in cruelties like this?

A popular writer thus describes a battle:—"We have been fighting at the edge of the woods. A moment ago the battery was a confused mob. We look again, and the six guns are in position, the detached horses hurrying away, the ammunition chests open, and along our line runs the command, 'Give them one more volley, and fall back to support the guns.' We have scarcely obeyed when boom! boom! opens the battery, and jets of fire jump down and scorch the green trees under which we have fought and struggled. The shattered old brigade has a chance to breathe, for the first time in three hours, as we form a line and lie down. What grim, cool fellows those cannoners are! Every man is a perfect machine. Bullets splash dust into their faces, but they do not wince. Bullets sing over and around, they do not dodge. 'There goes one to the earth, shot through the head as he sponged his gun. That machinery loses just one beat, misses just one cog in the wheel, and then works away again as before. Every gun is using a short fuse shell. The ground shakes and trembles, the roar shuts out all sound from a battle-line three miles long, and the shells go shrieking into the swamp to cut trees short off, to mow great gaps in the bushes, to hunt out and shatter, and mangle men until their corpses can not be recognized as human. You would think a tornado was howling through the forest, followed by billows of fire, and yet men live through it—aye, press forward to capture the battery. We can hear their shouts as they form for the rush. Now the shells are changed for grape and canister, and the guns are fired so fast that all reports blend into one mighty roar. The shriek of a shell is the wickedest sound in war, but nothing makes the flesh crawl like the demoniac singing, purring, whistling grapeshot, and the serpent like hiss of canister. Men's legs and heads are torn from bodies, and bodies cut in two. A round shot or shell takes two men out of the rank as it crashes through. Grape and canister mow a swath and pile the dead on top of each other. Through the smoke we see a swarm of men. It is not a battle line, but a mob of men desperate enough to bathe their bayonets in the flame of the guns. The guns leap from the ground, almost, as they are depressed on the foe, and shrieks and scream and shouts blend into one awful and steady cry. Twenty men out on the battery are down, and the firing is interrupted. The foes accept it as a sign of wavering and come rushing on. They are not ten feet away when the guns give them a last shot. That discharge picks living men off their feet and throws them into the swamp, a blackened, bloody mass. Up now, as the enemy are among the guns. There is a silence of ten seconds, and then the flash and roar of more than 3,000 muskets and a rush forward with bayonets. For what! Neither on the right nor left, nor in front of us is a living foe! There are corpses around us which have been struck by three, four, and even six bullets, and nowhere on this acre of ground is a wounded man! The wheels of the gun can not move until the blockade of death is removed. Men can not pass from caisson to gun without climbing over rows of dead. Every gun and wheel is smeared with blood; every foot of grass has its horrible stain. Historians write of the glory of war. Burial parties saw murder, where historians saw glory."

From the Gospel Teacher.

GREEK CHURCH'S VIEW OF SINGLE IMMERSION.

BY JAMES CHRYSAL.

Dear and esteemed Friend.

YOUR welcome letter is received. In response to your question in regard to the Greek Church's view of single immersion, I would say that it holds to the seventh canon of the second ecumenical synod which was held at Constantinople, A. D. 381, which rejects as invalid the single immersion of the Eunomians which was given not unto the Trinity as demanded by Matt. xxviii. 19, but into the name of Christ. See that canon quoted by me in my History of the Modes of Christian Baptism, page, 94 and what Theodoret writes of their error. That canon is in the law still.

Of course, as no single immersion into the Trinity is mentioned, at the earliest, till the time of Gregory I, Bishop of Rome, A. D. 590-604, if his letter to Leander, bishop of Seville is genuine; the question of admitting it could not arise either among the Greeks or among the Latins, till his day. Indeed, as I will show if I ever get a publisher for the second edition of my History of the Modes of Baptism, Alcuin of the eighth century, after an examination, denied that the alleged letter of Gregory bishop of Rome, to Leander bishop of Seville, was written by him. So that the first clear reference to a single immersion into the Trinity is not before the seventh century, or if we are not convinced that the utterance on that alleged mode of the Fourth council of Toledo is genuine, then we must say that the single dip into the Trinity is not found till the eighth century. And there is so much of the spurious in Spanish councils of the period before the False Decretals of Isidore, that is before the ninth century, that I do not now feel absolutely certain as to the genuineness or spuriousness of that utterance of the Fourth council of Toledo in favor of single immersion into the Trinity. (See under "Toledo" as to what was my opinion twenty years ago, when I did not know some facts which I do now.) Yet I admit it under reservation till all the facts on both sides as to its genuineness are put before us.

But the Greeks proper of the present day reject as invalid single immersion, as well as pouring and sprinkling. By the Greeks proper I mean, the four patriarchates, Constantinople, Alexandre, Antioch and Jerusalem, and the church of free Greece.

But in Russia, for what the Oriental call oikonomia, that is, management, or expediency, or by the dispensation, the Oriental church has since A. D. 1667, admitted those who were sprinkled or poured by the Protestants or by the Romanists, as baptized. I suppose that they would also receive by oikonomia, as they call it, single immersionists also, though as there are hardly any single immersionists in Russia, and those only of late existence there, they could hardly have had much if any occasion to deal with this matter. The single dip sects of our day did not arise till the seventeenth century, and have been mainly confined to England, the United States, and the British colonies.

I would say that the Greek church receives as binding what is called canon 60 of the Apostles, though it is not a genuine work of the Apostles. Yet it is early, and what is of chief importance regarding our inquiry, it is still their law. That demands trine immersion, and condemns the only kind of single immersion which it mentions. Moreover, the Oriental church everywhere mentions TRINE IMMERSION ABOVE in the rubrics of its baptismal offices. That is, it is the only mode mentioned in the rubrics of the Greek church, of the Russian church, and of every other part of that communion. And by those rubrics every presbyter and every bishop is ordered to baptize. Consequently, every child of a Romanist or Protestant born after its parents were admitted into the Greek church, the Russian church, or into any other part of the Oriental church in communion with Constantinople, must be baptized by trine immersion. One reason which may have led the Russian church to change its old custom, was the desire of making the entrance of Latins and Protestants into its pale more easy, and so to draw them in.

But the Russians as well as the Greeks formerly rejected all Latin so-called baptisms. The Greeks condemned single immersion from the time they first learned of its existence. Gieseler (Smith's edition, Vol. 2, page 226, note 10.) quotes a letter from Michael Cerularius to Peter of Antioch in the eleventh century in which he blames the Latins for which I presume was for the first time known to the Greeks, that is their baptizing by single immersion. For among their faults he mentioned that as follows:

"And as some have assured us, when they [that is the Latins] perform the divine baptism also, they baptize with [but] one immersion [or "with one dip"] those who are to be baptized." Gieseler (Smith's edition, Vol. 2, page 226, note 10.) adds, "This was really a custom in Spain." He refers in proof to Gregory I, bishop of Rome, book 1, epistle 41, and to the canon 6 of the Fourth council of Toledo in Spain which was held A. D. 633. He adds that single immersion was condemned by Alcuin in his epistle 75, and justified by Walefrid Strabo, chap. 26, on church affairs. See under those names in the index to my History of Modes. The single dip however, was not yet the general rubrical mode of the Occident, for the offices show that in most cases the trine dipping alone was mentioned in the eleventh century in Michael's day.

Peter in his reply to Michael evidently supposed that the single immersion which had arisen in the west had come from the Arians, one of the more radical of whom, Eunomius, had as Theodoret states, originated it, (see Theodoret quoted, page 78 of my History of Modes of Baptism). And Peter writes as though he were in doubt as to whether any such mode as the one dip existed among the Westerns. It was evidently a new thing to him. For writing of that novelty, and of the interpolation of the words, "And of the Son," added to the clause, "And [I believe] in the Holy Ghost, the Lord, the Quickener, who goeth out of the Father," in the creed of the whole church, so that the last part shall read "goeth out of the Father and of the Son." Peter says, page 152, "But an evil thing and the worst of evil things is the addition in the holy Symbol," [that is in the creed as we say.] Page 153, "But, as seems likely, the Romans have lost the copies of the First synod in Nices, forasmuch as the nation of the Vandals had dominion over Rome for a long time: from whom perhaps they" [that is the Romans] "learned to Arianize also to perform baptism by one dip if it be true" [that they do so] "as thou hast declared." See the Greek of the above in Smith Gieseler's Church History, Vol. 2, page. 227, note 10.

Humbert, the Roman legate sent to Michael Cerularius, tells us (Smith's Gieseler's Church History, Vol. 2, p. 226, note 8) how the Greeks had acted regarding the Latin baptisms by single immersion, which Michael patriarch of Constantinople, and Peter patriarch of Antioch so pointedly condemn above; for Humbert writes: "Like the Arians they" [the Greeks], "re baptize those who have been baptized in the name of the Holy Trinity, and especially the Latins; like the Donatists they assert that, with the exception of the church of the Greeks, the church of Christ, and true sacrifice and baptism have perished from the whole earth." In this last passage I have translated from the Latin given by Gieseler as above.

Since then the Greeks, when entirely free from fear of the Latins, have been ordinarily disposed to carry out their own law. And it should be remembered that all along from the apostolic age till this very hour, their law and their rubrics specify trine immersion, and trine immersion alone for their own people.

The praxis, that is the body of their canon law put forth at Athens, Greece, A. D. 1841, as its title page shows, with the approval of the patriarch of Constantinople and of the Holy Synod, teaches under what is called canon 50 of the apostles (page 37-39), that the trine immersion is essential to baptism.

And when William Palmer, a Church of England clergyman, consulted Aathimus, patriarch of Constantinople as to the validity of alleged baptism by single immersion, by pouring and by sprinkling, and had pleaded for their validity, though he admitted their irregularity, that patriarch in one of the lesser or informal synods held on Lord's day, October the 8th, 1851, answered as follows, as did his bishops who composed that council: "There is only ONE baptism. If the Russians allow any other, we know nothing of that, and do not recognize it. Our church knows only ONE baptism, and that without any detraction, addition, or change whatever.' * * * [And then, turning and bowing slightly to the bishops right and left of him from his corner of the divan.] 'This is the answer, is it not?' To which they expressed their assent, either verbally or by a similar inclination in return." The above is the story as told by William Palmer himself, pages 178-184 of his Dissertations on the Orthodox Communion. His memorial to which the above quoted reply of the patriarch Anthimus and his synod is an answer, was presented "July the 24th," new style, 1851; on page 180 he expressly mentions Gregory the First's (bishop of Rome, A. D. 590 to 604,) approval of single immersion. But the patriarch and his synod rejected every thing but trine immersion.

Whether the Russians will go back to their old custom and ask all who have not had trine immersion to receive it, remains for the future to decide. At any rate their conduct on this point is not according to the truth of the Gospel, nor in accordance with the law and practice of the one, holy, universal, and apostolic church from the beginning. But would to God that it and all other parts of the Oriental church would purge away their corruptions, and return to the true faith in everything. As a communion it has been much more careful of baptism and some other things than the Romish communion, but has been equally corrupt with it in others. Oh! that it may preserve all that is good that it possesses, and restore all the good that it has lost.

PURE VS. SPOTTED RELIGION.

BY JAMES M. NEFF.

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."—James 1: 27.

THOUGH the term "Religion" is only found five times in the New Testament, yet we recognize it as a subject of great importance. Properly, religion, means any system of faith or worship. When we scan the pages of ancient and modern history, and get a faint idea of the vast number of different sects of religion, we are almost led to exclaim, that their number is legion. But when we look at the subject from a proper standpoint we learn that really there are only two distinct classes. All the religions that are held forth as practiced—let them be what they may, must be included in these two classes. They must be either true or false; "pure" or "spotted;" They must either have a good tendency or a bad one; They must either be the religion of Jesus Christ, founded upon the solid truths of the Bible, or that which is built upon the deceitful sands of false theories. Then we have the two theories. Of the first class there is but one kind, and that is the religion of Jesus Christ. But of the second class there are many. Yes, dear reader, the religion of Jesus Christ is the only pure religion, but there are many spotted religions. There are so many shades of religion around us, if we are not very careful, we will not detect those that are full of spots. Oh, for God's sake! brethren, let us be awake to our best interest; let us take this home to our own hearts, and see that our characters are free from these awful stains. We should carefully examine and scrutinize every minutiae of our hearts, and eradicate every thing from them that would have an evil tendency, every thing that is of a carnal inclination; every thing that will tend to lead our minds away from the pure and undefiled religion of Jesus Christ. We see that the subject of religion is one of great importance. Of the vast number of different sects of religion, there is but one class that will meet the approbation of God; And that is, as we have said before, that which is based upon the principles of the Gospel. There is only one way to heaven. Christ says, "I am the way." And nothing but pure and undefiled religion will take us safely through that narrow path. We must acknowledge and obey the whole Gospel, if we would inherit eternal life.

But, dear brethren and sisters, do not get under the impression that the profession we make will carry us through. There are great many people in our time, who are making a pure profession but their religion is spotted, it is not the profession but the religion of Christ that will wait us safely and securely into the harbor of God's blessed presence. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 7: 21.

Hence we are compelled to acknowledge that there is a work to be done while living here on the foot-stool of Jehovah, if we would have our names written in the Lamb's book of life. Yes, dear brethren, God intended that we should be engaged in his service. Then it is not necessary for any one to ask, "What shall I do to be saved." God intended that we should be engaged; and he most unquestionably has told us what to be engaged in. He has made the way possible for us to attain to the tree of life. He has shown us the path that leads to the eternal haven of rest, where we may forever enjoy the presence of those that have gone before. He has left a guide by which we must all be directed, if we expect to reach the end sought for. But God did not intend that we should take just such a part of that guide as should suit our own carnal desires and inclination; but he meant that we should obey every word that he has left upon record in his blessed book. He meant that we should receive with meekness his blessed word; and obey from a pure heart every principle laid down therein. "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." James 2: 10. Hence we see that in order that our religion may be pure; that we may be true followers of Christ we must acknowledge every command to be essential to salvation. And not only that, but we must let our light shine accordingly. We must keep ourselves unspotted from the world. Then let us go on in the service of God. Yes, then dear brethren, the light of our Christian conduct should radiate from our characters, as the rays of the noon day sun, and diffuse itself on all the surrounding world. Oh, do think of the blessed promises that God has given to those that obey his holy will! By the grace of God, brethren, let us ever cling to that pure and undefiled religion, which will at last land us home in heaven, where we may forever bask in the light of God's countenance, and sing the song of the redeemed through all ages of eternity.

VERY touching and tender was the memorandum left by the late Dean Alford: "When I am gone, and a tomb is put up, let there be, besides the indications of who is lying below, these words and these only: 'The inn of the traveler on his way to Jerusalem.'"

WANT OF WISDOM.

BY VINA ELLER.

"O that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end!"—Deut. 29: 29.

HOWEVER it has been many long years ago, when Moses deemed it necessary to make use of the language above quoted; seeing the condition of the people, and being sensible of the terrible judgments which in the event of their continued disobedience would condemn them in the future; hence expresses his sympathy in the language, "O that they were wise." Surely Moses must have felt a great concern for their future welfare, for how could he have been otherwise, knowing the consequence of their continuance in sin. Although many generations have passed away since then, under similar circumstances, yet we to-day are made to wonder, when we see how many unwise people set in this enlightened age, many that we feel a deep and special concern for; seemingly, are intelligent men and women; yet we must conclude they are spiritually blind. They seem to be contented with what they are told by their Pastor, whether it is in harmony with the Gospel or not. Others say, we have been taught thus, and so. Father and mother have raised us so, and we think it would be wrong for us to do different from their teachings. Paul tells us, "They that measure themselves by themselves, and compare themselves among themselves are not wise." 2 Cor. 10: 12. We do not question people in regard to their honesty; but we do entertain fears of their unwise information.

The Savior says: "Whosoever therefore shall break one of the least of these, my commandments, and shall teach men so; he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 19. How can we but exclaim, in the language of Moses: "O that they were wise, that they would consider their latter end!" However there are many who are unwise; yet we rejoice to know there are some who are wise, and have lately been made willing to prepare for their future destiny. Last Winter during a very interesting series of meetings, held here in our congregation, by Bro. I. J. Rosenberger, there were twenty souls made willing to come out upon the Lord's side; and we believe, there has been seed sown upon good ground, that has not as yet manifested itself; but hope it may be as "bread cast upon the waters, to be gathered many days hence." Our meetings were exceedingly interesting and encouraging. Oh how grateful we should feel for such blessed sanctuary privileges, which we enjoy here in this world! believing it to be only a foretaste of the felicity of the saints in heaven; knowing that the faithful shall be "as the stars of the sky, in multitude, and as the sand which is by the sea-shore; innumerable." Heb. 11: 12. O! we trust that we, who have enlisted under the banner of King Emmanuel, may live faithful unto the end, and by our combined efforts, persuade many others to join our happy pilgrim band; that when life's journey is o'er, we may join that innumerable host of angelic beings and walk the golden streets of the Beautiful City of God.

RE-BAPTISM.

BY JAMES EVANS.

WITHIN the circle of our acquaintances are some who endorse the doctrine and practice of the Brethren, and would unite with them if they could be received without a re-baptism. We do not refer to those who have been immersed by Baptists &c.; but those who have received trine immersions as Matt. 28: 19, requires. As we have had some personal experience in this matter, we will try and remove the difficulties that stand in the way of such persons coming among us. Our practice is to baptize all who come to us, and our reasons are the following:

1. Order is essential to the existence and welfare of any organization. Order secures unity of practice, and crushes out a schismatic spirit. We refer to the external order of the church. Everything that affects our conduct in the world is a legitimate subject of church order. To secure this unity of action, all are received alike. All promise non-conformity to the world, non-resistance, refusal to swear, and to be governed by Matt. 18: 15-18. To secure this, certain persons are entrusted by the church to enquire into the willingness of candidates to comply with all things Jesus has commanded. Every member of the church is not permitted to baptize, lest confusion might follow. Now if we received persons among us who were baptized by ministers of those faith we know nothing, and some have received baptism by irresponsible persons, would we not open a door for disorders of all sorts? How could we prevent any private brother administering baptism to any he might deem a fit subject, if we received persons baptized in a similar way? If it is hard to refuse fellowship to one who may have received baptism as sincerely as ourselves, would it not be worse to tear down our bulwark against the introduction of lawlessness?

2. Impartiality forbids us. We are to do nothing by partiality. Those whom we baptize promise to obey Matt. 18: 15-18, to make this the rule of their life. Those whom we would receive made no such promise, hence partiality.

3. There are trine immersionists who think we may dress like the world, if these were admitted, they would help to efface the line between us and the world.

4. Many trine immersionists are either ignorant of, or hostile to the Brethren. Evidently their baptism did not bring them into fellowship with us. When their little organizations came to naught, they would come to us. We are willing to receive them, but they must come as the rest of us.

5. Many persons have gone out from us, or were disowned, and have declared their intentions to abolish our name as Diocletian declared his intention of abolishing the Christian name. As our enemies they have baptized certain ones, and some of these converts were as hostile to us as their teachers. Now if we received these converts without baptism we would thereby acknowledge their leaders to be ministers of Christ, and would condemn ourselves. We know whereof we affirm. But it may be objected; inasmuch as many persons have been baptized, where the Brethren are unknown, did these persons do wrong in doing what they did. We do not say so; neither do we say that those who receive only one dip, sin in doing so. They, at least, manifest their willingness to obey; but when they see a better way, they choose it. So with those who have received trine immersion outside of us. They have done what they could, and as we never recognized the authority by which they received it; if they desire the peace of the church, its purity, and value its fellowship, we think they will not refuse, to do, and promise what all have done. We have done this ourselves, and we have never regretted it.

A former brother writes to us, that inasmuch as he has been baptized twice by trine immersion, he cannot receive it again for the sake of being a Dunkard. He is mistaken. It would do more for him than make a Dunkard out of him. At present he is not connected with any religious organization. How can he be governed by Matt. 18: 15-18. How can he salute his brethren for he has none? How can he wash his brother's feet? Where is his fellowship with saints? None! Baptism by the Brethren brings us into a position where we can work for the Lord without the fear that some wind of doctrine will overthrow our work.

We know some who are out in the cold, and would like to work with us, but they cannot stoop to re-baptism. And dear friend what did your baptism do for you? Your house is thrown down and you are left alone.

We think, when you weigh these things in the balance of justice and reason, you will see it is your duty, as well as your privilege to enter the fold in such a way as to secure union, peace, love, and to build up the walls of Zion, and preserve her ways uncorrupted as a fold where one shepherd rules.

A PROMINENT Pennsylvania clergyman says that if the ministers in that State should plainly preach the doctrines of the Sermon on the Mount, they would find themselves without congregations in less than six months. They must give to their discourses a tone which will not offend the wealthy sinners who pay the greater portion of the pew rent.

ALL men could be happy if they would choose the right way and follow in it. Wealth does not always bring happiness, but frequent sorrow and many burdens. Wealth is a blessing when used right, but a curse when used wrong. Happiness is born of integrity, honesty and godliness.

How often we fret and worry because everything does not go to suit us. We make our plans, and often they come to grief, and then we are sad and dispirited. Beyond there is a brighter bay where all imperfections will cease to exist, and evils of this life will be unknown.

To discuss an opinion with a fool is like carrying a lantern before a blind man.—De Gaston.

AN OLD MAID.

NEVER be afraid of becoming an old maid, fair reader. An old maid is far more honorable than a heartless wife. And "single blessedness" is greatly superior, in point of happiness, to wedded life without love. "Fall not in love, dear girls beware!" says the song; but we do not agree with said song on this question, on the contrary, we hold that it is a good thing to fall in love, or get in love, if the object be a worthy one. To fall in love with an honorable man is as proper as it is for an honorable man to fall in love with a virtuous and amiable woman. And what could be a more gratifying spectacle than a sight so pure, so approaching, in its devotion, to the celestials. No! fall in love as soon as you desire, provided it be with a suitable person; but we advise you with all candor, never marry a man unless you love him. That is the great point, never marry for riches. Never sell yourself, body and soul, on terms so contemptible. Love dignifies all things; it ennobles all conditions. With love the marriage rite is truly a sacrament; without it, the ceremony is a base fraud, and the act a human desecration. Marry for love, or not at all. Be "an old maid," if fortune throws not in your way the man of your heart; and, though the jester may laugh, you still have your reward in an approving conscience, and a comparatively peaceful life. M. C. N.

OUR GOD IS PATIENT.

IT is certainly well for the world, and so too, that our God is patient. It was remarked once: that if the most tender, hearted man in the world were to sit down on the throne of God, for a single hour, and behold, as God does, the provoking abominations committed by men during that hour, he would undoubtedly, in the next, set the world on fire and destroy it. But O, our God is not men! Hence we are not consumed.

May we not abuse this amiable perfection by committing sin; but rejoice that our God is patient. And learn from him to be patient too. M. C. N.

HIS SECOND CHOICE.

"HESTER!" exclaimed Aunt Susan, ceasing her rocking and knitting, and sitting upright, "do you know what your husband will do when you are dead?"

"What do you mean?" was the startled reply.

"He will go and marry the sweetest tempered girl he can find."

"Oh, auntie!" Hester began.

"Don't interrupt me till I have finished," said Aunt Susan, leaning back and taking up her knitting. "She may not be as pretty as you are, but she will be good-natured. She may not be as good a housekeeper as you are, in fact, I think she will not, but she will be good-natured. She may not even love him as well you do, but she will be more good natured."

"Why, auntie—"

"That isn't all," continued Aunt Susan. "Every day you live you are making your husband more and more in love with that good-natured woman who may take your place some day. After Mr. and Mrs. Harrison left you the other evening, the only remark made about them was, 'She is a sweet woman.'"

"Ab, auntie—"

"That isn't all," composedly resumed Aunt Susan. "To-day your husband was half across the kitchen floor bringing you the first ripe peaches, and all you did was to look and say, 'There, Will, just see your nuddy tracks on my clean floor! I won't have my clean floor all tracked up.' Some men would have thrown the peaches out of the window. One day you screwed up your face when he kissed you, because his mustache was damp, and said, 'I never want you to kiss me again.' When he empties anything, you tell him not to spill it; when he lifts anything, you tell him not to break it. From morning till night your sharp voice is heard complaining and fault-finding. And last Winter, when you were so sick, you scolded him for allowing the pump to freeze, and took no notice when he said, 'I was so anxious about you that I could not think of the pump.'"

"But, auntie—"

"Hearken, child. The strongest, most intellectual man, of them all, cares more for a woman's tenderness than anything else in this world, and without this, the cleverest woman, and most perfect housekeeper, is sure to lose her husband's affections in time. There may be few men like your Will, as gentle, and loving, and chivalrous, as forgetful of self, and so satisfied with loving that their affections will do a long struggling death; but in most cases, it takes but a few years of fretfulness and fault-finding to turn a husband's love into irritated indifference."

"Well, auntie—"

"Yes well! You are not dead yet, and that sweet-tempered woman has not yet been found; so you have time to become so serene and sweet that your husband can never imagine that there is a better-tempered woman in existence,"—Adeocate and Guardian.

MISSPENT EVENING.

BY LOTTIE REISING.

THE young man who spends an hour of each evening on the street, or lounging around stores, and saloons, wastes in the course of a year three hundred and sixty-five hours, which if applied to the reading of the Scriptures, good books and papers, a vast amount of useful knowledge could be obtained. If in addition to wasting an hour each evening he spends ten cents for cigars or intoxicating drinks; the amount worse than wasted would soon buy good books, and pay a year's subscription for a Church paper. Young men think of these things. Think of the time and money you are wasting, just think for one moment how you are injuring yourself. You acquire bad habits which will cling to you. You may in alter life try to get rid of them; but the probabilities are that the habits thus formed will remain with you all the days of your life. Remember the hour spent in idleness, is gone forever, and you must give an account of the way you spend your time, and if you spend it in idleness, God will not be pleased with you.

THE BROKEN GRAFT.

THE late Dr. Spencer said that when he was a lad, his father gave him a tree that had just been grafted. One day, in his father's absence he let the colt into the garden, and the young animal broke off the graft. It was mended, however, on the following day, and continued to grow finely. Years passed and young Spencer became a man and a minister. Sometime after he became a pastor, he made a visit to the old homestead where he had spent his boyhood. His little sapling had become a large tree, and was loaded with apples. During the night after his arrival at the homestead, there was a violent thunder-shower, and the wind blew fearfully. He rose early in the morning, and, on going out, found his tree lying on the ground. The wind had twisted it off just where the colt broke it when it was a sapling. Probably the storm would not have broken it at all if it had not been broken when it was small. The incident furnishes a good illustration of the fact that often those whose characters are broken in manhood were weakened in early life; that the fallen man who was religiously trained and has become corrupt, broke off his connections with virtuous ways by the same sin that enervated his boyhood. The tree was broken by accident, but we break our moral life by our own misdeeds.—Phrenological Journal.

HAVING tried it thirty years, and having been blessed with a good wife and twelve children, I commend marriage. Marry neither for money nor beauty, but seek genuine piety and good sense; seek one near your own age; consider her your equal, and in company, pay as much attention to her as any, but avoid toying with her; allow no foppery in the attire of children, and discourage forwardness toward strangers.—Dr. Adon Clark.

A CLEVELAND man sold a finger to a surgeon to be transferred to a wealthy patient's hand. The price was $100. Half was to be paid down on amputation, and the other half has become the subject of a law suit. The former owner of the finger demands its return in default of payment, and the question arises whether a judge can order it cut off the hand of the present owner.

LIME slacked with a solution of salt in water, and thinned with skimmed milk, from which all the cream has been taken, makes a permanent whitewash for out door work, and is said, renders the wood incombustible. It is an excellent wash for preserving shingles and for all farm-buildings.

BRETHREN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill.

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

AT seven o'clock, Saturday morning we left Mt. Morris en route for the Annual Meeting at Ashland, Ohio. Our company consisted of about 50 members from Mt. Morris and a few adjoining churches. We reached Chicago at eleven and spent several hours enjoying some of the curiosities of the city. Most of us enjoyed a few hours in Lincoln Park, a point well worth visiting. At 5:15, our train on the Baltimore and Ohio road, was ready to leave, but tarried a few minutes waiting for the crowd that was coming from Lanark. We, however, left the city in good time and had a most enjoyable ride. The weather was fine, the road in a good condition, and the company most agreeable. We reached Mansfield at three the next morning, where we were joined by a number of members from Southern Illinois. After waiting one hour we took the train for Ashland, where we arrived about five o'clock. Our company was immediately taken to the Annual Meeting grounds, nearly one mile South of the depot. The location is a good one, being sufficiently elevated to be dry, and also commands a most excellent view of the city and surrounding country. The field adjoins the College lot, and is connected with the College by a plank walk. The boarding tent is 200 feet long, 70 feet wide and arranged very similar to the one at Lanark last year, only larger, being capable of seating about 1500 persons to the tables at one time. The council tent is about 50 feet larger than the one we had at Lanark and arranged in the same way. A short distance West of the boarding tent is a well arranged building for baggage, post-office, ticket office, and editors' room. The latter is very convenient, and is also well fitted with the editors and clerks. The Standing Committee has excellent rooms in the College—in fact they have the best arrangements for the S. C., here of any meeting we have ever attended. We find the Brethren and people of Ashland very kind, we were never better treated and more kindly cared for. The citizens of Ashland threw open their houses and invited the members to lodge with them. We have an excellent lodging place at the commodious residence of the city mayor, where we are treated with all the courtesy we could wish. After spending the day among the people we can retire to our room, and quietly rest till morning. Other brethren are equally well provided for. Ashland is certainly an excellent place to hold an Annual Meeting, and the Brethren here know how to care for those who attend.

On Sunday two meals were served in the boarding tent, costing 15 cents each. At ten o'clock, we listened to an excellent sermon by Bro. D. P. Saylor, in the council tent. The different pulpits in the city were filled by brethren. At three, Bro. Silas Hoover also preached in the tent. It fell to our lot to preach in the College chapel, in the evening at 7:30. It rained some during the day, thus rendering it somewhat disagreeable. The weather was also quite cool most of the day.

MONDAY, JUNE 7.

The day opened clear and beautiful, but it soon clouded up again. Breakfast was served at 7, and dinner at 2:30. Bro. J. W. Beer preached in the tent to a very large congregation at ten. At 3:30, by request, Bro. A. J. Hixon and myself delivered, in the tent, addresses on "Christian Education." Towards evening the people came in swarms. Train after train arrived, loaded to their utmost capacity. They continued coming till late in the night; and we imagine that it taxed the good people of Ashland to their utmost to lodge them; then we pitied the cooks and table waiters, but as such seasons come only occasionally, they will be able to stand it, and enjoy it too, no doubt. We spent the day very pleasantly. It was a source of much happiness to meet so many friends and familiar faces. It is worth the time and expense to come to one of these meetings just to see and converse with one another. This part of the Annual Meeting has much to do with the sociable feeling of our people towards each other. The more they come together and get acquainted, the better they seem to love each other, and the stronger is the bond of union between them. We pray for the perpetuity of our Annual Meetings, knowing that the social part of them exerts over our people an influence for good that we would feel loth to part with.

The Standing Committee organized early in the day by electing Enoch Eby, moderator; James Quinter, writing clerk, and John Wise reading clerk. There is considerable business before the body, and much of it greatly concerns the entire Brotherhood. The S. C. is composed of men who have the cause at heart, and doubtless will labor cautiously and prudently so as to handle the different elements in a manner that will promote the harmony of the general Brotherhood. Those who seem to know, say the Committee is working very harmoniously. Everything seems to indicate that the meeting is going to be a most interesting one. The different districts are well represented by delegates while the representation by other members from different parts of the Brotherhood is enormous—much greater than it was at Lanark last year.

morning opened disagreeably, a heavy rain having fallen in the latter part of the night, rendering the roads quite muddy, and walking a little difficult. The wind blew down the council tent, breaking the two center poles. It took till ten o'clock to get the tent ready for use. It was then immediately filled by the members. In the center of the tent was a large platform inclosed by railing reserved for the Standing Committee, delegates, reporters, and editors. About three thousand persons could be seated under the tent at one time, while several hundred could have a good view by standing on the outside.

At the editors' table we had at our right, H. B. Brumbaugh, of the Primitive. To his right was J. H. Worst of the Preacher. To our left was H. R. Holsinger of the Progressive, and to the left of him a representative of the Toledo Press. On the opposite side of the table was Bro. Hollenberger, the reporter; also, Jesse Calvert, whose business it is to give the names of the speakers. S. Z. Sharp and a representative of the Ashland Press were also on that side. At a later hour S. H. Bashor took a seat to the left of us.

At 10:30, the Standing Committee entered the tent and took seats at their table. Elder John Wise opened the meeting, using hymn No. 283. He also led in prayer, followed by Bro. Quinter. Bro. K. H. Miller then announced the organization of the committee as mentioned above. Bro. John Wise then read Acts 15. After this Bro. Eby delivered to the meeting an earnest and appropriate address in which he urged the members to do all in their power to render the meeting both profitable and harmonious. It was then moved and seconded that the rules governing the meeting last year be re-adopted. The motion carried.

The papers from Oregon were called. The first query presented was in regard to granting letters to members who ignore the established order of the church. Decided that it could not be done consistently, especially for officials. The second query was returned to the church from whence it came, for amendment and explanation. The query did not seem to fit the case it was designed to cover.

California had nothing to present.

Northern Kansas, Nebraska, and Colorado presented one query in regard to those outside the Standing Committee opening and closing the A. M. services. After much discussion it was tabled.

Adjourned for dinner.

After dinner about one hour was spent singing in the tent, and some speaking. The standing committee entered at two o'clock. Bro. Kinsey, of the Vindicator, was at the editors' table the remainder of the day.

South-west Kansas was called but had nothing to present.

South-west Missouri presented a query in regard to re-baptizing a man who had been baptized while sick. He claims that his former baptism was the result of over-persuasion at a time when his mind was not in a condition to decide a matter of that kind. It was decided that he may be re-baptized if at the time of his former baptism his mind was too weak to exercise proper faith, &c.

The next thing in order was the presenting, and reading of several papers in regard to Bro. H. R. Holsinger and the Progressive Christian, and also one in regard to the Vindicator. After much discussion in relation to motions, and amendments, &c., all the papers were referred to a committee to be appointed by the Standing Committee from among the delegates present and report at this meeting.

A query from Iowa, referring to the printing of the Minutes at two different places, last year was tabled.

Considerable time was spent over a paper referring to a case settled by a committee whose decision was afterwards reversed by a decision made in the A. M. The point was, must the committee return to that church and render satisfaction? The next paper presented was a divorce case.

About this time a heavy rain came up, causing considerable confusion in the tent, and for awhile we could not keep the run of the business. The rain falling on the tent made considerable noise, so that at times it was very difficult to hear either the reading clerk or speaker.

Several queries from Iowa were in reference to a minister abusing his privilege by transacting church business outside of his own district, and fellowshiping expelled members. It was decided that his course in the work done could not be tolerated, hence a committee was sent to set things in order.

This closed the work in the council tent for Tuesday. The remainder of the day was very disagreeable, as it rained the most of the time till late in the night, making it very disagreeable, especially for the women.

We mail this article early Wednesday morning that it may appear this week. The remainder of the meeting will be reported after our return home. We are thus far enjoying the best of health.

OUR SHARON SLEEPETH.

ON the morning of the 5th inst., while his father and mother were at Ashland to attend Annual Meeting, Sharon R. Bosserman started from his beautiful home, called Brightside, to lead his father's cow to pasture. As he went out the gate and up the street, he was the same cheerful, pleasant, jewel of by-gone days. The morning being cool, and the cow very tame and gentle, he led one end of the rope around his right arm and put his hands in his pockets. While leisurely moving onward, he came to some other cattle and his gentle cow stopped. To urge her onward, he struck her lightly in the side. This frightened her, and jumping suddenly, threw poor Sharon on the ground and started off on a run. He tried to get up; but this seemed to frighten the cow more and more. On and on at a terrible speed she went, dragging the noble boy over the stones and across the railroad killing him and mauling him fearfully. She ran about one-fourth of a mile, and then stopped. Poor Sharon! So hopeful, so cheerful, so kind and good only a few minutes ago, he now lies there torn, bleeding, dead.

Telegrams were sent to his father and mother. O what sad news! We shall never forget the grief of these two noble hearts! They hastened home, arriving there about midnight. On the 6th, accompanied by Bro. O. F. Yount and wife, we left Ashland to attend the funeral of the dear, good child. We reached "Brightside"—the once cheerful and happy home of brother and sister Bosserman and three lovely children, but now full of sorrow and grief.

The morning of the 7th came, and with it a great multitude of sympathizing friends. Sharon's schoolmates came in and sang a beautiful hymn, and then after prayer, they took the last look at their sleeping schoolmate. At 9:30 A. M. a large number of people started to the place of burial, Eagle Creek church. The house was filled with people, about 700 being present. All hearts felt sorrowful, and the tears flowed freely from the eyes of the vast concourse, as they, for the last time, looked down upon the sleeping child.

Sharon stood at the head of his class in school. He was a leader in hard study—a position indeed honorable. At the age of seven he began to keep a record of his reading matter, and up to the time of his departure he had read nearly 12,000 pages. This he did in about five and one half years, or 2000 pages a year. He read the Pictorial Bible through, and was noted for his fund of information.

When reading in the Revelations he would say to his mother, "I do not want to live longer than my parents, lest I can not endure the trials mentioned by John the Revelator. The dear, bright Jewel seemed to look with awe upon God's great future. He was 12 years, 6 months and 3 days old. Our heart-felt sympathies go out to the beloved parents. M. M. E.

The Brethren of Beaver Creek Church, Va., have started a new Brethren's School, located at Spring Creek, Augusta county. Bro. Jacob Thomas has been elected President and is well qualified for the position. Bro. A. Flory, a very worthy young man, and a graduate of the University of Virginia, has been appointed as Principal. The board of education consists of thirty Directors who will solicit patronage for the school besides attending to other duties. A hall has been rented for the present, but good buildings will be put up as soon as convenient. Some fifteen or twenty students are in attendance already. The Brethren are sanguine of success, as the membership is large in Virginia, and also in some portions of Tennessee.—Advocate.

In Kyoto sixty families were led to renounce idolatry through the influence of a single copy of the Gospel of John.

CAN it possibly be right for men to do each other all the harm they can?

The River Brethren Annual Conference at Ringgold, Md., adjourned on Sunday, May 22. Three days were devoted to the general council and one and one half days to communion and experience meetings. The council is strictly private with the River Brethren. After this, all persons are welcomed and kindly entertained. Three meals a day are served for members and others. We spent a part of the day at the meeting on Saturday, and were much pleased with their mode of worship. The services were conducted in the German and English languages. Some able speakers were in attendance. Last year their General Conference was held in Canada. We have not yet heard where it will be next year.—Brethren's Advocate.

The monks expelled from France are becoming wandering Jews. The Portuguese authorities will not allow them to settle in that kingdom; the people are driving them out of Spain; the law is too severe for them in Germany; Austria is not a congenial place for them; Holland is too Protestant, Italy too Catholic, Switzerland too independent. The only place left is the United States, and here they will probably come.

THE CHASTENINGS OF THE LORD.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

"As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten; be zealous therefore and repent." Rev. 3: 19.

THE above is a part of the message to the church at Laodicea. The Savior had sharply rebuked this church for her lukewarmness, had faithfully pointed out her defects, had discovered unto her, her true condition, her poverty, her nakedness, her blindness, her wretchedness, and had plainly told her how thoroughly he abhorred her in that condition. Now lest she should feel discouraged and driven to despair by the sharpness of the rebuke, he tenderly tells her that he has rebuked her in love.

These words did not proceed from a heart filled with scorn and hatred, but from a heart overflowing with love, from a heart filled with the deepest solicitude for her welfare.

The wretched condition of this church, entangled in the meshes of error, blinded by the God of this world and plunging headlong into ruin, though all numbing of her condition, stirred the Savior's heart to its utmost depths. Every utterance, every word of reouks is wrung from him. Could he be indifferent? Impossible! Had her spotted and loathsome condition only aroused his anger, he could have cast her off with disdain; but, oh! it called forth his pity. It aroused the unfathomable depths of his deep, deep sympathy: It filled his soul with grief unutterable.

What indeed is a sadder, a more painful sight to a Christian, than the disaffection of those who once enjoyed sweet communion with God, and whose delight was in the law of the Lord. If such a sight is so deeply painful to us, with our imperfect abhorrence of sin; how must it appear in the eyes of that Being who is too pure to behold evil, and who cannot look on iniquity.

But the Savior does not stop with mere sympathy. His uses means to reclaim the delinquent. He has at hand a great variety of means, and like a skillful physician if one fails he employs another. There is also a gradation in the means which he employs. He at first uses milder remedies, if these produce the desired result, nothing more is necessary; but if not, then more stringent means must be resorted to. This gradation is intimated in our text, first rebuke then chastening. We also perceive in this the deep solicitude of the Savior, the constancy of his love and the steadiness of his purpose. "Having loved his own that are in the world, he loves them unto the end." Nothing else quenches that love; nothing can turn it aside. It is his purpose to give eternal life to those whom the Father has intrusted to his care; therefore they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of his hand.

The Christian may become careless, indifferent and blind to his own interests; but Christ's watchful care over him never abates. He ever pursues him with the same loving solicitude. If like the church at Laodicea, he has relaxed into a state of carnal security; from this state he must be aroused. The object which has drawn him aside, and which is now receiving his homage, must be removed, or embittered to him. If this object has taken a firm hold on his affections, its removal will be most painful.

But, says Jesus, "As many as I love I rebuke and chasten. Faithful, indeed, are the wounds of this Friend. "If," says the apostle, "ye be without chastisement wherof all are partakers, then are ye bastards, and not sons." Oh the chastenings of the Lord are the surest proofs of his love! So long as there is any good in the heart, any desire for the right, Christ will not forsake that heart. "A bruised reed will be not break; and smoking flax will he not quench." The little feeble germ, he will cultivate until it develops into a strong plant which can bear the scorching rays of the sun; and when it begins to bear fruit, he carefully prunes it that it may be more fruitful. "Every branch in me that beareth fruit, he purgeth it that it may bring forth more fruit."

But what is his manner of dealing with those whose hearts have entirely departed from him. He deals with them as he did with Ephraim of old, being joined to idols, he lets them alone. Oh! it is a fearful thing, to be thus left alone, to be abandoned by God, and given over to one's own perverse and carnal nature. We naturally like to have our own way, to form our own plans and carry them out; and it is a great trial of our patience to be continually thwarted in our plans, and disappointed in our hopes. But, says the Apostle, "The trying of your faith worketh patience. Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting in nothing."

Solomon says, "A child left to himself, bringeth his mother to shame." This will apply to children of larger growth. A person long accustomed to having his own way, being indulged in every whim, having every desire gratified, will soon find it very difficult to submit to any restraint and will soon become the mere creature of caprice, restless and unstable as the waves of the sea.

The more vigorous and healthy the vine, and the more fertile the soil, unto which it is planted, the more pruning it needs also it will soon become a wild entangled mass, and will bear no fruit. So the most vigorous intellects need the most pruning, the most careful training else the result will be a mere showy mass of rich foliage without any fruit. The Apostle says, "No chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous nevertheless, afterwards it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto those who are exercised thereby."

Our heavenly Father is no respecter of persons, he chastens all, and if the chastening has the proper effect, if we are properly exercised thereby, he continues to use the rod until the old lesson is purged out, and we have become a new lamp. Wise, indeed, is he who hearkens to the rod, and to him that hath appointed it, and learns the proper instruction from it.

The most eminent Christians, in all ages, have been those who have been the most severely tried. God's choosing places is the furnace of affliction. There he meets his people and manifests himself to them as he does nowhere else. He allures his chosen, and brings her to the wilderness. In this retreat, removed from the din and bustle of the world, he speaks comfortably to her, and gives her vineyards from thence. His presence, indeed, will change the valley of Achor into a door of hope, yea into the very vestibule of the palace of God. The three Hebrew children in the fiery furnace, Daniel in the den of lions, David in his cave, Joseph in prison, Paul and Silas with feet made fast in stocks, their backs lacerated with the cruel scourge, again Paul in the dungeon at Rome, John on Patmos, could all testify that these valleys of Achor, these positions so bitter to the flesh, were to them doors of hope, and how many Christians can testify that the most trying circumstances, beds of affliction, or perhaps what is far more painful and distressing, deep mental anguish, so deep that it seemed every fiber of the soul was racked and tortured to its utmost powers of endurance. Oh if there is a power that can soothe and comfort an agonized mind, it is divine. Human help fails, utterly fails here. But how many can testify of this valley of Achor has been changed to a door of hope.

We often speak of the sufferings of the martyrs, and commiserate them, while perhaps there are those in our midst, who are suffering a more painful and lingering death, and yet we have for them no word of sympathy, no word of comfort, no helping hand; but rather add to their burdens by our coldness, or neglect.

But it may be asked, why are chastenings necessary, why cannot we do without them? The God of this world hath so blinded the eyes, so perverted the judgment, and so warped the affections, that some powerful means are necessary to break the spell that binds us, and enable us to distinguish between real and apparent good, real and apparent greatness.

It has been said, and we doubt not, truly that if one angel were sent to sweep the streets, and another were sent to govern and empire, the latter would not think his office a whit more important than the former, and why? Because these holy beings with their clear and perfect comprehension, would know that the highest service they could render, would be to obey the behests of heaven. We with our puny minds put estimates upon things according to our imperfect standards. These idols that we have set up and pronounced great and grand, must be immolated before our eyes, and we must be made to see their utter worthlessness; yea the vanity of every earthly thing before we can properly appreciate things that are spiritual.

Earthly things are fleeting and changeable, and the heart that is stayed on these must always be fluctuating between hope and fear. One day, prosperity and success will crown our labors, and we are the recipients of praises and commendation, then the heart is elated, and the spirits are buoyant. The next day disasters thick-n around us, disappointments come, friends forsake us, enemies become bold, and denounce us. With these outward changes our feelings experience a corresponding change; and thus will we ever be the creatures of circumstances, our happiness or misery at the mercy of others, or, at least, at the mercy of circumstances over which we have no control, until we let go our hold of the world, and resign ourselves entirely into the hands of God. Not until the mind is stayed on God who is unchangeable, will we be kept in perfect peace.

But oh what mental torture, what suffering we must pass through, how every source of human comfort must be embittered to us, before we can give up all our earthly idols. We hold on to them with a firm tenacity until they are cruelly wrenched from our grasp. But he that hath suffered in the flesh hath ceased from sin.

All communications for this department, such as queries and answers, should be addressed to J. S. Mohler, Easton, Pa., No. 100 N. 10th St.

Will some one explain Genesis 4: 15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark he set on him? ROBERT T. CHOOK.

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy Kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven"—was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and there stopped, or is it right to pray it yet? ANNA GUIDERY.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 30th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 43d. WM. LONG.

Does Gen. 4, infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all living? If so, who was his wife? MARY C. NORMAN.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CHOOK.

THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISMS.

Please explain Hebrew 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different: "Von der Taufe, von der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLER.

YOU will remember that the Hebrews were Jews and this epistle was directed to those who had formally embraced the Gospel. By reading the latter part of the preceding chapter, you will find that those Jewish or Hebrew brethren made very little, if any, progress in the divine life; seeing they were dull of hearing, when for the time since they had embraced this doctrine, they should have been teachers. They had need that some one teach them again the first principles of the oracles of God; namely repentance and faith. By examination you will find that those Hebrew brethren still hung at the law; they were born and bred under it, and seemingly could not discern the better way of the Gospel.

Then the apostle says, "Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God, of the doctrine of baptisms, and laying on of hands, and of the resurrection of the dead, and of eternal judgment."

Now, considering that some of those Jews or Hebrews had been baptized by John, and some by Christ or his disciples, there was some little difference in their baptisms, if not in the administration, in their instructions; because John instructed his candidates to believe on Him that would come, when as yet he had not seen Jesus. If this is not what the apostle has reference to in that expression of baptisms, let us have something better.

A YOUNG PREACHER'S EMBARRASSMENT.

A YOUNG minister, soon after obtaining license, was invited to occupy the pulpit of the First Presbyterian church of Philadelphia, which had become vacant by the death of the pastor, the eminent Dr. James P. Wilson. It was of course a severe trial to his courage, to preach to a congregation, accustomed to listen to so able an expositor. But he shrank not from the ordeal.

His morning discourse was read to an attentive audience. In the afternoon, after reading over the sermon intended for the evening, he placed it in the pocket of a gown, which he was wont to wear in his study. When about to leave his house, he changed his coat and started for the church. On entering the pulpit, with equal surprise and sorrow he discovered that his manuscript had been left behind. How could the embarrassment of the emergency be relieved? To go back himself for the sermon was out of the question, for there was no one available to conduct the preliminary exercises of devotion during his absence. To send a messenger was equally impracticable, for the distance was too great to admit of the possibility of accomplishing the errand in the required time, particularly if the delay, that would occur from a stranger's want of familiarity with the circumstances of the case, was taken into account. There was evidently but one way out of the delicate and difficult dilemma, and this he decided to pursue. After the introductory services, announcing his text and closing the Bible, he proceeded to deliver his message as best he could. As he descended from the pulpit, several elders approached him with thanks for his excellent sermon. After a courteous acknowledgment of the compliment he added: "And I am sure you would regard your appreciation of my services peculiarly grateful to me, if you knew how much it cost me."

That young preacher was the Rev. Dr. Musgrave, who has since won fame in church circles.—Church Union.

HOW LONG DID ISAIAH PROPHECY?

Isaiah (chapter 1) is said to have prophesied in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz and Hezekiah, kings of Judah. The above reign includes 143 years. Did Isaiah really prophesy so long?

J. LYLE.

ISAIAH does not say that he prophesied throughout the reigns of these kings, but in them.

It is admitted, he prophesied about 64 or 65 years, which is not improbable.

Dr. Barnes sums up in this way: "Uzziah died, according to Calmet, 754 years before Christ. Isaiah must therefore have occupied the prophetic office at least from 754 B. C., to 707 B. C., or 47 years; that is under Uzziah one year, under Jotham sixteen years, under Ahaz sixteen years, and under Hezekiah fourteen years. It is not known at what age he entered on the prophetic office. It is probable that he lived much longer than the fifteenth year of Hezekiah. In 2 Chron. 32: 32, it is said that the "rest of the acts of Hezekiah" were "written in the vision of Isaiah," and this statement obviously implies that he survived him, and wrote the acts of his reign up to his death. As Hezekiah lived fourteen or fifteen years after this (1-4, 28: 5; compare 2 Kings 18: 2) this would make the period of his public ministry to extend to at least sixty-one or sixty-two years. If he survived Hezekiah, he probably lived some time during the reign of Manasseh."

Uniform Jewish and early Christian testimony is, that Isaiah was killed by being sawn in sunder by command of Manasseh.

A KAKE, OLD BIBLE.

IT is not generally known that in the Congressional Library at Washington there is an old Bible which is well worth a walk to the Capitol to examine. It is of Italian origin, and is supposed to have been written in the thirteenth or fourteenth century, but the actual date is unknown. It is written in Latin, upon vellum, in clear, bold characters and extremely uniform. The writing is in two columns, about three inches wide, with a margin of two inches. It is embellished with 145 miniature paintings, and upward of 1,200 smaller illuminations, which are beautifully executed, and are as brilliant to-day, as the day they were done.

The initials of books and prologues are two and a half inches in height, and those of the chapters are one inch in height. It is contained in two large volumes, and cost the government $2,200 in gold, when gold was at a high premium, and was purchased at a sale of the library of Henry Parkins, Hanworth Park, near London, in June 1873. The skins in the first volume have all been repaired, except five; in the second volume they are nearly all perfect.

A PREACHER'S ARTIFICE.

FRATER Rocco, the celebrated but eccentric preacher of Naples, once scared his congregation in the most beneficial way. He preached a tremendous sermon on the inevitable consequences of a sinful life. His hearers were in a convulsion of excitement, with the blazing picture of a sulphurous retribution before their imaginations. All at once he stopped in the very midst of an eloquent appeal and cried out, "Now, all of you who sincerely repent of your sins, hold up your hands."

Every hand in the assembly went up in an instant. The preacher looked upon the scene for one awful moment, and then, addressing the high-powers, exclaimed: "Holy Archangel Michael, thou who with thine adamantite sword standest at the right of the judgment seat of God, how me fit every hand which has been raised hypocritically."

In an instant nearly every hand dropped to its owner's side.

The winds and tides of life preserves humanity from stagnation.

A MAN should beware of the company he keeps, for by it he is known.

From the Rockies to the Alleghenies,— Notes by the Way.

NUMBER IV.

CHICAGO, Ill., June 1st, 1881.

We left St. Jo the 23d ult., expecting to go direct through to the Brethren near South English, Iowa; but alas for human expectations when railroad figures in the matter. At Cameron Junction the train of the Rock Island Route pulled out on one side of the depot, while ours was coming in at the other. — There was no excuse for them going as they did and leaving the north-bound passengers standing, looking at the going train, not over 100 yards away. It is enough to say, we were left until next day, and as a result had to also lay over at Washington, Iowa, all next night, and arrived at Harper, Iowa, on Wednesday, near noon. Was met at the train by Eld. Samuel Flory and taken to his pleasant home. Next day he kindly volunteered to take us on our way to Iowa Co. Bro. A. Flory conveyed us from his home to our brother-in-law's, Henry Sanger, (brother to wife) near Millersburg, Iowa.

Next day we returned, stopping with Bro. Noah Miller, who conveyed us to the Brethren's meeting-house, near South English. The malarial poison arising from the low lands along the Missouri River was too much for me, so I was taken violently sick with malarial fever; but by a determined resistance I fought it off, so far as to be able to keep moving from place to place and do some preaching, though it was at the apparent sacrifice of what little strength I had left.

Bro. Daniel Miller of Virginia, and Bro. Hopwood, of Iowa, were with us at these meetings, also the home ministers. Notwithstanding the busy season there was a good turnout and an excellent communion at night. Next day the large house was overflowing with attentive listeners.

Eld. Jacob Brower, Eld. Samuel Flory and C. Brower are the ministers at that point. The South English church has passed through a season of trials, but now there are good indications of prosperity, and we trust the church will go on so as to receive a refreshing from the Lord.

At an early day in the history of the brethren, I lived among the people who have made that beautiful section of Iowa what it is. I visited the grave of my dear father, who lies in the cemetery near the church house. I will remember the time when I stood at the open grave of the first occupant of that graveyard dug out on the open prairie. Now we can count them by the hundred. Twenty-five years have elapsed, and in that time many a loved one has fallen by the hand of death.

That section of Iowa is as good we presume, as any in the State. We visited the old homestead; but oh, how much everything has changed! Those that once were there, had gone, and everything seemed to call up the days that were long, long ago.

On Monday we boarded the train at South English, and ran down to Washington Co., where Bro. B. Miller met us, and conveyed us to his home. Next day to Eld. John Thomas, who took us in the afternoon to the train at Keosau.

Next morning at 6 we were in Chicago. We tarried in the city during the day. A Turkish bath is a good antidote for malaria, — so we thought. We interviewed some of the most important business streets and took in some of the sights. Met Bro. Beechey at the Fort Wayne depot. By the way, this is one of the finest, finished depots in this or any other country. Marble floors, stained glass, solid brass balustrades, silver-plated chandeliers, etc., give it a grand appearance. The attention to passengers by the depot officials is the best we ever saw. One cannot possibly go amiss or take the wrong train from their depot. This eve we take the train for Lima, Ohio, our next stopping point. J. S. FLORY.

Census Matters.

Rogue River Valley church, in Oregon, when filled, will complete the Brethren's Census in that State. R. R. V. send on your schedule. HOWARD MILLER.

Schedules are on file for every church in the Middle District of Iowa, except the one in Harrison Co.

I will be able to publish the strength of the church in that district, when the officials record their church among the peace people. If a schedule has been sent, it has gone wrong. Please look after it at once.

HOWARD MILLER.

From David Bechtelheimer. — My wife, daughter and myself hid our children and friends farewell on the 23rd. We boarded the train at Warsaw, Kosciusko Co., Ind., on the 24th for the far West and arrived here at 3 P. M. on the 25th. Found the health good, excepting that the whooping cough is among the children. A child, aged three months and 12 days died the day we arrived here, and they called on me to preach the funeral, which is the first funeral, preached at the time of burying, by the Brethren in this part of Nebraska.

There are about twenty-eight members here and no preacher. There seems to be much rejoicing at the prospect of having meeting hereafter more regularly. The members met yesterday at the school-house and organized a Sabbath school, as they had one here last year. — They made choice of all their officers among the Brethren, excepting the chorister. So it will be a Sabbath school by the Brethren. I had preaching at old Bro. Snively's in the afternoon; had good attention. As the saying is, scarcely had the harness been took off, they threw it on me again and put me to work. We hope, the Brethren will remember us in their prayers, that the work may go on in the way that the Lord wants it to go. We feel satisfied, so far, with the country.—Darchester, Neb., May 30.

From H. P. Brinkworth — We cannot afford to rest and let our feelings smother, while our heart burns within us to do good to our fellow-men, and especially those of our native country. The thought sometimes seems preposterous and out of the question, — to start without co-operation. The church desires not that. If you go on a visiting tour, others will say, "The church sent him not and does not recognize his work."

Again, if you put forth energies in your own church, you are repulsed with the saying, "There is room near home." If you commence near home, you are repulsed by those who say, he wants to forward himself or herself and thus it goes. Brethren, in the name of our Master I speak unto you! I ask the question: "What shall we do?" As in the Light of God I humbly ask you to consider and answer. Many, to day, are awaiting the time when missionaries may be sent to the land of Bibles,—even the Old Country. Her pastors have become corrupted, her churches are well-nigh fallen, her members lose ease, quietness, wealth, splendor, pride, and things abominable to God; the way of the truth is evil spoken of, and many are waiting for unadulterated truth. O, Brethren, the call is issued for workers. Our Savior calls. He says, "Go ye;" he says "teach;" not only that; he says "baptize" all believers; not only that, he says teach all things commanded." Will we obey our Savior? We say we love him. Well if we do, we certainly should obey him in this most important command to our fellow-men. Do we need money to carry on the work? God has blessed the church with that. Do we need men? God has provided men. Do we need anything more? I answer, yes! We need to work at once, to start,—to start at once. Wait a little, brother, — says one. Well, when I preach, I cry, "To-day is the accepted time," and I cannot preach this and practice differently.

Another will say, "Go, but bear your own expense." We believe that is the best way; yet we remember, God has given riches to some and mouth to others, to declare his Gospel to the poor, and I say, prove your faith, your belief by your works. You say you love God,—send his word to all nations. Now, evade the truth of this by Scriptural reasoning, and we resign our will, our way, and let God be the judge!

From John M. Kessler.—It is with feelings of sadness that I can say to you, yesterday the 22nd we had the most touching farewell sermon that I ever witnessed in my life, from our beloved old brother David Bechtelheimer. He has been our minister for 31 or 32 years and had the oversight of the church for over twenty years, and had the oversight of the adjoining church on the East, and also on the west of his district; so there are three congregations left, to mourn the loss of their elder. A kind, old father and mother will also miss him. He sold off his farm and other property and is going to move to the south-western part of Nebraska, which, I hope, he may find a good home. May the Lord enable him to build up another good church there as he did here. He visited the district east of this on the 21st and attended the council-meeting, where he baptized four precious persons into the body of Christ; then preached his farewell sermon at home next day, to the largest congregation that I ever witnessed at the Beaver Dam brick church, and

I think it was the most solemn-looking congregation that I ever saw. He spoke from the latter part of the last chapter of revelations.

Bro. Bechtelheimer leaves us here in the Beaver Dam church with one good, old elder and young speaker. It leaves our dear old brother with a heavy task before him. The prayers of the righteous avail much; brethren and sisters, pray for us that we may prove faithful. — May we all try more and more to live in the true spirit of the Christian. May we all try and keep in love and union with one another and with the world, that our good works may prove our faith to the world.—Bloomingsburg, Ind., May 23.

From I. L. Switzer.—The May number (17) of B. at W. is just this morning received. If you have really followed my copy in "Tricks of the Typ s," precisely—as you say, you certainly have the joke on me.

The fact is, I hardly thought you would publish the article and, lacking faith, I was correspondingly a little careless.

After all I feel like releasing you from your promise. Never copy mistakes. I would not have you to do a single thing, that would in the least prove derogatory to the best interest of the B. at W.

The exact reverse was what I aimed at. Your paper has been our family companion so long, that, perhaps, I am by familiarity induced to exercise too much liberty in endeavoring to guard its highest and best interest; and it seems but just that I should receive a lesson in return.

The sequel proves that we are all liable to make mistakes. Forgive me. You take one, and I will take the other side of charity's broad mantle and we'll wrap ourselves and others with us, and go on our way rejoicing.

We are having beautiful weather. Prospects are promising so far for a bountiful crop of almost everything this season, and I sincerely hope that with general prosperity among us, you will not fail to realize your share of the benefit by the increased circulation of B. at W. Would love to have you get your 10,000; feel certain that you soon will, and will do what I can to assist you to do so. Mean while let us watch and labor and pray.—Jewell Center, Kan., May 25

From F. C. Meyers.—On the 12th of May I left Eumet, Arkansas, for Arkadelphia — Found the families of brethren Gephart and Kingsley well. On the 15th, Bro. Gephart, myself and several others went a distance of about four miles down the railroad on a hand-car to meeting, which was held in a Baptist church house. In the morning one of their preachers spoke from the text, "What will we do with Jesus?"

In the afternoon Bro. Gephart preached an interesting sermon, after which we returned home. Bro. Gephart intends to commence holding meetings at his house and Bro. Kingsley as soon as he can. I hope the Lord will open the way for them and bless them abundantly. Many thanks to them for their kindness to me. These members who are thinking of emigrating, should not fail to visit that part of the country. On the 20th I left for St. Louis. I had a few tracts, which I put in my pocket to distribute on the train. I handed some to a man that I heard speak to another man against whisky. After he had read them, he came and sat down by me and began asking questions about the brethren. He said, "he had heard his father talk of the Brethren, when he was a little boy," but did not know much about them, only as a class of people that any one could depend on what they said to be true. He said there is a man in his neighborhood that was raised in our belief, and had married a woman that is a Methodist. This man joined the Methodists, but the preacher had to take him in the water, and baptize him face-forward three times. In his outward appearance he conforms to the order of the Brethren, and is liked by every one.

This gentleman, with whom I was conversing, does not belong to any church, but was raised in the Baptist belief. He said his wife was a very zealous member in that church. He said he tells his wife that he sees so much hypocrisy in those churches, that he believes he will become an infidel yet. I handed him the tracts, one, "Infidelity, its Cause and its Cure." The other, "The house we live in." He was greatly pleased with them, and intends to show them to his wife. I gave him more to give to some of his neighbors. He wished that the Brethren would go there and preach. I took his address, hoping to have it published. I hope the Brethren who have been chosen for this work, will not be neglectful of their duty. This man has a drug store and keeps the Post Office. His address is Dr. W. S. McCall, Reform, Callaway Co., Mo.

I want to get, as soon as I can, a new supply of tracts. I expect to travel some more, shortly.

I arrived here, in St. Louis at 6 P. M. yesterday; found my friends all well. It seems as though I were on the track of Bro. Gish; hope I will catch up with them yet. Quite likely I may see them at A. M. this June.—St. Louis, Mo.

From David L. Williams.—After laboring four days with the members of the Mound church, Bates Co., Mo., I returned home; found all well; for which we are truly thankful to the Lord. Board council with the Mound church, and all business passed off very pleasantly. There was a good lively and agreeable interest taken in the work, a manifestation of a desire for the good work begun among them to still progress and prosper.

All of the young members were out at the council. This gave prominence to the meeting. The most principal work done, was to decide upon, and set the time for their feast, which is to be, if the Lord is willing, on the 3rd and 4th of September. They intend to arrange to hold a series of meetings, commencing Friday evening, August 26th, and to close with said feast.

This church is exultant over the success of their work in the past. The prospects for the future are fair; there are a number of persons that are doubtless near the fold. May God's special grace rest upon them.

From Wm. T. Smith.—We have preaching every four weeks at our school-house. Eld. G. W. Fessler, of Loogmont, was with us two weeks ago. He is very much liked around here by the friends. We expect Bro. Joseph Bashor to preach to-morrow, the Lord willing. There are but five or six members in this neighborhood, but there is a good prospect for many more. I take the B. at W. which I appreciate very much.—Berthoud, Cal.

From J. T. Meyers.—On the 22nd eight were received into the Green Tree church by baptism. Others are near the kingdom and we rather expect there will be a number yet to join in with us sometime this Summer.—Oaks, Pa., May 30.

From E. A. Orr.—I am now taking eight papers and I am sometimes perplexed to know how I am to read them, and keep up my other reading, and yet I am unwilling to let the Mircocosm go on without enjoying some of the rich things that we can measurely hope for from one who has done so much for God, truth and science as Willard Hall.

No human production gave me more real joy than his "Problem of Human Life." I have read the writings of all the most learned skeptics, and for some time taken the "Princeton Review;" and hence I was all the better prepared to enjoy the book.—Plattsburg, Mo.

MANY preachers seek to impress their hearers with the fact that life is short, but forget it in their sermons.

The devil never told a sicker lie, than when he told you that it did not matter what you BELIEVE so you were SINCERE.

In the beyond, the slanderer and the hypocrite can not come. Here the good and the bad mingle together. In heaven the pure and the holy, only, gather and there abide. The impure cannot enter there, because of their unbelief, because they are not the children of God.

A MINISTER, recently, in a sermon said: "Some professors pass for very meek, good-natured people, till you displease them. They resemble a pool or a pond; while you let it alone, it looks clear and limpid; but if you stir toward the bottom, the rising sediment soon shows the impurities that may lurk beneath." Just so.

At the siege of Sebastopol a cannon ball, missing its aim, struck in the side of a neighboring mountain, and forth from the fissure made by it, gushed a stream of crystal water. Thus a missile of death is made the means of opening a life-sustaining stream. If in us abide the waters of eternal life, the thrusts of Satan will only open channels by which they may flow forth.

It is a very common thing for Christians to pray that the Lord will aid his blessing to their works, as if they were ahead and the Lord followed after. A Christian's daily prayer should be, that he may know what the Lord would have him do. A Christian's daily work should be the doing of what the Lord sets him at. There is never any doubt about the blessing, when that order of service is observed.

A SLICE OF HAM.

THAT the food which we eat, largely governs our health, needs no demur, for it is a fact long since established. Much study is a science that will never be finished. But few graduate. Eth'r something new or differently served is the study of the day, and it must be sought, served and eaten, however greatly detrimental to health.

This science is not a promoter of health from two reasons.

First it produces an over-taxed brain. Second, an over-taxed stomach, both of which debilitate and sicken follow. But now and now diverging from my text—a slice of ham. I shall now in a careful and careless way confine myself to the theme and elucidate from the text.

Flesh foods are found on nearly all tables. They form the staple article offered in most families, and in the absence of meats on their table something appears to be wanting.

You visit friends, sit at their table, and however much the table may be loaded with food and no need served, perchance none on hand, on hear the apology: "Have an meat to-day please excuse" "You must make the best of our fare to-day, our ham is all" &c. Just as though nothing else was good. While flesh foods are eaten, finding their way to the table from time to time, they should more especially be confined to meat, mutton or fresh fish, and then more meals should be eaten without any meats than with, to insure good health.

This much fish-eating is a habit that should be discarded, specially that which is known by that almost unmentionable name the "hog" the scavenger, and let him run loose.

Well now that sounds rough, does it not? "You take the food right away from the poor at that rate." "We labor hard and must have some of the substantial, and for our winter's use I pay from thirty to fifty dollars and you would come and take it all away from me." No sir, my friend, but I would give you in its stead about sixty or seventy bushels of what or more of corn, which if properly used will go further to sustain your family than all your pork and your nice ham included.

Taking away your pork and lard from your table, replaces it with fruits, vegetables and cereals. Taking away your pork and greasy lard. I take away scrofula and kindred diseases, dyspepsia with all its nauseating sensations and long, sore places included. I replace you with good health, a happy content-nance and cheerful disposition.

A pork-eater wants plenty of salt, pepper and spice, catsup and plenty of the sour all thrown together. No wonder his stomach complains. Is it any wonder your stomach burns? Is there any advantage in this? None, unless it would be that you can tell from the promptings of your stomach during the day what you ate at last meal time.

If you would be blessed with good health, dispense with so much grease and flesh foods, and give the pork a wide berth, and let spices, pepper and all condiments alone, eat what was originally designed, grain, fruits and vegetables, and enjoy the blessings of God and be happy.

By discarding pork you not only free yourself from scrofula and its kindred associates, but you avoid "trichina" and more, the "swine plague." A physician of note in making observations in a Chicago slaughter house says, "animals afflicted with the plague or cholera are not separated from the others, but are slaughtered it able to ascend the inclined plane to the slaughter pen; those not able to do so are not made into soap, but are converted into lard." It is said that microscopic examinations show minute organisms in the lard, and those organisms are identical with those in hog cholera. Is your nice cured ham surely healthy? Is the lard any better?

Can you not live without it? A four year's experience has taught me it can be done, with the best of result.

KEEP AHEAD.

ONE of the grand secrets of success in life is to keep ahead in all ways possible. If you once fall behind, it may be very difficult to make up the headway which is lost. One who begins with putting aside some part of his earnings, however small, and keeps it up for a number of years is likely to become rich before he dies. One who inherits property, and goes on year by year spending a little more than his income, will become poor if he lives long enough. Living beyond their means has brought multitudes of persons to ruin in our generation. It is the cause of nine-tenths of all the defalcations which have disgraced the age. Bankers and business men in general do not often help themselves to other people's money until their own funds begin to fall off, and their expenditures exceed their receipts. A man who is in debt walks in the midst of peril. It cannot but impair a man's self respect to know that he is living at the expense of others. It is also very desirable that we should keep somewhat ahead in our work. This may not be possible in all cases; as, for instance, when a man's work is assigned to certain fixed hours like that of the operatives of a mill. But there there are certain classes of people who can choose their time for the work which they are called to do, amongst them there are some who invariably put off the task assigned them as long as possible, and then come to its performance hurried, perplexed, anxious, confused—in such a state of mind as certainly nullifies them for doing their best work. Get ahead and keep ahead, and your success is tolerably sure.

THAT BEDROOM!

WHAT about it? Well, a good many things might be said. It ought to be a place for quiet and refreshing sleep. But it is not such a place. Restless tossings with troubled dreams are there. Morning after morning finds the sleeper weary, listless, and dumpy. He wonders why it is so, and we wonder, too. But our wonder is that he does not make it a matter of thought, and learns how to sleep as he should. When anything is wrong with us, there is a cause for it. As a rule, that cause is not so obscure as to require the aid of a modern scientist, with all his jargon of incomprehensible technicalities covering his still more incomprehensible ideas, or want of ideas, to ferret out.

To exercise the demon of restlessness is not bedroom work alone. He who seeks the comfort of sound, refreshing sleep must properly control his habits by day as well as by night.

So much may be said about sleep in general that the bedroom is in danger of being forgotten. After all, that particular bedroom does not differ materially from many others of its kind. Twelve feet long, ten feet wide, and seven feet six inches high, it has a capacity of nine hundred cubic feet. It has a door opening into the next room, and another into the hall leading to the stairway and hall below. One large window, with sash supported by pulleys and weights affords, or ought to afford, air and light from out-doors. The fourth wall is solid. The bed stands in a corner, with the head to this wall. Two walls confine the exhaled air about the head of the sleeper. The bed rests on springs, with mattress and feathers above. The breath of the sleeper is doubly foul from late and full suppers, and from ulceration of the respiratory membrane, caused by chronic catarrh. In such a case good ventilation is more than a usual necessity. Is it attended to? Take a peep at that room. Doors closed—windows carefully closed to keep out the night air. Any good work on ventilation can be consulted to ascertain how long nine hundred cubic feet of air will supply respiratory material in such a room for one occupant. And yet that is a nice bedroom, genteelly furnished. If good sleeping is not done there, the failure is less chargeable to the room than to its management. How many cases of the kind have you met with, reader? J. S. GALLOWAY, M. D.

In Oregon the license question has taken a new form. The license instead of being taken out by the saloon-keeper, is issued to the man who drinks, and every six months the names of the persons who are thus licensed are published in the local papers. The new system has thus far proved an efficient instrument.

THEY have a severe liquor law in Mississippi. Each saloon-keeper or retail dealer in liquors is required to give a bond of $2,000 and is liable to that sum if he sells any liquor between 12 o'clock Saturday night and 12 o'clock Sunday night, or on election day, or sells to any minor or intoxicated person, or permits any card playing or any game of chance, even for amusement.

AN acre of government land costs $125. A corner wet-grocery hanger on will easily consume five ten-cent drinks per day. In two and one-half days he has swallowed an acre of as fine land as "lays out doors." If he averages two days and a half of loading per week, he consumes a fair sized farm every year. And these are the men who in cities can find nothing to do, are continually complaining of hard times, desert their families when their wives can not earn enough to keep them in liquor, or refuse to give them more, and overrun the country as tramps.

Fallen Asleep.

Blissed are the dead which die in the Lord.—Rev. 14, 13.

SHIFFLER—May 27, 1881, at North Manchester, Ind., Bro. Eli Shiffler, aged 55 years, 1 month and 16 days.

He leaves a companion and twelve children and many friends to mourn the loss; but not as those who have no hope. He was a faithful member of the church for twenty-five years. Funeral services at Syracuse, Ind., by D. Younce and the writer from Rev. 14: 13 to a large concourse of people. D. ROTHEMBOER.

SAWYER—In Browne Co., Kan., May 27th, sister Sarah, wife of Bro. John, and mother of our esteemed fellow-minister, Bro. W. H. H. Sawyer, aged 75 years, 6 months and 6 days.

Deceased was a member of the church over fifty years; united with the church in Preble Co., Ohio. Funeral services by the writer.

W. J. H. BAUMAN.

LYON—At Good Hope, Ohio, March 16, 1881, Sadie M., consort of Michael F. Lyon, aged 25 years, 7 months and 7 days.

Her disease was haemiplegia. Sadie was afflicted to her bed seven weeks. She was a consistent church member, greatly esteemed and much beloved by all. She was naturally of an affable and obliging disposition, pleasant and agreeable. She was much esteemed by all who had frequented her acquaintances. In her death her heart-broken husband has lost a kind companion, the widowed mother an affable daughter, and the sister one that was always loving and gentle; yet they need not mourn as those who have no hope. To the grief-stricken husband we would say: "Strive on, to meet Sadie in heaven. God is able to sustain you in all the sorrows of life. Cast your cares upon him, and may you be permitted to meet again in the bright climate where there is no more parting. A. C. GUSTIN.

BRUBAKER—In the Mt. Valley church, Greene Co., Tenn., June 2, 1880 (?), Eld. Henry Brubaker, aged 71 years and 20 days.

Brother Henry was born in Virginia. He embraced religion in his early life, was elected to the office of deacon, then was called to the ministry in 1808, and then ordained to the eldership, in which capacity he served until called by the great Head of the church to the home of the best. He was the father of nine children. His first companion, two daughters and one son preceded him in the journey of life. All died in the Christian's hope. He left a second companion, four sons in the ministry, one deacon, and one wandering out of the fold of Christ, and a great many grandchildren to mourn their loss. He was not as able a minister as some, but for zeal and earnestness in the cause of Christ he had few superiors. He requested his funeral should be preached by the writer, which was done from Rev. 14: 13, to a large and attentive audience.

ABRAHAM MOLSBERG.

Death of Elder Daniel Neher.

NEHER—Near Salem, Marion Co., Ill., April 12, 1881, Bro. Daniel Neher, aged 67 years, 6 months and 9 days.

He leaves a sorrowing wife and three sons and two daughters; had 27 grand-children, (two are dead) to mourn their loss, hoping their loss is his greater gain. Our brother and his wife have lived together as husband and wife for 43 years, 8 months and 26 days. He was a member of the church 47 years. Preached 35 years. He was a son of Henry and Elizabeth Neher.

Bro. D. Neher was born in Rockingham Co., Va., Oct. 8, 1815 and united with the church in that county in September 1839. Emigrated to Clark Co., Ohio in the year 1843. Then moved to the State of Indiana (to Clinton Co.) in the year 1857, and was united with Mary Metzger in the holy bond of matrimony, Sept. 17, 1857. He was elected a minister of the Gospel March 27, 1846, and ordained to the eldership June 1, 1855.

He next moved to Marion Co., Ill., in the year 1871. Had the care and oversight of the church. The church needed a meeting-house to worship God; and in the year 1877 Elder Neher with the rest of the members agreed to build a meeting-house for the members and their children and the neighbors and their children, and all their friends to meet together to worship God. I have been informed that Elder Neher bore about half of the expenses of the house. His last sermon preached to his congregation, Feb. 6, 1881, from the following text: "I must work the works of him that sent me, while it is day; the night cometh, when no man can work." John 9: 4.

Bro. John could live to see the day, that his children all united with the church, his three sons being elected ministers of the Gospel and occupying the same official relation.

Bro. Neher's death was rather peculiar. A tumor had grown around his throat just where the food would pass into his stomach. The tumor had grown around the throat so tight, that no food could pass through it for thirty-three days. It was one of the most solemn cases I ever witnessed. He was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord before he died. He was willing to go to his long home and be with the Lord. He would frequently say, not my will be done, but the Lord's will be done. He was a faithful brother, always contending for the faith delivered to the saints. He was a good counselor. The church lost a faithful minister, the neighbors said: "We lost one of our best citizens."

On the 12th of April he died and on the 14th he was buried. A very large crowd of people attended his funeral and many tears were shed. Peace be to his ashes. Funeral improved by the writer from John 5: 25, 29 and 29.

A BILL introduced into the Vermont Legislature forbids running railroad trains and locomotives on Sunday.

THE Cherokee Indians, the most civilized nation in the Indian Territory, number 20,000 actual citizens. It supports one hundred and seven schools, in which instruction is given in English, a boys' high school, a girls' high school, an orphan asylum, an asylum for the insane, blind and intelligent, and other public institutions. Out of 5,160 men over eighteen years of age, only sixteen are hunters and five fishermen, 3,540 are farmers, and the rest are professional men, merchants, mechanics and laborers.

A POOR tramp was found in Mitchell, Ind., by the water tank, in the south part of town during the extreme cold weather in December, and from the effects of exposure died and was buried in the "potter's field." Since that day to the present day, the sexton has noticed a small black and white dog watching by the grave of his master, for the dog was with the tramp when found. The dog would growl at the old sexton when approached, but to-day he had so far succumbed to starvation as to be helpless. When the old man carried the poor brute to his house, and when food was placed in his mouth, he was able to swallow. As soon as the dog is restored to strength sufficient he will be returned to the grave of his master, furnished with a comfortable kennel, and the people will see that he is well fed and cared for. It is believed by the sexton that during the three months, the dog had not been away from the grave nor eaten a bite.

The German government has used every device to prevent the emigration of its citizens, but to no purpose. Failing to keep her sons at home, Germany has attempted, as the next best thing, to keep them German and thus propagate a German influence throughout the world. But here, too, she has been defeated, and the desponding cry is, "Our children all turn into native Yankees!" the second or third generation, and are lost to us." As a last resort an attempt is now to be made to turn the tide of emigration towards some part of South America, where, it is hoped the German element may be able to maintain itself. To facilitate this enterprise, a leading German Journalist is about to start on an extended tour through South America. There is quite a belief in Germany that a large and influential German colony with a decided German policy may yet be created under the Southern Cross.

The most popular religion is that which seldom pull at the purse.

The Roman Catholics have succeeded in driving every colporteur out of the Tyrol.

All the Brethren papers, excepting the Advocate, were represented at the A. M.

The rulers of Russia are still in dread. The nihilists continue to threaten the Emperor.

Only sixty cents for B. at W. to January 1st, 1882. Now is the time to secure new subscribers.

Do not fail to send for a copy of the Stein and Ray Debate. The book is now ready for delivery.

Bro. D. M. Miller, of Linn, went to Minnesota last week to continue his missionary work there.

The West Branch Feast, last Thursday and Friday, was well attended. There were three baptisms.

The British and Foreign Bible Society put in circulation in China, last year, 220,000 copies of Scripture.

The ticket-agent at Ashland said that 5,500 persons came over the railroad to that point during the A. M.

Even the little folks have caught the missionary spirit, and desire to help build a meeting-house in Denmark.

The natives of the New Hebrides have paid the entire expense of publishing the Bible in their own language.

Timber was hauled at West Branch, June 12th. Church land at that place is working up encouragingly.

We see from the paper published at Mayville, Colorado, that Bro. M. V. Seward has reached that place in safety.

Our great Brethren stand firmly united on the fundamental principles of Christianity. The opposition is small.

The Standing Committee held its meetings in one of the College rooms, hence had a very convenient place of business.

Bro. H. R. Holsinger and wife spent a few days this last week with their daughter, Lottie, who is attending school at the College.

Now, brethren and sisters, let us have good pure matter in our paper. Do all you can to help make the contents of this paper what it should be.

There is a Jewish couple residing in Keosauqua, Hungary, who united ages amount to 217 years. The husband is 106 and his wife 111 years old.

The time-honored principles of our fraternity were nobly maintained at our late A. M. May God help us to defend these principles more than ever before.

While at Ashland we were so busy that we could spend less than a few moments in the Gospel Preacher office. We would like to have become better acquainted.

Are you working for the 10,000? Only 60 cents for B. at W. to January 1st, 1882. Let every reader resolve to mail into an agent and procure some subscribers.

R. H. MILLER, John Wise and Daniel Vaniman are expected at Waldman's Grove on Friday of this week.

At the A. M. $2,890.00 were collected and pledged for a meeting-house in Denmark. Nearly $4,000.00 was cash.

The next Annual Meeting is to be held with the Brethren in Northern Indiana. The exact point is not yet fully determined.

Bro. Jas. R. Gish, of Rouboux, Ill., was quite sick last week. He has been unwell ever since his return from Arkansas last Spring.

The Standing Committee was an able representative body. It comprehended the situation, and did its work in the fear of the Lord.

Bro. Eschelman's correspondents will please exercise patience, as he is unable to answer now. He hopes to be able to attend to some of the work soon.

Church news and correspondence received during our absence could not be inserted till after our return, hence some of it may seem a little old to our readers.

Bro. D. C. Moonan gives in the Providence an interesting, condensed report of the services and doings of the District meeting in the First District of Virginia.

There are in all 183 persons engaged in missionary work in Japan. The missionaries have reached the higher classes of society better in Japan, so far, than anywhere else.

Our last issue was muddy at our late Annual Meeting. It rained every day excepting Friday. It did not take the crowd of reading of a few thousand people long to make the mud thick and deep.

At the A. M. the editors were favored with a neat, convenient bit in which to transact their business. The custom is a good one if not interfered with by parties who abuse the privileges thus afforded.

A pressure of business in the office did not permit us to attend the Pine Creek Feast last Tuesday and Wednesday. Their present say the attendance was 600 so large as usual, but the meeting was interesting.

Bro. D. L. Miller's father, of Hagenstown, Md., is spending a few weeks with his children at the College. He expects to accompany his son D. L. to Colorado about the middle of July. He is a fine-looking old brother.

Bro. Nebelmann attended the Love-feast at Rouboux, Woodford Co., Ill., last week. He reports an excellent meeting and a large working body of members. He will have something to say about the meeting next week.

A BROTHER company has the contract of constructing two railroads through Palestine. The northern terminus of one road will be at Damascus, the oldest town in the world, it is said, founded before the days of Abraham.

The 29,000 Baptists of Sweden, after being obliged to pay $29,000 a year to the State church, and a $70,000 a year for their own missionary work. What will some of those rich ones who growed at 25 cents a year say to that?

Brother Oliver I. Cover who has been working in our office since last December, has gone out to minister for the Illinois Native Preachers. We hope he may be successful; for the Word of the Lord should be read and studied by all men.

SUNDAY afternoon, June 12th, was noted for disastrous storms in the West. Hundreds of people and animals were killed and a vast amount of property destroyed in Iowa, Kansas and Missouri. In Iowa half fell measuring 12 inches in circumference.

The closing exercises of the Mt. Morris College, for the present year, will take place June 28th, at which time several pupils will graduate. The past year has been a very successful one, and the school closes with excellent prospects for the coming Fall term.

We presume most of our readers, while at the Annual Meeting, found out who wrote the anonymous little tract, entitled "Voice of Seven Truths." We, with many others, were surprised, but "truth will out," and now since the facts are known the tract will do very little if any harm.

Bro. Eschelman preached in the College Chapel Sunday night, June 12th. During the services a heavy storm prevailed, so that it was very difficult to hold the attention of the people, for most persons cannot listen well when the wind, lightning, thunder and rain are raging without.

Bro. James Quater preached in the M. E. Church in Ashland, Sunday at eleven. At the same hour J. W. Bels delivered the word of God at the Lutheran Church; John Wise in the Presbyterian, Joseph Leely in the Evangelical, and D. B. Gibson in the U. B. and E. F. Moonan in the Baptist Church.

The Unitarian is just now displaying an extraordinary amount of enterprise. The July No. (16 page) is on our table, and contains as interesting a report of the proceedings of the Annual Meeting as has yet been published. It comes very near being a tracture. The items are generally interesting, and some of them rather pointed.

A NUMBER of queries from Oregon, intended for publication, were rejected because the writer spent out the whole sheet of paper and wrote across both pages. Article thus written cannot be used, as they take up too much room when spread out on the printer's case. Article, written for publication should be written on paper not over six inches wide.

IN THE A. M. at Ashland a few persons had their pockets picked. To us it is a wonder that many of them escaped as well as they did, for when they entered the cars at the depot they moved in a soft mass, thus giving a perfect opportunity to use their amiable pockets undisturbed. The more prudent waited till the train was over then walked leisurely into the cars and took their time to finding seats.

BROTHERS Paul Wetzel and J. M. Snyder of Grandy Center, Iowa, have enlisted in the service of the Brotherhood published by Bro. Aschenbrenner at Grandy, Iowa, and will endeavor to make the German paper more useful among the German readers in the church. We would like to see the paper receive a hearty support, and we hope six friends and those who should be, will endeavor to bring work cheerfully and perseveringly to make it a success.

We have before us a copy of the Stein and Ray Debate, a neatly printed and well-bound volume of over 400 pages. The character and value of the discussion is too well known to our readers to require any special recommendation from us. Suffice it to say that the book should be in the hands of all those who expect to stand in defense of the truth. The price is very reasonable, only $1.50. It may be had of the Western Book Exchange, Mt. Morris, Ill.

LET EVERY ONE SWEEP BEFORE HIS OWN DOOR.

Do we heed the homely adage

Handed down from days of yore?—
"Ere you sweep your neighbor's dwelling, Clear the rubbish from your door."

Let no rust, no filth there gather—

Leave no traces of decay;

Pluck up every word unsightly,

Brush the fallen leaves away!

If we faithfully have labored

Thus to sweep without, within—

Plucked up envy, evil-speaking,

Malice, each besetting sin,—

Words that by the sacred portals

Of the inner temple grow,—

Poisonous weeds the heart defiling,

Bearing bitterness and woe;

Then perchance we may have leisure

O'er our neighbors watch to keep;

All the work assigned us finished

We before his door may sweep;

Show him where the mosses cling, —

Tokens ever of decay;

Where the thistles thickly spring, —

Daily must be cleared away.

But alas! our work neglecting,

Of we mount the judgment seat,

With his failing, his omissions,

We our wary brother greet;

In some hidden nook forgotten,

Searching with a careful eye

We the springing weeds discover—

Some slight blemish there descrie.

On the judgment seat still sitting,

We no helping hand extend

To assist our weaker brother,

His short-comings to amend,

For his weariness, his faltering,

We no sweet compassion show—

From our store no cordial bring him,

No encouragement bestow.

But, while busied with our neighbor,

Urging him to ceaseless care—

Calling to the thoughtless idlers,

To their labor to repair,

Lo! unseen the dust has gathered,

Weeds are growing where of yore

Flowers rare and sweet were blooming

When we swept before our door.

Ah! how easy o'er our brother

Faithful ward and watch to keep;

But alas! before our dwelling

Hard indeed to daily sweep;

Harder than to share the conflict,

"By the stuff" at home to stay,—

Easier far to sit in judgment

Than to humbly watch and pray.

For the Brethren at Work.

LOOK OUT FOR THE OLD SERPENT.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Milton S. Zortman, of Chicago:—

MY dear nephew. You are not forgotten, although my answer is tardy. My sufferings are unusually severe this Winter, and I have my hands and head and heart loaded with literary work. Saw your parents yesterday. Their hearts yearn for the welfare of their noble boy. You are a child of many prayers. Even in your antenatal state you were enveloped in the incense of the altar. The Shekinah has overhung your steps from your babyhood to this moment. You have been reared "in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." Do not disappoint your friends. We cherish high expectations, which can only be realized by your fidelity to the high standard of Christian principle. Be brave and noble in the midst of glittering temptations. When sinners entice thee, be steadfast. Think of your loving, pious, self-sacrificing mother, and of the prayers and tears she offered day and night to God for her absent darlings. She is my only living sister, and I second all her sighs and tears and supplications. Her every heart-beat is a prayer, and my every pulse beats amen. If the effectual fervent prayer of Godly parents availeth in the sight of God, I believe that providence and grace will keep you from ruin. Think of the eternal future. Fear God. He is great and terrible as well as gracious and fatherly. Keep his word near you, and consult it often. No counselor like the All-wise. No book on earth so grand and profound and safe as the Bible. It will make you wise unto salvation. It will teach you something better than telegraphy. Study the Proverbs of Solomon. They sparkle with gems of Divine wisdom. Let not a day pass without fresh gleanings from God's holy acre. It will keep you in awe that you sin not. It will give you many a victory over the flesh and the world and the devil. It is the sword of the Spirit, and cuts through the very marrow of sin and Satan.

Be faithful to your employers. Do nothing to diminish their confidence. They will respect you all the more for your conscientiousness. Do your best in all your attempt; and let your motto be EXCELLENCE. Be a model of youthful dignity and sobriety. Keep out of questionable society. Shun places of amusement. Never set foot inside a theatre. Put your whole soul into the crusade against intemperance, and widen the pledge for yourself to include even popular table beverages. Tea and coffee are cousins german to the more fiery liquors. Water and the unadulterated juice of fruits are fit for gods. The gates of hell are many; approach them not. The infernal suction may draw you in. Part company with all who turn their faces thitherward. God will raise you up friends, and lead you triumphantly to the goal of right endeavor, if you make his fear the regulative principle of your life. Be neither ashamed or afraid to suffer for devotion to what is high in aim and sound in principle. Joseph was for years incarcerated in an Egyptian dungeon on a false charge. How gloriously did God reward his fidelity. From his gloomy imprisonment he ascended the throne, and became the Savior of the world and the golden link in the scheme of the redemption. The same God lives and reigns to-day. When you are tempted to violate chastity, or debase your manhood in any way, reply as Joseph did: "how can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God."

Chicago is full of snares for your inexperienced feet. The iniquities of Sodom and Gomorrah prevail there. Be on your guard. The bait may look enchanting, and have a flavor like paradise. Beware. Look not on the forbidden tree, lest the bewitching eye of the old serpent fascinate you. A thin gilding of sham, and then bitterness and rottenness, self-condemnation and hell. Keep your conscience pure. The eyes of flame penetrate the veil of midnight, and compass the guilty soul with the glare of midday. Often bow your knees and ask the Almighty for help. He only can "deliver you from evil." "It is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die." Death may claim you among strangers, and bear you hence without again seeing your parents. Think not of the rider of the pale horse as fifty years distant, but with his cold, heart-crushing hoofs on the threshold. He never trots, but always gallops. His shadow is on the most robust. Let your whole life be a drilling for the exulting swan-song. "O

WAR reverses, with respect to its objects, all the principles of morality. It is a temporary repeal of the claims of virtue, and includes nearly all the vices, death where is thy sting, O grave where is thy victory?" Be ambitious to become a first-class telegraphic operator, but forget not that you are in Christ's employ. Send more telegrams to heaven than any where else. If you are honest, God will answer you promptly. Cling to the Cross, and keep the Crown in view.

DANIEL'S VISION.

BY D. E. BRUBAKER.

CHAPTER 1st.—"And I Daniel was at that time in silent meditations, and my thoughts were exercised concerning the things that were to come to pass in the latter times. I beheld, and lo! one like unto the Prince of the power of the air sitting upon his throne, clothed with dominion and power; and around and about him were gathered a great host of his fellow companions and servants, both small and great. And I wondered with great admiration when he, whose surname is Lucifer, arose in the midst of the assembly and opened his mouth and spake "great swelling words" to devise mischief against the Lord's people. I beheld, and lo they all bowed their heads in silence, while their chief magistrate, whose countenance was fierce to look upon, uttered words very cunningly devised, like unto the words of one old and well skilled to 'deceive the nations.'"

"Be it known unto you, O ye, my servants, that rejoice to do my bidding, and execute my decrees, that the time is short, and much of our arduous work of deceiving the nations remaineth to be done, but is possible we will deceive the very elect. It is well known unto you, O my servants, that the cruel persecutions which we stirred up against that people only made them love each other more, and caused them to follow more closely one 'Jesus of Nazareth,' whom they still follow, and call their 'Lord and Master'; and although we have caused many of them, even of their chief men, to be cast into prisons, and caused them to be tortured and slain, yet we found that this only caused that their doctrine became spread all over the world, and many of my servants became their disciples. And as for the cruel and bloody wars that we have so often brought about with our cunning devices, into which we surely thought we could entice them, have all failed to deceive them, for they all seem to remember the words of him whom they call their Savior: 'All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword'; and the words of one Paul who wrote unto them that the 'weapons of our warfare are not carnal.'

"Go to now. I have devised with my much accumulated skill a matter where-with many of them shall be defiled. Their Master has told them, as ye all know, O ye my servants, that they shall love one another, and also one of their chief writers taught them as a token of this love, 'they should salute all with a holy kiss'; and also taught them that their bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost, and that whosoever defileth the temple him will God destroy.

"As is well known unto you, O ye my servants, that from the beginning we have had much trouble to destroy this love that is among this peculiar people. Therefore, O my legions, this thing which I have now devised against them, and which we will now determine in this lawful assembly, shall not only destroy their love one for another, but it will at the same time defile their bodies, which they call the temple of the Holy Ghost."

And I Daniel, saw that the thing pleased the whole assembly; and like unto one that loveth to be exalted and have the pre-eminence in an assembly, he continued to remain upon his feet, and drew, as it were, from a parchment (which seemed to contain many enchantments) a large leaf, as it were heavily ribbed in the middle thereof, and exceeding broad in size, like unto a palm leaf; and lo! on either side and in the midst thereof appeared signs of filthiness, smoke, abominations, sickness and death. And I Daniel was exceedingly amazed when I heard him in whose hand the leaf was, say to his fellow servants: 'It is now decreed that ye who live to execute my wise decrees, must now go forth up and down in the earth, and entice all people and nations and tongues to put it in their mouths, to consume it away in smoke and all manner of filthiness.' And I Daniel was wondering what would come to pass next. Then there arose one of his chief servants, who seemed like unto one that had much experience, and very proud, and he opened his mouth and said unto Lucifer, his father, "Seeing that this great and poisonous herb when taken into one's mouth, tasteth like unto green gourds mingled with gall, and causeth much sickness and dizziness, (like unto your cup) and much filthiness and spitting." O prince, I fear we will have much trouble to entice them. Moreover you well know that the 'peculiar people' are very careful not to set bad examples before their little ones and their neighbors, believing they are 'the light of the world.'

Then with much confidence, the chief Prince arose and said, "Go to now; it will be easy enough, if you set a snare and entice them into it while young, before their minds become strong with understanding. Moreover, you must seek out cunning men who are my servants, and love to do my bidding, who will help you to make it pleasing to the taste, by mingling sweetness, and will moreover help you to make it very pleasant to the eye by putting it up into cunning little plugs and twists and rolls. And when once they begin to use thereof, will I not bind them in my strong chains. O hear ye my servants; have ye forgotten how I overcame them with my cup?' And the saying pleased the whole assembly and their Master dismissed them, and they went out, and all departed to and fro through the earth. And I Daniel, said surely the people will not be deceived thereat, unless they forget the words of the Most High.

CHAPTER 2nd.—And I Daniel was much troubled in spirit, seeing that this great device was devised to entice the Lord's people to be defiled thereat, and at which many would have their love destroyed if they were enticed.

In those days it was determined that we make ready to hold the feast that is called the feast of love, and when with one accord the Lord's people, together with their children and neighbors and many strangers came together at the tabernacle to worship. And I Daniel beheld, and lo a certain young man that was not a servant of the Most High God, was standing near unto the congregation; and in his mouth was a small roll, in appearance like unto the leaf, spoken of in the other chapter of the vision, that I had seen in the hand of him who is the accuser of the Brethren. Behold fire was at the outer end of the roll that was in the young man's mouth; and lo the "smoke of his torment" arose up and passed over the congregation, and defiled the pure air where the Lord's people had assembled. And behold a certain mother in Israel beckoned unto me and said, "O Daniel, go and rebuke that young man and bid him depart from the congregation, for we are tormented in this smoke." And being in authority that year, I bade him to depart, and he departed. And as I reached near unto one of the doors of the tabernacle, I saw and beheld one of the elders who had come unto the feast, standing near unto an outer gate, with something no larger than a wine glass, dark and filthy in appearance, in his right hand, which had a crooked stem in appearance like unto a reed, the end of which was in his mouth, from which there issued now and then a cloud of smoke, in smell like unto the smoke of the young man only more filthy. The young man that had departed came near and pointed at the elder with his finger, and looked at me as much as to say, "O Daniel, rebuke him as thou didst me, for it is written that 'Judgment must begin at the house of God.'" But forasmuch as I greatly loved the dear elder, I held my peace, fearing it would destroy his love for me. And I was troubled in spirit, for I felt some of my love for him had departed. I smote my breast and said, "Ah Lord, in vain have I rebuked the young man to cease troubling Israel." And behold, it was told unto me that other elders also and ministers that minister before the Most High, and some mothers in Israel, had been enticed to defile their breath and mouths therewith. And it had been declared unto us by one disciple and many more that have caused it to be put into writing that in many places elders, ministers and deacons, mothers in Israel, rich and poor, small and great, old and young, have been snared and taken.

But I, Daniel, have been much rejoiced in spirit, to see that many are now delivered and brought back from under the bondage, which will continue for a time, times, and the dividing of times. And behold I believe the vision is true. But it was not all a vision.

If your life flow smoothly on, and yet it is a life of sin, be sure there is a cataract ahead, filled with danger and destruction.

HOW THE SORE MAY BE HEALED BY REMOVING THE CORRUPTION.

BY J. J. SOLOMON.

SUCH is the corruption of human nature; such is the weakness of grace in this imperfect state, that, though the greater part of Christians can act the Christian in some things, it is a rare thing to find a man who can act the Christian in all things. When we are only spectators of the conduct of others, it is easy to prescribe like an apostle, and only enforce the golden rules of the Gospel. But when it touches us we are not just in that mode. A beam can lie concealed in our own eye, while a mote is clearly seen in our neighbor's. We are but men and sinners, and to guard against sinful passion should be the prayer of every heart. Since we are but men, we must expect to suffer from one hand or the other, and being sinful men, under our sufferings we may sin. The malice that we have an eye to is causeless, cruel, and unrelenting. But the character of Christians is meekness; and persons who expect to enter heaven must have their conversation in heaven even while dwelling here on earth, and contending with the firebrand of hell.

The precept and example of Christ should ever be our pattern here in this militant state. "Love your enemies." This lesson is from God, and a command for all the sons of God to imitate. So the Christian hero, prompted by the precepts of heaven, should study to conquer self and all is won. Love the Brotherhood. We know that we have passed from death to life, because we love the Brethren. But love your enemies, (I feel corrupt nature reluctant) is the laying off the high priest of our profession, and to do so would prove not only that we are passed from death to life, but that grace is very lively. It is a shame for us to dwell so much on what our fellow creatures do, who are on the same level, or only a little our superior has done, and yet never stop and reflect on our offences against God, who is infinite, exalted above us beyond conception and thought. If we are injured, the law is broken; if the law is broken, God is dishonored. God being dishonored, not us being injured, should be the cause of our sorrow and the burden of our souls. But we would greatly offend against God, who is over all, if we render evil for evil, since he has expressly forbidden it. How often have we wasted precious times, by revealing in our mind all the aggravations of our injurious treatment; forgetful that every day we have offended God in a much greater degree; forgetful that we have daily received from him such tender mercies as might make us forget all the mischief that all our fellow creatures could do to us. That malice that could wish its hated person condescend to everlasting flames must owe its birth to hell. I do not believe that there is a child of God's on his footstool but would readily wish his greatest enemy a share in the common salvation and a mansion in the highest heavens. How mean, how inconsistent, then, to wish him a kingdom and a crown, and yet keep piercing him with a thorn while traveling thither! Let us follow peace with all men (enemies not excepted). Though some individuals break this command with respect to us, yet we are not less bound to observe it towards them. Moreover, why should we, who have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ, and must shortly enter into eternity, have an uproar of war kindled in all the powers of our souls by the impotent bravadoes of this world? Suppose there is nothing about our enemies that can make us love them for their own sakes, yet are we not to love them for God's sake? We are to love them for God's sake because he has commanded us so to do. God is love; this all the world knows. While the sun shines on the evil and on the just, and his rain falls on the just and on the unjust, and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, shall any unjust usage, shall any temptation provoke us from our high abode to sit down on the dung hill of anger and revenge? Whenever we cease to dwell in love, and be all love to friends and foes, (no matter how they have used us) then we cease to dwell in God. Again, have we never received any favors or benefits from them? or have there never been acts of friendship between us? Why, then, is all this forgotten in our wrath? It should be our study, and should be our glory; never to forget a kindness, never to remember an injury. This may be called a mean spirit by the world, but I am sure it is the spirit of Christianity.

Moreover, can we suppose ourselves so perfect as to receive so much ill usage and return none? Then if we have said or done aught amiss in the excess of our passions, as no doubt we have, then should not we make some allowance for this in the folly of our friends, especially if incendiaries come between, who always represent things in the worst form? We may be apt to think, had our abusers the least appearance of God about them, we could then frankly forgive them; but would not this be the spirit of a friend, if they have no interest in God? Are they not mere the objects of our most tender compassion? In offending brethren, we must pity the error, and forgive them. But in offending sinners we must commiserate their very estate and pray for them. And indeed this is the only way to render love for hatred and good for evil. Therefore let us carry our bitterest enemies to the throne of grace and implore the blessings of God in their behalf.

If man uses us rudely or injurious in a rage, we should not feel for our own maltreatment, but a real concern for our frantic friend, and hope the crisis of his rage will soon restore him to the use of his reason. Or, if another person would fret and chafe to do us mischief all the year round, then, with deeper compassion we would have to consider our unhappy acquaintance as a confirmed lunatic. And so we should look on the man that uses us ill in a fit of passion, (as in a mental delirium), and pity him; and him that maltreats us from month to month and from year to year, as a mental lunatic, and commiserate his mournful situation from the bottom of our souls.

As it is noble to present the needy with our charity, and not wait till him portuned, though neither desired to do it nor thanked for it, when an offending person confesses and begs pardon, it is praiseworthy to pardon, and yet we can do no less, because God has commanded it. But it is much more noble, from a sense of duty, to forgive stubborn offenders, because then we obtain a victory over ourselves, which is the best of all conquests. To indulge in rancor and revenge may gratify our unrenewed parts, but cannot benefit our better parts here or hereafter. But to forgive and forget enemies and injuries, will be no grief of mind to us when we arrive at the heavenly state, to dwell in the presence of God. O how few years bring us to our journey's end! Why should we keep our anger forever, and our contentions while we live? O how feeble is the wrath of a mortal who cannot defend himself from one moment's sickness. O if the precious time and precious thoughts that have been spent on what we call ill usage had been spent in heavenly meditations, they would have brought "meat out of the eater, and sweat out of the strong." May this be a lesson for us, in all time to come: "Whatever maltreatment we may get from our fellow-creatures, overlook it, and acknowledge heaven in all; thus shall we behave like children of God, and candidates for heaven. O how foolish it is to fear, as if the Most High did not rule over the children of men. To live in full fellowship with Christ should be our determination, though living in a world of corruption; for it is but a short time until our enemies go from us or we go from them, into the invisible world, and we cannot tell how soon. Let us all be true to the Lord and his cause, that we may gain a crown of righteousness that fadeth not away. O that we may copy after Jesus in meekness, so as to conquer self and attain a oneness in faith, practice, in apparel, and in our daily walk and conversation, that the world may believe that Jesus is the Son of the living God, and has power over all.

For the Brethren at Work

PASSING AWAY.

BY JOSEPH D. MOATS.

EVER since the earth has been created, it has been passing away. Not only the earth, but everything that was created. The sun, moon, and all the beautiful stars sooner or later will finish their wonderful career. There is never but one moment of time given to us at once, and as the moments go by, everything in existence goes to eternity.

The old man, while wishing he were a boy again, does not think that he is all the time growing older and that he will soon be with the past. Look! see that cantering steed; how fast he goes! how swift! how free! See his noble rider—a blooming youth with rosy cheeks, and a few Summers of experience, he goes to the battle field of life.

How light his step! how fair his brow! Poor boy. Little does he know of the storms on the ocean of life, or his brow would be darkened with a cloud of sorrow. A few years later and the once-beautiful horse will be old. Poor and crippled he goes with his once-beautiful rider to the pasture to spend the remainder of his days in peace, for in a few more days he too will be with the past.

Like the flowers of the meadow, we are cut down and left to decay. Look over your papers; see the deaths! Ah! what a change there will be in a few more years! Where will all those hoary locks that decorate our fathers be—they that are about to cross the river of death and enter the land of rest? Well might we say, what a change, when we the young of to-day will take their places. Now what are we to do since we are all on the rapid wheels of time! We cannot stay here, for we see our friends go daily, and we, too, will soon go, and the place that knows us now will know us no more. We have to do some thing, and the sooner the better. I will tell you what I think we would better do; I think we would better improve the present, for the good Book tells us that we shall go to a home beyond the skies. O what a promise! Who would not sacrifice most anything, yea everything, for a home in heaven, where we can all be together forever! Now, my dear young friends, let's all turn to the Lord, for he placed us here to serve him; then when we cross the river of death we can all go home, and live with the angels.

Altoona, Iowa.

A missionary says that one great hindrance in the East is that the families do not eat together. Much of our love and mutual help comes from the family gatherings at meals. So the Lord's Supper and the feasts of love in the church are very helpful to a better acquaintance, and purer, deeper love for each other. So also daily, frequent communion with God makes the soul better acquainted with him.

The Lord will come again, in the end of this age, to gather together the jewels for his kingdom. The pure and the good only will be claimed by him. If we have not followed him amid the scoffs and temptations of life, we will not be counted among the faithful ones on that day.

THE NEW COVENANT.

BY MARY A. EVANS.

"And in thy seed shall the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen 22: 18.

ABRAHAM had been commanded to offer up his son Isaac. The man of faith obeyed, and traveled three days from Bersabee to the land of Moriah, that he might offer his son for a burnt offering upon one of its mountains; probably the very spot where, two thousand years later, Christ would be crucified; and when they reached the place, Abraham built an altar, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac, his son, and laid him on the altar; a type of Christ being crucified on the cross. Abraham took the knife to slay his son, but the angel of the Lord called unto him out of heaven, and said, Abraham lay not thine hand upon the lad, neither do thou anything unto him: for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing that thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only son from me. Then after offering the ram, instead of his son, the angel of the Lord made with him a covenant and said: "By myself have I sworn, saith the Lord, for because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld thy son, thine only son, that in blessing I will bless thee, and in multiplying I will multiply thy seed as the stars of heaven, and as the sand of the sea-shore, and thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed, because thou hast obeyed my voice." This then was the new covenant spoken of by Paul, and made to Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the law given to Moses. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made; He saith not, and to thy seeds, as of many, but as of one; "And to thy seed," which is Christ, and this I say, was the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ; the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. Gal. 3: 16, 17.

The covenant was confirmed when God sent forth his Son, made of a woman of the seed of Abraham, to redeem them that were under the law, through his death on the cross. The promises were made to Abraham and his seed. Paul shows, that that seed was Christ.

Let us now enquire what constitutes the Christ! Let Paul answer: "As many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ, there is neither Jew nor Greek, neither bond nor free, neither male nor female, for ye are all one in Christ," and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Now, if we are in Christ, we form a part of Him, and are regarded as a unit fully as much as man is a unit of head and body. If then we constitute the body of Christ, if we are heirs with him, what a glorious destiny awaits us, when he comes the second time without sin unto salvation; then the work will be before us to carry out the plan of redemption to a lost world. This has not yet been accomplished, but not one jot or tittle of his word can fail. The kingdom of God has not yet been established. The knowledge of the Lord does not yet cover the earth as water covers the sea; the nations have not yet beat their swords into pruning-hooks; Jesus and his saints are not yet reigning; Abraham is still sleeping in the dust of the earth; the tribes of Israel are still scattered; the nations are not yet blessed; but the fig tree begins to put forth her blossoms. The time of trouble spoken of by Daniel is at hand, when God's people shall be delivered, when they that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, when the living saints shall be changed, and caught away to meet the Lord in the air. Jesus will come as a thief in the night for when they see peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them; but the Brethren of Christ are not in darkness, that that day should overtake them as a thief; therefore, let us not sleep as do others; but let us watch and be sober. Let us press forward toward the mark of the high prize; for how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation. Let us be mindful of the words spoken by the holy prophets, and of the commandments of the apostles of the Lord and Savior; knowing this, that in the last days, there shall come scoffers, saying, where is his promise of his coming?

B-loved, let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, that we may be found without spot or blemish.

WHY I GO TO CHURCH ON RAINY SUNDAYS.

I ATTEND church on rainy Sundays because—

1. God has blessed the Lord's day and hallowed it; making no exceptions for rainy Sundays.
2. I expect my minister to be there. I should be surprised if he should stay at home for the weather.
3. If his hands fall through weakness I shall have great reason to blame myself, unless I sustain him by my prayers and my presence.
4. By staying away I may lose the prayers, which bring God's blessing, and the sermon that would have done me great good.
5. My presence is more useful on Sundays, when there are few, than on those days when the church is crowded.
6. Whatever station I hold in the church, my example must influence others. If I stay away, why may not they?
7. On any important business, rainy weather does not keep me at home; and church attendance is, in God's sight very important.
8. Among the crowds of pleasure seekers I see that no weather keeps the delicate female from the ball, party, or concert.
9. Among other blessings, such weather will show me on what foundation my faith is built. It will prove how much I love Christ. True love rarely fails to meet an appointment.
10. Those who stay away from church because it is too warm, or too cold, or too rainy, frequently absent themselves on fair Sundays.
11. Though my excuses satisfy myself, they still must undergo God's scrutiny; and they must be well grounded to bear that. (St. Luke xiv, 18)
12. There is a special promise, that where two or three meet together in God's name, he will be in the midst of them.
13. An unavoidable absence from the church is an infallible evidence of spiritual decay. Disciples first follow Christ at a distance, and then, like Peter, do not know him.

14. My faith is to be shown by my self-denying Christian life, and not by the rise or fall of the thermometer.

15. Such yielding to surmountable difficulties prepares for yielding to those merely imaginary, until thousands never enter a church, and yet think they have good reasons for such neglect.

16. By a suitable arrangement on Saturday, I shall be able to attend church without exhaustion; otherwise, my late work on Saturday night must tend to unfit me for the Sunday enjoyment of Christian privileges.

17. I know not how many more Sundays God may give me; and it would be a poor preparation for my first Sunday in heaven to have blighted my last Sunday on earth.—Francis Ridley Havergal.

A WELL-to-do deacon in Connecticut was one morning accosted by his pastor, who said, "Poor widow Green's wood is out. Can you not take her a cord?" "Well," answered the deacon, "I have the wood and I have the team; but who is to pay us for it?" The pastor, somewhat vexed, replied, "I will pay you for it, on the condition that you read the first three verses of the 41st Psalm before you go to bed to-night." The deacon consented, delivered the wood, and at night opened the word of God and read the passage: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies. The Lord will strengthen him upon the bed of languishing; thou wilt make all his bed in his sickness." A few days afterward the pastor met him again. "How much do I owe you, deacon, for that cord of wood?" "Oh!" said the now enlightened man, "do not speak of payment; I did not know those promises were in the Bible. I would not take money for supplying the old widow's wants."

It is a fair reference: "Ask the dog." If a man or woman is a true Christian, every horse and cow, and dog and cat, on the place knows it. As he gains in self control they all grow more fond of him and trust their brute temper. As he proves himself to be more trustworthy and humane in his temper, they honor him by an obedience that has affection in it. A fractious man will have horses of the same kind. A man can deceive his minister, but with his horse or dog he cannot pass himself far above his actual value. His excellence or ugliness of temper will be represented by every animal on the farm.

A FULL estimate of expenses, wastes of time, damages, derangement of business, and actual losses during our four years' war would amount to twenty-five tens and millions of dollars. This sum, if divided among the inhabitants both North and South, would give five hundred dollars to each person.

On the integrity of the citizen depends the safety of the State.

DRESS.

WITH the Bible in our hands, common sense in our heads, and the Holy Spirit in our hearts, we should never be in doubt as to how Christians should dress. 1 Peter 3: 2, 4 reads, "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price." That looks plain enough that nothing should be worn simply for adorning to attract the eye. Again, 1 Tim. 2: 9, 10; "In like manner also that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with braided (or plaited) hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; but which becometh women professing godliness with good works." That is easily understood that all outside apparel should be modest, and such as becometh sobriety of thought, and good works. And according to 1 John, 2: 16, "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life is not of the Father, but of the world." Then all dress to gratify pride is forbidden. Again, Rom. 12: 2: "And be not conformed to the world." There we find dressing as does the world to please the world is positively forbidden. And now 1 Cor. 10: 31: "Whether therefore ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Therefore all dress that is not for God's glory is sinful. With these passages before us, we can soon settle the question.

There is no chance for any argument as to the wearing of gold, pearls, or costly array, for the Bible clearly tells that with a not. And yet some women will persist in wearing a gold pin, and say, "I don't wear much gold." The Bible does not say much gold, but gold, and it is just the same whether worn in the ears, on the head, around the neck, at the throat, or on the wrists or on the fingers. It is all worn for adorning, none at all needed, therefore in positive violation to God's commands. Then one asks, How much shall I trim a dress, cloak, or hat? Easy enough to answer that. Why trim it at all? All trimming is put on garments either to gratify pride in the heart, or to conform to the world. No woman trims her clothes to make them more comfortable and healthy, to make her work any lighter, or her expenses any less. But on the other hand, women are becoming diseased by wearing heavily trimmed garments, and many dying every day, by overwork, and the very many living in rented houses, while their money that goes for outside show might in a few years, buy them a home. And did any woman spend her time trimming (or money in hiring it done) with God's glory in view?

No one can sensibly make the plea of helping poor dressmakers, for they are generally overworked, and if a rich woman wants to help one of that class, let her present her the money extra for making a plain dress, and not tax the poor woman's strength to earn every cent by stitching. For my part I can see only one line, drawn straight as the Bible and reason can draw it, between trimming and no trimming.

Feathers are beautiful and useful on the birds, but were never made for woman's heads. Flowers are beautiful and with their fragrance useful, in garden or vase, but odorless flowers on a hat, are but signs of pride and foolishness. The cutting of cloth in little stripes, and making a garment of it, looks too much like children's play. Thus bows, fringe, lace, ruffles and the like, to my mind are not only useless, but senseless. A Christian woman should dress neatly but perfectly plain, and then when seen on the street or in the church she preaches Christ by her outward appearance. None but those of her principle, dress entirely plain. The poorest will seek some kind of trimming, be it ever so shabby. And if we shrink from thus attracting attention, we shrink from telling the world in looks as well as in words, that we are followers of Christ; and a neatly, plainly, dressed woman, passing along the street in the city, without saying a word, preaches a sermon not to be forgotten to many she never has the opportunity of speaking with.

Dear sisters, let us act wisely and with God's glory in view. When we buy a garment, make the best possible use of our time; and when we wear it, have the best possible influence.

A TOUCHING INCIDENT.

Governor St. John, the temperance governor of Kansas, in a speech in an Eastern city, recently related the following touching story:—

A heart-broken woman came into his office with a babe in her arms to beg the pardon of her husband, who was under sentence of ten years' imprisonment in the penitentiary for homicide. She showed papers recommending the pardon from the judge that tried the man, the prosecuting attorney and other prominent men. After closely examining the papers he said, "If I were to consult my personal feelings, I should gladly let your husband go, but I am bound by my official duty, and that forbids it." The woman fell at his feet in a paroxysm of weeping. "Then hear me," she cried, "till I tell you how he came to be where he is. We were married seven years ago; we went to a town (naming the place), and there in our little village we were happy. My husband was sober, industrious, and thrifty. By great exertion and self-denial we finally got our home paid for. But in an evil day the State licensed a saloon, and let it plant itself right between my husband's shop and our house. He was prospering so well that he could leave his business in other hands and lose an hour or two without feeling it. He was solicited to enter this saloon, and weakly yielded. Hour after hour he spent there, playing cards. One day he became embroiled in a drunken quarrel, and, fired by drink, struck a man and killed him. He was tried and sent to the penitentiary for ten years.

I had nothing to live on. By and by the sheriff turned us out of our comfortable home into a rough shanty, neither lathed or plastered. The cold wind came in through the walls and ceiling. My oldest boy took sick and died. Then little Tommy, my next, fell sick and died. Now this babe in my arms is sick, and I have nowhere to take it. The State licensed that saloon; the State murdered my children; and now I want you to set my husband free." I said I would—and I did.

A GOOD MOTHER'S PLAN.

A LADY gave us a rule, not long since, by which she has succeeded in interesting her lively, fun-loving boys, so that they preferred to remain at home evenings, instead of seeking amusements elsewhere. She said:

"I remember that children are children, and must have amusements. I fear that the abhorrence with which some good parents regard any play for children, is the reason why children go away for pleasure. Husband and I used to read history, and at the end of each chapter ask some questions, requiring the answers to be looked up if not given correctly.

"We follow a similar plan with the children; sometimes we play one game and sometimes another, always planning with books, stories, plays, treats, of some kind, to make the evenings at home more attractive than they can be made abroad.

"I should dislike to think that any one could make my children happier than I can, so I always try to be at leisure in the evening, and to arrange something entertaining.

The greater number of our evenings are spent quietly at home. Sometimes it requires quite an effort to sit quietly, talking and playing with them, when my work-basket is filled with unfinished work, and books and papers lie unread on the table; but as I see my boys and girls growing into home-loving, modest young men and maidens, I am glad that I make it my rule to give the best of myself to my family."

BRINGING THE TRUTH HOME.

SOME years ago the late Horace Mann, the eminent educator, delivered an address at the opening of some reformatory institution for boys, during which he remarked, that it only one boy was saved from ruin it would pay for all the cost, and care, and labor of establishing such an institution as that.

After the exercises had closed, in a private conversation a gentleman called Mr. Mann upon his statement, and said to him, "Did you not color that a little when you said all the expense and labor would be repaid if it saved only one boy?" "Not if it was my boy," was the solemn and convincing reply. How precious are the interests bound up in a single life which may run on forever!

No discipline is more necessary to children than that of patience, because either the will must be broken in childhood, or the heart in old age.

BRETHREN AT WORK,

THE ANNUAL MEETING.

WEDNESDAY.

THE day opened a little damp and cool. At an early hour the tent was filled with people eager to see and hear what would be done. Most of those who occupied the brethren's side of the tent were men of age and soberness, persons qualified to judge honestly and prudently respecting the grave matters before the conference. The sister's side was well filled by a class of women that would be a credit to any religious body. Their healthy and robust appearance was in happy contrast with what is seen in most of the city congregations. Their attire was plain and modest as becometh women professing godliness. By their appearance any one would know that they were members. We learned that there were on the grounds a few, dressed in worldly styles, claiming to be members, but we did not meet them. As a general thing the appearance of the sisters was more consistent than many of the brethren—the difference between them was more marked.

Prior to the coming of the Standing Committee Bro. Paul Wetzel did some able preaching in the German language. We could not understand it, but judging by the good impression made on others we concluded that it must have been very enjoyable.

Bro. Eselman was with us at the editor's table this morning, having returned from Denmark where he had been called to preach the funeral of S. T. Bosserman's child that was killed Sunday morning.

At 9:30 the S. C. entered. The meeting was opened by J. I. Cover.

Bro. Enoch Eby offered a timely suggestion in regard to the necessity of great caution and kindness in our manner of speaking.

The first business before the meeting was the announcement of the committee on papers as decided yesterday. The following names were called by the S. C.: S. S. Mohler, D. E. Price, C. Bueber, Daniel Vaniman, J. Billhart, G. W. Cripe, John Smith, Joel Neff and Abraham—.

From N. Iowa came the following in substance:

Inasmuch as there is a growing tendency to disregard the order of the church in regard to wearing apparel, what should be the best way to pursue to stop this evil; or what should be done with elders who do not enforce the same?

Ans.—Report the matter to the nearest elder that would be most likely to carry out the order of the church.

On this question the discussion was long and tedious. There were a few present who took a stand against the order of the church as set forth in the query. It was finally deferred.

The query from N. Ill., relating to the appointing of a committee to say which of the decisions of the A. M. are advisory and which are doctrinal was deferred till another stage of the meeting.

AFTER DINNER

several addresses were made in regard to taking up a collection for the purpose of building a meeting house in Denmark. Eld. John Metzger became earnest over the work. One brother arose, made a short speech and closed by saying, to start the work, he would give one hundred dollars. This started the ball to rolling in real earnest. About fifty pledged $25.00 each, many others $10.00 so that before the Standing Committee came over, $2000.00 had been raised. Another effort was made the next day in which over $800.00 more was raised, making in all over $2800.000 with the understanding that the general Brotherhood be urged to assist in raising still more. D. N. Workman and J. H. Worst were appointed a committee to take charge of the funds and deliver the same to Bro. Quinter to be forwarded to Denmark, with the understanding that it be used for building a meeting-house in Denmark; and if enough, likely two houses can be erected.

At 2:20 the S. C. entered. The last query before the meeting was again called up, and voted to make no change.

The query in regard to not making "age in office" a special qualification for ordination was discussed at some length, and voted to make no change, though it was recommended that the church should have a fair chance to say who should be ordained.

In regard to electing officers by a majority instead of a plurality of vote; decided to make no changes.

The query from N. Ill., in regard to consolidating the papers, with another similar query was referred to a committee to examine and report at this meeting.

In answer to a query, asking that all decisions at the A. M. be made by a majority vote of the delegates, it was decided to make no change.

Inasmuch as the use of tobacco is offensive to the majority of the followers of Christ, and it seems that the Scriptures, indirectly, or directly, forbid its use, we petition District Meeting to petition Annual Meeting that hereafter the offices of preacher, deacon, or any other office in the church be given to no one unless he will abstain from its use, except for medical purposes.

The discussion over this question grew quite animating. But few speeches, however, were made in defense of tobacco. It was finally decided to re-affirm former decisions; install in office only those who do not use tobacco, or will abstain from its use and, also urge all other officials to quit the unbecoming practice.

The Southern Illinois petitioned A. M., to send only such brethren as delegates to A. M., and on committees to settle difficulties in churches, who in their dress and appearance, are in the general order of the church. A similar query from N. Ill., was also considered at the same time. This question was warmly discussed till the close of the session. The progressive element worked hard against the demand of the petition, while the main body of the church labored to maintain her time-honored principles.

Meeting adjourned till morning.

During the day considerable rain had fallen, rendering it very disagreeable to get around.

THURSDAY MORNING.

Considerable rain had fallen during the night, and it was still raining when we reached the tent at 8 o'clock. The rain had made the tent very wet and heavy so that the heavy winds made the movements of things look a little threatening at times.

At 9:15 the S. C. entered. Services were opened by Bro. D. B. Sturges.

The unfinished question before the meeting last evening was the first thing in order this morning. The discussion was renewed with energy. It was a vital question involving an important item in regard to the doctrine of non-conformity. Bro. R. H. Miller proposed an answer something like this: "Brethren who are opposed to the order of the church in dress are not suitable persons to send out on committees &c." The moderator then put Bro. Miller's motion on its passage, but about as many voices, seemed to say "no" as "pass it," hence it could not be passed in that way. It was then said that a number of "outsiders" present were voting against the motion. So the Moderator said he would put it to the test. He then requested all those who were in favor of the motion to rise to their feet. Nearly the entire congregation arose like a solid body. It was the greatest rising vote we ever saw on any question. It was a solid "uprising of the people" in defense of our long-established principles. The Moderator then asked those opposed to the motion to rise, and only about one dozen arose—less than one to every hundred on the other side.

This rising vote in defense of our non-conformity principles told the way our people stand. It gave us to understand that those opposed to the regular established order of the church are very few indeed, much less than we had supposed. Hence all the noise about my manner of dressing being contrary to gospel principles has been coming from a very few persons. The vote showed the extreme weakness of one side and the united strength of the other. On the dress question our readers may rest assured that our people stand united as firmly as any body in the world, and are fully determined to maintain their principles.

In answer to a query from Southern Ill. it was decided, not right for elders to go outside of their own State districts, to ordain elders unless by consulting adjoining elders.

Several minor queries were disposed of by a ruling vote.

Adjourned for dinner.

AFTER DINNER.

It rained most of the forenoon, and this afternoon part of the tent on the North side is on the ground. When it rains hard the tent leaks considerably.

The S. C. entered at 2:10. The first business before the meeting was the report of the committee having charge of the papers referring to the Progressive Christian, H. R. Holsinger and the Vindicator. It was decided unanimously by a ruling vote that committees should be appointed to wait on the editors of these papers and deal with them as their cases demands.

The committee, into whose hands had been given the papers in regard to consolidating the papers, reported that it was not the multiplicity of papers that was causing trouble, but the contents of the papers. It urged editors to use great care in regard to the class of matter published, holding that the character of our papers had much to do with the peace and welfare of the church.

The wearing of hats by sisters was brought up from N. Ind., and debated; those favoring hats doing nearly all the talking. It was our impression that sisters were not concerned very much about the matter—the anxiety seemed to be with a few brethren who want the privilege for the sisters to wear hats. It was finally put to a vote, nearly the entire congregation rising in opposition to the wearing of hats and only a few for it. Those who read this part of the report will find that nearly all the speeches were in favor of the hat, while the meeting decided just to the reverse. Only a few brethren were able to slip in a speech in defense of the order without prolonging the meeting to too great a length. The plea was for plain hats, but it was clearly shown there that those who adopted the hat did not want it plain, nor did they keep it so after they got it. It was further shown that just as soon as the hat goes out of fashion, there will be no more trouble about it.

The remainder of the day was spent on a petition from Ind., praying the A. M., to make no change respecting her decisions in regard to the Miami Valley petition.

Adjourned.

Quite a number left for their homes that evening and early the next morning; among them Bro. Eshelman.

FRIDAY MORNING

opened delightfully. The sun shone out clear and warm. The people assembled in the tent at an early hour. Considerable time was spent in speaking; first by Paul Wetzel followed by Daniel Vaniman, J. P. Ebersole and others. Some excellent things were said and many good impressions made.

At 9:10 the S. C. members were in their places. Eld. John Metzger opened the meeting.

In order to gain time and expedite business it was decided to limit the speakers to five minutes.

Nearly the entire forenoon was spent on the Miami Valley petition. It was clearly shown that it was before the A. M. illegally, having never passed through the District Meeting, hence was laid aside. In bringing the petition to the A. M., the Miami Brethren meant to do what was right but made a mistake by not presenting it through their regular District Meeting.

The petition from Ind., was then taken up and disposed of after considerable discussion.

In order to meet a difficulty in Meigs Co., the decision of 1877 on feet-washing was readopted. Adjourned till after dinner.

AFTER-NOON.

As we were preparing to start home at four o'clock we did not get the run of business before the meeting, hence can give no further report. Suffice it to say that the meeting closed Friday evening, having finished a little more than half of the business before it. All of the queries from Virginia, Pennsylvania, Maryland Michigan, West Virginia, Tennessee, and part of Ohio will have to lay over till next Annual Meeting.

This is as much as we have room to give now; will say more next week.

PEACE DESIRABLE.

WHEN the storm has subsided, and the waters conformed themselves to their channels, and the sun shines in splendor, nature rejoices, the people clap their hands for joy. Tempests make nobody happy. The calm, the quiet and the lovely bring gladness and peace and prosperity to the people and the nation. So it is with the church. "And you who are troubled, rest with us," says the great, good man of God. "My peace I give unto you," says the Lord Jesus. Have we accepted it? It has been given; but the question is, have we gladly received it? Or the peace of Jesus! Who can refuse it?

Another Annual Meeting has gone upon record. The conflicts, the cares and fears are gone too, and now we look for peace, and more active work in preaching the word of the Lord. Thousands went home from the meeting convinced that this great Brotherhood is solid for Gospel principles and Gospel order. Let agitators and opposers of the church cease their efforts to turn the church over into the lap of the world, and engage in more noble work. The meeting has spoken with no uncertain sound. It declared it would not be turned aside into worldlyism. It stands, not only firm, but united in the principles of truth and godliness. All efforts to move her from her original ground proved futile. The church cannot be moved, and we rejoice over the fact. Let her enemies now cease agitation and go about the Master's business, and be happy too.

We go into the work hopefully, cheerfully. Peace is desirable. War and strife are destructive. We can not go into them. Anger and malice lead to death. We can not go that way. Opposition to the church is wicked. We can not engage in it. We are for the church—its order, work and principles. The church never prevented us from walking humbly before God. It never prevented us doing justly and loving mercy. And we assert, without fear of successful contradiction that the Brotherhood in all of its work and deliberations, never prevented any one from praising God. It never prevented any one from praying to God, or walking humbly before God, nor doing justly toward all men. And this being a fact, why this war and opposition to the work?

Is not a crown promised those who obey the Lord? Well, then, if eternal life be the desire and object, and the church never prevented any one from walking humbly before God, why the opposition? Surely the Lord sees the meaning of the attacks on his people. Yes, and the people know what it means. They are not ignorant of the enemy's devices. Let the people remain true to the Gospel. Let them continue in the good old way, wherein no one is deprived of doing right before God and men.

We came home resolved to more and more hold fast the form of "sound words," and by God's grace to cling closer to the church of the first-born. If we were displeased with the church, we would set up a building of our own, and make no attempt to pull down the one set up by the Lord Christ. But we can not make a better one. We are pleased with Christ's church. Its doctrine and order are good enough for us, and we seek not to overthrow them.

Now that the Brotherhood has so overwhelmingly declared its intention not to be moved from its humble ways, let peace have its sway, and goodness of heart will prevail. Let those who have so loudly proclaimed for majority rule, now submit like men, and cease agitation. "Let us have peace" like a mighty river!

M. M. E.

In Virginia a ministering brother went into a locality where the Brethren had not been preaching, and held a few meetings. The result was ten were added to the church by baptism. Quite an interest is awakened, and the people are anxious to have preaching regularly. This shows what a little effort will do. There are hundreds of places where the Brethren might do a good work. Don't be afraid to extend your fields of labor.—Primitive.

THE IRREPRESSIBLE CONFLICT.

BY J. S. FLOYD

THE time has come when the boasting opponents of Bible doctrines must be on their own ground of defense. If by scientific investigation, they would poison the minds of the rising generation, and teach in our maris of learning, theories dangerous to the doctrines of Christianity, we must insist on crowding into the public schools, colleges and the pulpit, scientific reasoning; that, because of its rational and logical force, will counteract the evil tendencies of materialism, evolution, or spontaneous generation.

For the Bible believers, the plain old story is enough to calm the fears and confirm the hopes in a blessed future; but the unbeliever in such a desperate strait that the tower of his strength must be demolished, if in no other way, let it be done by scientific truths that harmonize most beautifully with the Bible and when skepticism wanes before the marvelous light of true science—God is in all truth—the church and holy cause of religion has gained an impetus that will give light, hope, and salvation through Jesus, to the thousands that otherwise would go through life groping in the dark chambers of uncertainty. We want no change in preaching the simplicity of salvation through Christ, no addition to, or taking from the Gospel, it is the Alpha and Omega of salvation through Christ. We may, however, advantageously get rid of some stereotyped ideas in "orthodoxy," or "confessions" not really taught in the Scriptures, and thus leave the skeptic to wrestle with a man of straw, who by divine appointment even said that God created all things out of nothing. That He first created a confused mass of materials out of nothing and from this chaotic mass He created the earth and the solar system." Why talk of the immateriality of the soul in the sense of a ghost—a something without form, a nothing in reality according to the ideas of our common theology when shimmered down. What does the Bible teach on immateriality? Do answer what! Paul understood the soul to be an inner man, an incorporeal being, a something real in form, none of your immaterial myths, inexplicable, and a something we can not understand. Skeptics find more fault with our theological inferences, than they do with solid Bible truths.

A few weeks ago we preached our first discourse on the "proofs of man's immortality as shown from evidences outside of the Bible. The evidences are all in harmony with the Bible; yet without the Bible there is sufficient proof to show that man must and shall exist forever. When to the mind of the skeptic you prove his eternal existence, the ground-work of his faith sinks from under him, and in looking about for a more sure platform on which to build a house of faith, he may readily be brought to see the need of Christ as a Savior.

As diamond cuts diamond, so science must demolish science—the true will always bring to nought the false and thus, no matter from what quarter the hosts of Satan emerge, God in his might can save the honor and glory of His Kingdom—His truth shall prevail.

We are not one to cringe at the feet of a Darwinism, or kiss the hand of a Huxley. The irrepressible conflict, between the Bible and Skeptism is upon us; in the spirit of the striping David let us go forth and meet the Philistian host.

AMBITIOUS "PROFESSORS OF RELIGION."

THEY are to be found in almost every church. They aspire after honors and distinctions. Like Diotrepes, they love to have the pre-eminence. They covet high positions, and they not infrequently strive for these by questionable means and methods. It is of such as these that John Angell James says, "Those who are anxious to make a great figure in the world, usually make a small figure in the church." And how often have we seen this verified! Fix your mind on any professor of our acquaintance who is ambitious for worldly distinctions, seeking high places in the town, State, or nation, and you will invariably find that, whatever his talents may be, as a member of the church he is but little worth. You will find that he feels but little interest in its affairs and especially its spiritual affairs. He is not one that may be relied on to attend on its prayer-meetings, and to do his part in sustaining them. He is not one on whom his pastor may depend, as an Aaron or a Hur, to stay up his hands. You will more often find him a hindrance than a help. It is from this class, for the most part, that comes the trouble in Israel. By their rash words and methods, they not infrequently get the church into a broil. And by their inconsistencies they bring reproach upon religion. Worldly men with whom they associate have little confidence in their professions. Their conduct is often a grief to the godly.

And the same may also be said of those women professors who are ambitious to outshine others in dress and display. In the degree that they thus make a great figure in the world, is their figure small in the church. They are but dwarfs or cyphers there. It is not so often those women, whose adorning is that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing gold, and of putting on of apparel, as those whose ornament is a meek and quiet spirit, that do most for the promotion of religion and bring the most honor upon it. Those that exalt themselves are not the ones that Christ exalts to be his efficient co-workers in doing good. "Though the Lord be high, yet hath he respect unto the lowly; but the proud he knoweth afar off."—Christian at Work.

Any business is more honorable for a young man than loafing.

DO YOUR OWN FISHING.

YOU'LL never catch any of the golden fish that swim in the world's waters by standing with your hands in your pockets and watching another hold the pole. It is a thing that cannot be done. If you expect fish, you will have to dig your own bait, put the tempting morsel on your own hook, throw in your own line, and hold your own rod and clovelly watch for the nibbles. Seeing another's cork go under, won't do you the least particle of good; loafing upon the shores and gaping at others while spreading and drawing nets, won't fill either your stomach or barrel. You might just as well attempt by taking hold of the straps of your boots to carry your sluggish avoidupois over a mud puddle. The one is about as sensible as the other. You have got to fish for yourself—even "cutting bait" won't answer. It is the only pathway to success. Fish don't come for the whistling or the wishing. They are wary and have to be tempted. If you expect to have them, you have got "to go for them," in more sense than one.

Do your own fishing. The world is a great berring pond, and your chance is as good as that of your neighbor, if you choose the right kind of bait, use diligence, have patience, and take advantage of tide and time. Golden fishes swim about in plenty and are caught, but another cannot do it for you. Every successful man owes independence to his individual energy and enterprise. Standing on a rock all day and looking end hoping never yet filled a basket. Here is a story to the point and you can "hook" success upon it if you follow its precepts:—

A young man stood listlessly watching some anglers on a bridge. He was poor and dejected. At last approaching a basket filled with wholesome looking fish, he sighed:—

"If now I had these I would be happy. I could sell them for a good price, and buy me food and lodgings."

"I will give you just as many, and just as good fish," said the owner, who had chanced to overhear his words, "if you will do me a trifling favor."

"And what's that?" asked the other.

"Only to tend this line till I come back, I wish to go on a short errand."

The proposal was gladly accepted. The old man was gone so long that the young man began to be impatient. Meanwhile the hungry fish snapped greedily at the baited hook, and the young man lost all his depression in pulling them in; and when the owner of the line returned, he had caught a large number. Counting out from them as many as were in the basket, and presenting them to the young man, the old fisherman said:—

"I fulfill my promise from the fish you have caught, to teach you whenever you see others earn what you need, to waste no time in fruitless wishing, but cast a line for yourself."

That politeness is modest and unpretending.

WHAT TO DO.

What should be done with a member of the church who denies the divinity of Christ? He is what is usually called a consistent member and a good man. His doubt and denial have been caused by dabbling in scientific (1) unbelief.

SIGNA.

IF it is a settled rejection of the Son of God as Lord and Savior, he ought to sever his connection with the church; and if he does not do so, the church should dismiss him. (See 2 John 9-11). But if it is merely a doubtful state of mind into which he has been led by his readings, there should be all patience and diligence in efforts to recover him out of his honest doubt. Mere weakness of faith, or the doubts that accompany the translation from unthinking trust to an intelligent personal faith, do not furnish sufficient reason for exclusion from the church, but rather call for special fostering care until the peril is passed.

From the Bible Worker.

WHO IS THE ROCK?

Will some brother who explains the rock in the expression "On this rock will I build my church," etc. (Matt. 16: 18) to be Christ, show us that in the expression immediately following, "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven," the thou refers to Christ? Or will he tell us why it is denied that Peter is one of the foundation stones "Of the household of God; built on the foundation of apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone," (Eph. 2: 20, and yet it is allowed that he has the keys of the kingdom of heaven? WM. GOODWIN.

HAVING seen what has been said in the Banner, about Peter being a stone, and the church being built on him, I wish to place two witnesses on the stand, whom I did not see introduced. One is Paul, 1 Cor. 3: 11: "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Then Peter, if he is a stone, is not the bottom or foundation rock. Now perhaps as Peter is interested in this matter, his opinion and testimony might help the jurors to a just decision of the case. Read 1 P. 2: 3-10. In verse three he introduces a personage whom he calls the "Lord." In verse four he calls him a "living stone" and "chosen of God," and in verse five he calls him "Jesus Christ." In verse six he calls him "the chief corner stone laid in Zion." But he also shows that the "house," built on this rock, is not a wooden frame building, but a stone house; "built up a spiritual house" of "lively stones." So although Peter was a stone, and a "pillar" at that, yet he does not seem to have understood himself to be the "chief corner stone that the Lord laid in Zion;" but only one of the "lively stones," or petros built upon the foundation Rock. We must each be a living petros or we are not of this house. Amen. O. D. G.

QUALIFIED LEADERS.

IN a family, a town, or a church, a born leader is an invaluable boon. The equality of all in rights is a precious doctrine, but all men have not an equal right to leadership. That is a born gift and not extensively bestowed. To fill the place with incompetent persons is to introduce chronic trouble; to find one whom God has equipped for the purpose is to inaugurate a reign of peace and prosperity. The people hear their voice, and love to follow. In this respect some churches are highly favored, having wise men to plan and execute; while others are perpetually cursed with the services of men intent on being at the head, but without any qualifications for the place.—Zion's Herald

THE OLDEST CITY IN THE WORLD.

DAMASCUS is the oldest city in the world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyra is buried in a desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and the Euphrates. Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a center of trade and travel—an isle of verdure in the desert; "a presidential capital" with martial and sacred associations extending through thirty centuries. It was near Damascus that Saul of Tarsus saw the light above the brightness of the sun; the street which is called Strait, in which it is said "he prayed," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did a thousand years ago; there is still the sheik, the ass, and the water-wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and the Mediterranean still occupy the streets "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mahomet surveyed from a neighboring height, and was afraid to enter, "because it was given to man to have but one paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world;" is to-day what Julian called the "Eye of the East," as it was, in the time of Isaiah, "the head of Syria."

From Damascus came the damson, our blue plums, and the delicious apricot of Portugal, called damascoo; damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth, bright ground; the damask introduced into England in the time of Henry

VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous all the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tomerlane carried the artist into Persia; and that beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with gold and silver, a kind of mosaic, engraving and sculpture united—called damaskeening—with which boxes, bureaus, and swords are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters; the streams of Lebanon and the "silk of gold" still murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of the Syria gardens.—Selected

BE RESPECTFUL IN CHURCH.

MISBEHAVING in church is strongly indicative of a lack of good sense as well as good morals. Giddy girls and would-be smart young men, read the following, consider and be profited thereby: A clergyman was annoyed by people talking and giggling. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said, "I am afraid to reprove those who misbehave, for this reason: Some years since, as I was preaching, a young man who sat before me was constantly laughing, talking and making uncouth grimaces. I paused and administered a severe rebuke. After the close of the service a gentleman said to me, 'Sir, you have made a great mistake; that young man was an idiot.' Since then I have always been afraid to reprove those who misbehave in chapel, lest I should repeat the mistake and reprove another idiot. During the rest of the service there was good order.—Kansas Methodist.

TO THE LAW AND THE TESTIMONY.

A VENERABLE minister at H—preached a sermon on the subject of eternal punishment. On the next day it was agreed among some thoughtless young men that one of them should go to him and endeavor to draw him into a dispute, with the design of making a j-set of him and of his doctrine. The wag accordingly went, was introduced into the minister's study, and commenced the conversation by saying, "I believe there is a small dispute between you and me, sir, and I thought I would call this morning and try to settle it." "Hah!" said the clergyman; "what is it?" "Why," replied the wag, "you say that the wicked will go into everlasting punishment, and I do not think that they will." "Oh, if that is all," answered the minister, "there is no dispute between you and me. If you turn to Matthew 25: 46, you will find that the dispute is between you and the Lord Jesus Christ, and I advise you to go immediately and settle it with him."

LABOR IS GENIUS.—When a lady once asked Turner, the celebrated English painter, what his secret was, he replied, "I have no secret, madam, but hard work. This is a secret that many never learn, and don't succeed because they don't learn it. Labor is a genius that changes the world from ugliness to beauty, and the great curse to a great blessing."

WIND up and examine your conduct every day, as you would your watch.

Correspondence.

Work In The Field.

On Thursday, May 12th, I left home for Saline county, this State. After a night's rest at the house and kind family of brother David L. Williams, he hitched up his buggy and together we went to visit the Brethren living at the Missouri river, about nine miles south-east of Slater, a thriving business place of perhaps 1200 inhabitants, on the Chicago and Alton railroad.

We found the members active and interested in the Master's cause. Also found a good interest in the community. Had several meetings. Baptized three. Organized them into a church under name of "Clear Creek Church." Held a choice for minister and two deacons; the lot fell on Abner Wallace, formerly from near Chambersburg, Pennsylvania, as minister. He was a minister in the United Brethren Church for a number of years. Deacons chosen were a brother Wilcox and brother John Ogden. The community in which these members live, never heard the Brethren preach until in January of 1880, when brother David L. Williams, in answer to a call, preached to them for some days, and during the time he baptized eight, and among them brother Wallace who is now their minister. The interest from brother Williams' first appointment became strong, and has continued. On a subsequent visit, brother Williams baptized several more, and on our late visit three more were added to their number, with a very good prospect of an increase soon.

The citizens, among whom this little church was organized, are sociable, and generally speaking, in moderate circumstances. A number of them are farmers in the large Missouri river bottom near which they live, and by the late high waters which swept their farms, lost crops and much of their fencing. The families living on the bottoms all had to abandon their homes and resort to the bluffs, where they were taken in and cared for by those more fortunately situated. Some have returned to their farms in the bottom. But many of them will not go back before Fall on account of the heavy deposits of Missouri river, mud ranging from one to two feet deep over portions of the bottom, seriously threatening their health, should they venture to return before these deposits are dried out.

The land on the bluffs is considerably broken, but the soil is good, and affords comfortable homes. The opening here is good, both as respects church prospects and to secure homes cheap.

We write this hasty sketch to call the attention of ministering brethren or others who look westward for homes. The localities of those members afford excellent market facilities. The Chicago & Alton R. R. leading from Kansas City to Chicago runs through this section of country, and the Missouri river, both of which afford a number of trading points. The country immediately adjoining the timber belt of the Missouri river and extending over a large portion of Saline and Lafayette counties, is one of the finest, if not the finest, county I ever saw, and noted for extensive wheat growing, and as a blue grass region, similar, I imagine, to the blue grass section of Kentucky.

The newly organized (Clear Creek) church is under the care of Elder Daniel L. Williams, whose labor for the maintenance of the time-honored principles and characteristics of the church is known, and who still labors in that direction; and as this new field is now added to his already large territory of church work, he earnestly desires help in the Master's cause. And as the country is fine, and church prospects encouraging, we hope brethren will think of this locality in looking for homes in the West. His address is Brownsville, Mo., and he will take pleasure in showing the county to those who will call on him.

NUMBER V.

Leaving Chicago the evening of the 1st of June via the P. Ft. W & C. R. R., we arrived at Lima, Ohio, next morning. While taking our breakfast lunch, Eld. D. Brower came into the depot. Accompanying him, we were soon on our way to his home, where we had a pleasant visit among relatives, brethren, sisters, and friends. Next day we were taken to Lima, and again boarded the train, and in due time reached Mansfield, where we changed cars for Ashland, where we arrived late at night, and was driven at once to our own hired room, where we made our home during the time of the Annual Meeting.

It is needless to say we met many dear ones, whom to greet alone amply paid us for our visit to Ashland. We hope those reunions will continue until we shall meet in one eternal happy re-union in heaven.

The first day of the meeting, ominous cloud-seemed to obscure the spiritual horizon; but next day we became more hopeful, "thanked God, and took courage," as did the thousands of those who in their criticisms claim the attention of the meeting was occupied by matters of small import. Those "some small matters" gave evidence that pride was alive in the church, and when we consider the fact that pride is the great hydra-headed monster that has ruined churches, dethroned humility, crucified afresh the meek and lowly Jesus, it is no small matter to fight the devil wherever he hangs out his sign, though it be in the shape of a hat.

Taking everything into consideration, we have reason to be glad that the meeting passed off as well as it did. We believe the church is endowed with enough real piety and sound faith to guide the old ship Zion along in the wake of our fore-fathers that have gone on before, and that sooner or later conformists to the world will find the church of the Brethren is no place for them, and will find a more congenial atmosphere. Non-conformity to the world must be maintained in the church so long as we are governed by the principles of the Gospel. We are glad to know there is nothing required by the church but what every true convert can readily accept, and that the Gospel and church rules so truly harmonize, the latter being simply in detail what the Gospel expresses in general terms. The reader will please excuse the digression.

We left Ashland Saturday morning. At Mansfield changed cars for Wooster, Wayne Co., O., where we were met by brother John Brenizer, who resigned to us his carriage, with which we had a pleasant drive of nine miles out into the country. The waving grain fields and numerous clover fields in full bloom gave us evidence we were in an excellent section of country. Near Canaan we were kindly received by sisters Cass and Clara Brenizer, who, with their two brothers, have a pleasant home.

Sunday morning we accompanied them to Beech Grove meeting-house. An excellent Sunday-school is in operation here by the brethren and sisters. After preaching we accompanied Eld. George Ervin to his home, where we found sister Ervin in an afflicted state, but improving so much that she thinks of being able to ride out soon. After spending the night at the home of Bro. John Brenizer, he so arranged matters for us that we had another pleasant drive on our way to Wooster. From here we expect to go to-night to Pittsburg on our way eastward.

Crops are good in this section. Latent rains make everything look promising. The fruit crop also promises to be good.

Explanatory.

To the Editors of the B. AT W.—

I see in your paper of the 24th ult. a synopsis of the discussion between Eld. Penimore and myself, which came off on the 25th to 28th of April at Argos, Ind., which I am glad to know was a complete success (as far as I was concerned) by disinterested parties. I wish to make a few corrections to your issue; it is stated by you that the Adventist admitted that I could trace trine immersion within thirty-three years of the apostles. He not only admitted that I could trace trine immersion within thirty-three years of the apostles, but right to the days of the apostles. He says that will not sustain my point because the apostles themselves were in error. He supposes because the apostles practiced trine immersion they were in error. Well, if the apostles were wrong, Christ must have been wrong, who gave the commission, because he gave the command to "go and baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." All my historical arguments the elder denied the validity of, and I met it by saying that if he destroyed the validity of one he also destroyed the validity of the other, viz., the errors practiced in the church by the Christian fathers, sprinkling, pouring, etc., throwing salt in the mouth of the candidate to extricate the devil from him. These were the items, that he destroyed the validity of trine immersion. I answered that if it destroyed the validity of trine immersion, it also destroyed the validity of single immersion. I ask the gentleman to prove that sprinkling or pouring, etc., was ever practiced by the apostles; but he could do it. He reminded me of a drowning man catching at a straw. He affirmed everything and proved nothing.

The second proposition was the unconscious state of the dead. It read as follows: Resolved that all things pertaining to man become unconscious at death.

Elder Penimore admitted the very point at issue on this proposition. He admitted that there were angels in hell alive; but he attempted to prove that these angels were created beings, but never were possessed of mortal life. I proved to him that angels and spirits were synonymous terms; for example, the devil was called an angel once, yet he is called a spirit. For instance, the Greek penia corresponds to the Greek angelos, which means angel or messenger. For example 12th chapter of Acts. I told the elder that they were advocating the doctrine of the Sadducees, because they denied the existence of angels and spirits, for he claims that the breath of life is the spirit, and the soul of man is the body of man, and that when men die they are the same as the beasts of the field. These are a few of the God-honoring arguments and soul-destroying dogmas that he presented.

Admonitory.

Strange as it may appear to some, it is nevertheless true that when we returned from D-mark, many in my travels said, "I took the paper that year just to hear from Danmark, and the first I would look for was something from you." Had I been aware of that fact, I could have given more news; but I thought everybody has estimated my ability as a correspondent about as I do myself, hence not much written. But the point I wish to call your attention to is this: That if your anxiety was so great then, under those circumstances, what should be the anxiety at this time, when we contrast our trip and ability, as a correspondent, with that of our dear brother Stein? If I am not mistaken in his communications, they will be worth more to me than the price of the paper to the end of the year.

ENCH EST.

Lena, Ill.

From Roanna, Ind.—On the 2nd and 3rd inst. we had the pleasure of being with the Brethren of the Clear Creek Church at their Love-feast. It was truly a joyful season and soul-strengthening feast. There were several able brethren from surrounding districts, besides brethren John Metzger and D. B. Gibson from Illinois. The saints were made to rejoice by seeing two sinners return from the desert of darkness and enter the fold of Christ. May God help them and us to prove faithful to the end.

JAMES M. NEFF.

From South English, Iowa.—Our Love-feast in the past, and it was a feast long to be remembered by the brethren and sisters here. Brethren J. S. Flory from Colorado and Daniel Miller from Virginia, and G. W. Hopwood were the preachers from a distance. They did good sound preaching for us. It truly was a feast to our souls to meet with our dear brethren from the far west and the far east upon such an occasion. They preached the Word with such power that saints were made to rejoice and sinners to fear. The church seems to be much strengthened. Five were added to the church by letter, and one that left last Fall, returned and was gladly received by the church. Thus we see here, as well as elsewhere, that they sometimes see that they took the wrong step, and are willing to return, for which we bless God. But dear brethren and sisters, let us all take warning, as the evil one is always going about seeking whom he may devour. Ever pray for us that we may hold out faithful. May the Lord bless us and keep us unto the end, in my prayer.

PETER BROWER.

From Joseph John.—Will you please announce through the columns of your valuable paper that on the 4th day of the present month the members of the Squirrel Creek Congregation, Wabash Co., Ind., met in church council, and amongst some of the labor that was transacted was the changing of the name of our church district—from Squirrel Creek to Roanna. Therefore be it known to whom it may concern, that from henceforth this church district shall be recognized as the Roanna Church District. By order of the church.

From Los Angeles Co., Cal.—I left home on the 19th of May, for a visit, and to labor among the few members in this county, and also on some other business. Our first work, after leaving home, was in Fresno county. Here we had the pleasure to address a Sunday-school, and to hold one meeting with a kind and generous people. Arrived in this county last Friday. Made arrangements to preach in the Methodist church at this place to-morrow night. Engaged also to hold several meetings in a Presbyterian church about eight miles from this place. There are also several members at Santa Monica, and one family at San Diego whom I expect to visit, if the Lord will. Brethren of the East, do not forget the isolated members on the Pacific coast. If you cannot labor for them, pray for them. I am now at the house of Bro. L. W. Riley, formerly from Ind. May the Lord guide and protect us.

P. S. GARMAN.

From Peoria City, Ia.—We have just passed through the severest hail storm we have ever seen. It commenced hailing about 1:30 P. M., and in a few minutes the windows on the west side of buildings were a total wreck. Shingles were smashed in. All kinds of vegetables bitterly beaten into the ground. Heil-stones were picked up that would measure twelve inches in circumference! We have not yet heard how large an area the storm covered.

D. E. BRUBAKER.

From Buffalo, Mo.—We are having fine weather for the growing crops at present, and everything is doing well, except the wheat; the Hessian fly and chinch bug are working on some pieces very bad. Farmers are all busy cultivating their corn (some the third time.) Health is good; no epidemic diseases in the country, or child or fever. There will be some fruit; such as apples, cherries, and small fruits such as grapes, raspberries, and gooseberries; peaches all "Winter killed." The B. at W. is a very welcome visitor in this little church, for all the sermons we get here are through its columns. May God ever sustain you in the noble work you are doing, in my prayer. The church is still in peace and union, but without a Peter to feed Christ's sheep. Is there none to come and help us? Who will come and help us? Pray for us.

S. L. RHODES.

From Flag Spring, Andrew Co., Mo.—Our little band of brethren and sisters are all in union, laboring in the cause of our great Redeemer; but sadness and mourning pervades our neighborhood this morning. A cyclone passed through our neighborhood yesterday evening, and destroyed property and lives; also it demolished buildings entirely. A great amount of horses, cattle, and hogs were killed. I can't give particulars of it. We heard of four deaths and others badly injured; that is, in our neighborhood. How many more we can't tell, as it passed on; it passed within three quarters of a mile from us.

DANIEL GLECK.

From A. H. Puterbaugh.—My visit to the Huntington congregation, Ind., was one of those happy seasons for which we pray and labor. During our visit of three days we baptized five dear souls. Our visit was entirely too short; but we trust that those who are now counting the cost, will soon be ready to take upon them the yoke of Jesus also. The Love-feast was a delightful one, and will long be remembered by those participating. May God bless those dear brethren and sisters living in the Huntington church, as well as his Israel everywhere, and save us all. Amen.

From White Oak Church, Pa.—Last Sunday (June 5th) our regular meeting was at Petersburg. Had good attendance and attention. After meeting two precious souls were added to the church by baptism. On the 8th and 9th of June was our Love-feast, also at Petersburg. It was largely attended, but there were not so many there as at previous times, on account of the ruin which we had. Ministers present from a distance were Bro. G. W. Bricker, from Hagertown, brethren Andrew Myers and Jacob Aldinger, from York county, Pa., and others from adjoining churches. We had a feast of love, which I think will be remembered for some time.

ANNA E. LIGHT.

From Dr. J. Sturgis.—Our Communion season is over once more, and an enjoyable season it was for the saints and a large number of spectators. Two more were added to our number by baptism. Many more are counting the cost. Others have been standing, as it were, on the very threshold of the church for a long time, fully persuaded as to the correctness of the Gospel teaching and practice of the church and say, "I will, I will," while others that seem afar off are passing them in the race of eternal happiness. Indeed is procreation the thief of souls as well as time.

POPULAR FALLACIES.

NIGHT air and damp weather are held in great horror by multitudes of persons who are sickly or have weak constitutions; consequently, by avoiding the night air and damp weather, and changeable weather, and weather that is considered too hot or too cold, they are kept within doors the much larger portion of their time, and as a matter of course continue invalids, more and more ripening for the grave every hour; the reason is, they are breathing an impure atmosphere nineteen-twentieths of their whole existence.

As nothing can wash as clean but pure water, so nothing can cleanse the blood, nothing can make health-giving blood, but the agency of pure air. So great is the tendency of the blood to become impure in consequence of waste and useless matters mixing with it as it passes through the body, that it requires a hog's head of air every hour of our lives to oxidize it of these impurities; but in proportion as this air is vitiated, in such proportion does it infallibly fail to relieve the blood of these impurities, and impure blood is the foundation of all disease. The great fact that those who are out of doors most, Summer and Winter, day and night, rain or shine, have the best health the world over, does of itself falsify the general impression that night air or any other outdoor air is unhealthy as compared with indoor air at the same time.

Air is the great necessity of life: so much so that if deprived of it for a moment, we perish; and so constant is the necessity of the blood for the contact with the atmosphere, that every drop in the body is exposed through the medium of the lungs every two minutes and a half of our existence.

Whatever may be the impurity of outdoor air of any locality, the indoor air of that locality is still more impure, because of the dust and decaying and odoriferous matters which are found in all dwellings. Besides, how can the indoor air be more healthy than the outdoor air, other things being equal, when the dwelling is supplied with air from without?

To this very general law there is one exception, which is of the highest importance to note. When the days are hot and the nights cool, there are periods of time within each twenty-four hours when it is safest to be within doors, with doors and windows closed; that is to say, for the hour or two including sunrise and sunset, because about sunset the air cools, and the vapors which the heat of the day has caused to ascend far above us, condense and settle near the surface of the earth, so as to be breathed by the inhabitants; as the night grows colder, these vapors sink lower, and are with in a foot or two of the earth, so they are not breathed. As the sun rises these same vapors are warmed, and begin to ascend, to be breathed again; but, as the air becomes warmer, they are carried so far above our heads as to be innocuous. Thus it is that the old citizens of Charleston, S. C., remembered that while it was considered important to live in the country during the Summer, the common observation of the people originated the custom of riding into town, not in the cool of the evening or of the morning, out in the middle of the day. They did not understand the philosophy, but they observed the fact that those who came to the city at midday remained well, while those who did so early or late suffered from it.

All strangers at Rome are cautioned not to cross the Pontine marshes after the heat of the day is over. Sixteen of the ship's crew, touching at one of the West India islands, slept on shore several nights, and thirteen of them died of yellow fever in a few days, while of two hundred and eighty, who were freely ashore during the day, not a single case of illness occurred. The marshes above named are crossed in six or eight hours, and many travelers who do it to the night are attacked with mortal fevers. This does, at first sight, seem to indicate that night air is unwholesome, at least in the localities of virulent malaria; but there is no direct proof that the air about sunrise and sunset is not that which is productive of the mischief.

For the sake of eliciting the observations of intelligent men, we present our theory on this subject.

A person might cross these marshes with impunity, who would set out on his journey an hour or two after sundown, and finish it an hour or two before sunrise, especially if he began that journey on a hearty meal, because, in this way, he would be traveling in the cool of the night, which cooling keeps the malaria so near the surface of the earth as to prevent its being breathed to a harmful extent.—Exchange.

HOW TO MAKE A COMFORTABLE HOUSE.

A WESTERN correspondent of the New York Tribune offers the following good suggestions to those building houses in our changeable climate:

"Having erected a balloon frame, and adjusted the studding for the reception of the door and window frames, with a firm foundation, nail boards to the foot of the studs outside and in, not driving the nails so that they cannot be readily drawn, and fill in between the boards with a mixture of one part lime to sixteen parts of coarse gravel—the mortar containing, of course, no stones of larger diameter than the width of the studs or the space between the boards nailed to them—and so continue to do, nailing on boards and filling in till night. The next morning the nails may be drawn, and the boards raised and nailed on again, if the weather has been warm and dry, as the mortar by that time will have set, so as not to need their support; if the weather has been damp, a longer time will be required. Continue in this way until a height has been reached equal at least to that of the first story. Next nail strips of lath to the studs on the outside, insert the door and window frames, and proceed inside up the house. A cheap, warm, and durable siding may be made from first quality fencing, matched, and nailed on with the tongues up.

"Having sided the house, plaster, without labour, upon the wall, which by this time will have become a solid stone. We now have a house with a space of about one-third of an inch between the stone and the siding (too narrow for mice), filled with dead air. The heat of the room during the day, of course, warms the stone walls about four inches thick, and the warmth is retained during the night, the dead air between the wall and siding preventing the escape of the heat. I have tested the above, in the house in which I now live, for about ten years, during which I have had no fires at night, and have found no frost gathered upon the wall, even in coldest weather, except white specks upon the heads of the nails driven into the base or mopboard. As the mortar can be mixed and filled in by the cheapest kind of help, the extra cost above that of an ordinary balloon frame house will not much exceed what is saved in the expense of labour, and this is richly repaid in the increased comfort of the occupants of such a house.—C. C. Bygley.

"THEY DO NOT KNOW ANY BETTER."

THESE is certainly a great deal of wrong doing by men and women, the wrong of which is so plain to lookers-on that one wonders what motive there can be for sacrificing their own obvious interests. Pride, malice and revenge accounts for many things. But there is a class of evils for which ignorance is to be blamed; and in recognizing this factor we are helped at once to pity, while we blame the wrong-doer, and we are shown one thing at least that may be attempted in the way of his reform.

There are thousands of single men who have no home-life, and who think it beyond their reach. Their evenings are long, tedious and dull, and they go to much expense to get relief. They buy tobacco; they pay for stimulants; they patronize places of amusement; they keep up forms of society that cost them something; in their own way they entertain; and they would confess, in moments of frankness, that they are not very happy after all. After a little the common forms of enjoyment become insipid, and they have to go further, and, in a certain proportion of cases, before they think they can afford home-life, they are unfit for its enjoyment. They are prematurely old, dispirited in feeling, bankrupt in affection, incapable of adapting to the new and gentler ways—"men"—more or less penitent, but condemned to miss the sweetest and aroma of life, however favorable their circumstances may become.

They did not know that with right ideas of life it would have been easier and cheaper for them to have married fitting wives; that they spent on needless and often noxious indulgences as much as would have—in the hands of a helpmeet—secured the pure, serene and satisfying happiness which they sought in vain, and will seek in vain forever. [B.]

"Eat slower," is very good and very wise counsel. There is a time for every thing—and as eating is one of the most important things of our mortal life, the time we take to do it rightly is of very great importance.

TENNIS.—In the Cole Creek congregation, Fulton Co., Ill., May 27, 1881, sister Lou Ann Tennis, aged 43 years, 3 months and 27 days.

Deceased was the wife of Bro. Samuel Tennis, a minister in the second degree. She was a mother of 13 children, two of whom have gone before.—Of those still living, one is a babe three weeks old. She was a kind, affectionate mother, a sincere Christian. Her seat was seldom vacant at church. She died, rejoicing in the God of her salvation.—Had a full assurance of a glorious immortality.

We deeply sympathize with our dear brother, and pray God Almighty to sustain him in his deep affliction. He has the consolation of the Christian, of not having to mourn as one without hope. Funeral services by the Brethren.

FREDERICKSHAVEN, }
May 22, 1881.

The good news from Thyland I will send to you that our Brethren may feel glad with us. It shows it to be a fact, that if a preacher lives out his faith, he will sooner or later gather around him a little band of believers. I would to God that we had twenty ministers located at different points in Denmark, Sweden and Norway, Germany and England, and within a few years, we would at least have as many churches in Europe.

Why is it that we have so many German and English members, even ministers, and no churches in their native lands? Do they send their relatives tracts and papers? Do they write to them, and do all they can, in order to get them converted?

If not, for God's sake go to work at once, and soon the cry will come across the deep: "Come over and help us," and the brotherhood be compelled to send some, to receive them into fellowship, and the Danish Mission movement be repeated over and over again until our banner is planted all over the globe.

In Thyland we had only two members for years, coming to the church through the instrumentality of Rudolph Christensen, who years ago went to America. By prayer and work, God, gave us a new brother last year, who had some gifts to speak a word for Jesus. He was elected a minister by the church on his visit here; went home and now writes as follows:

WILLERSLEV, }
MAY 20, '81.

Dear Brother:—

As I, this evening, attended a Baptist meeting, Marie Lars Harring's wife entreated me to write to you in regard to baptism. She wept and said she had no peace either night or day. She could not feel content with a change of mind, faith and repentance; but wanted baptism in accordance with the Word of God.

She said, I should hurry you onward, to come some days before Pentecost, so that things could be arranged in good time, for a Love-feast. She prays for her husband and wants him along.—I help her in her struggle, dear brother, yes, ask God to shed his spirit abroad in our hearts, that we may overrule us all; then we will have a second Pentecost.—God to glory, and us to joy.

I think of five weeping sinners, who may be baptized this time. May God's will be done. You wrote to us to ask for one sister, so we could hold a feast; now you see the Lord has more than answered our prayers. Praise his holy name.

Now I send you all our love and pray, God will bless you in soul and body. I often think of you and the tender care you bestowed on me, when I was in your house. I long to visit you once more, and speak to you all face and face.

A. NIELSEN.

About Miss Goodrich.

In reply to your query in regard to the miraculous cure of Miss Goodrich, I will say, that I am boarding at her home near Yellow Creek, Ill., and can give you a few items in regard to the matter.

From her mother who was with her during the greater part of her illness, I have heard as much—and more than was published in the "Inter Ocean," and have no reason to doubt the veracity of the statement.

I have read several letters written by the lady herself, and in every one she gave God the glory for her present strength. She feels the need of faith, if she would keep the blessing.

During the years previous to her affliction, she was a zealous worker for her Master—in the Sabbath school, in the day school and elsewhere; evidently the Lord is blessing her for it.

That her faith in God's power may be the means of gain to her, and also of causing others to obey his will, and thus receive the reward, not only of present enjoyment, but of "life eternal" is the sincere wish of the writer.

M. A. HART.

A VOLCANIC LAKE.

M. De Lesseps is credited with describing on his return to Europe, a singular, geological phenomenon. In the Republic of San Salvador there is a lake called Hopsago, and in January, after a few premonitory shocks of earth-quake, three craters suddenly opened in the middle of the lake, and belched forth immense volumes of steam, dust and fiery cinders.

By-and-by the three vents merged into one, and an island of tuff and lava arose above the surface of the waters. Attempts were made to approach this young volcanic island, but the feat was impossible, owing to the boiling of the water, and the showers of dust and clouds of vapor enveloping it.

The new volcano long continued to vomit forth great quantities of steam and virulent gases. All the fishes of the lakes were perished, and the bodies of innumerable dead shell-fish and aquatic animals.

It is a significant fact that the outbreak was preceded by an exceptional rise in the level of the lake, owing to the rains. This appears to be the first instance on record of a volcano bursting up through the waters of an in and lake; but submarine volcanoes breaking out in the ocean bed are no very rare phenomena.

A Great Oak.

In the old Friends' burying ground on the principal street of the city of Salem, New Jersey, stands a magnificent white oak, which looks as if it had a millennium of vigorous life left in it yet, although it must have been a tree of majestic proportions when John Fenwick landed there one fine October day, two hundred and five years ago, and founded the first town on the east bank of the Delaware.

The Salem oak is not so remarkable for the size of its trunk, which is scarcely more than 20 feet in circumference at six feet from ground, as it is for its amplitude of shade. In one direction its branches have a spread of 112 feet, and in the direction of right angles to its greatest diameter, its branches extend more than a hundred feet.

At about 15 feet from the ground, the trunk swells into a great mass, and then diverges into at least twenty main branches, each of which would make a large tree. Taken together, in altitude, volume and expansion, it is one of the grandest specimens of its kind to be seen in this country.

It seems quite natural that the placid and substantial old Quaker town, whose very name signifies peace, should have gathered about the great tree with its "tranquil aspect of venerable countenance through centuries," and it was almost a necessity that the reverent pride and good taste of the Salem people have led them to select all comers of the oak for the device upon the city seal.

The high waters of the Mississippi River this year flooded a territory as wide as Massachusetts and longer than from Boston to Omaha.

Several prominent Scotch farmers propose to make a tour through this country the present season, to obtain information in agricultural matters.

MANY of the new houses built this year are provided with insulated wires laid under the plastering, ready for the introduction of the electric light.

THERE is no limit to the uses of scientific discovery. It is now proposed to supply the Arctic expeditions about to set out from San Francisco with coils of light steel wire which can be transported by and unrolled from sledges, and that telephonic communication be maintained between exploring parties and the base of supplies.

Show your BRETHREN AT WORK to your neighbors—show them—and ask them to subscribe. They may want to read Stein's Letters of Travel.

Oh! This issue is somewhat delayed on account of the machinery being out of order. Our readers will please bear with us, as we are doing the very best we can.

Brother M. A. Kevanagh, our agent at Plymouth, passed eighteen subscribers for B. at W. recently, at the close of a meeting; and W. F. Eyer, at Good's Hill, Va., procured ten at a Sunday-school. We publish this to the encouragement of those who ought to go and do likewise.

ONE MAN can pull down more truth in one day than ten men can build up, on the principle that it is easier to tear a building apart than to put it together.

ABOUT fifty members from Lanark attended the Feast at Lost Nation, Iowa, week before last. Excursions of that kind are both pleasant and profitable to the cause.

This week Brother S. T. Boesman tells us how he got sick; next, he will tell how he got well. By the way, it might be good for the people to tell how he keeps well.

The College proved quite convenient at the Annual Meeting. The whole building seemed to have been used as a place of shelter and resort. Of course, it was full.

It is said that the use of the Revised New Testament in the fashionable pulpits will compel some of the popular ministers to either re-write many of their sermons or write new ones.

BROTHER J. W. Stein's Letters of Travel will be published in the B. at W. only. If you want to read all, you should subscribe now, as we can not print any extra copies.

SOME of the members thought that the playing of the band and beating the drum near the Annual Meeting ground, on Thursday evening, just as the council broke up, was not in place.

PROBABLY the man who never made a mistake in his life never made anything else. This item is for those who find all the faults in their neighbors and none in themselves.

BROTHER Daniel Vaniman thinks that with property continued efforts a church might be built up in St. Louis. The greatest drawback is the lack of a house in which to hold meetings.

BROTHER E. E. Eshman and D. L. Miller were in Chicago last week selecting new books for the "Cassel Library." About $500.00 worth were purchased and will be here and shewed inside of a few days.

We have sold a large number of "Library of Universal Knowledge" for the American Book Exchange, and as our agreement with them includes notices of their books, our readers will find it on page 309.

THE Mirror to our regular subscribers has been delayed somewhat, but all have now been supplied. Price 50 cents, a year to all who now subscribe for B. at W., one year, and pay cash, $1.50.

It unhappy people could forget the cause of their sad state, how happy they would be! Every one has a mission in life, but it seems to be the mission of a small number to mind their own business alone.

THE Rev. Daniel McKay, of Pekin, says one boy in the school at a recent examination performed the almost incredible feat of memory for every book and a Chairman, of repeating the whole New Testament without using a single word.

We think there is an excellent opening here for some one to put up a suitable boarding house and board students, as there are generally more on hand than can be accommodated in the College buildings, and especially will that be the case next Fall and Winter, for there are already enrolled, for the Fall term, four times as many students as there were last year at this time. A boarding house conducted on strictly hygienic principles would, we think be well patronized.

BROTHER Allen Ives has returned from Goldenblake, Wash. T., to his former place of residence, Burr Oak, Jewell county, Kan. His correspondents will note this change and address him accordingly.

THE Vindicator thinks it hard to keep up with the motions and seconds at our Annual Meeting. Much of this confusion is caused by the parties making motions out of order. Perhaps we need to study parliamentary rules a little.

TO-DAY will be the closing exercises of the College, and the pupils will immediately take their departure for their homes. Our best wishes go with them. May they prove useful workers in the great and good cause of benefiting humanity.

THE Standing Committee had its room in the College this year, and we did not see that it effected the minds of the members one particle. They were as firm in the established principles of the church as any Standing Committee we ever had.

ABOUT 400 persons came on a special train from Dayton, Ohio, to Ashland. As they passed up the main street to the Annual Meeting ground, we thought we never saw people walk so fast. Their movements indicated good health and plenty of energy.

At the Annual Meeting Brother Quinzer stated that he had in his hands about $100.00 of the money raised a few years ago, to defray the expenses of the committee appointed to visit California. He was instructed to hold the money for the use of future committees.

BROTHER Daniel Vaniman spent a few days with us last week. He was on his way to Wadman's Grove. He seemed to enjoy himself finely as he is a lover of books, schools, and the printing office, and is at home in either. We admire brethren who are willing to live and let live.

A NEW tract, now ready, called "Daniel's Vision," and "How to Conquer the Quaid." Friends of reform should purchase these in large quantities and distribute them where they will do good. Price 3 cents, single copy 5 for 16 cents; 25 for 40 cents; 50 for 75 cents; 100 for $1.00. For sale by Western Book Exchange, Mt. Morris, Ill.

We should be thankful for the fourth of July, for it is known as the birthday of the best nation on which the sun ever shone. The time need to be when good people not in religious assemblies to bear the Declaration of Independence read, and thank God for the liberties they enjoyed. But times have changed—a worldly assembly now meets; the day is celebrated in a manner that is far from being religious; hence our advice to our members is, to take no part in such proceedings. We do not think they are in harmony with the humble principles of Christianity, hence we keep away from such places.

PLEASE EXPLAIN.

"Can old subscribers avail themselves of the excellent terms offered in your club rates?" WILLIAM.

Certainly! All they need to do is to send us the money, and we shall extend the time on their paper. For example: suppose you have paid to Jan. 1, 81, and now send us $1.50; we will mark your paper paid to Jan. 1, 82, and send you the Mirror one year. Or if you wish to avail yourself of the offer of the "Problem of Human Life," B. at W., and Mirror, we will send you the book, B. at W. till Jan. 82, and the Mirror one year. Do not look for letter terms, they are not given. Now is the time to accept these offers.

WASHING THE SAINTS' FEET.

BY MRS. K. R. HARTMAN.

Come brethren dear who think it queer,
That I now should wash your feet;
Your attention lend, while I as a friend,
My reason hold repeat.

The Lord of old, has plainly told;
As in his word you will see;
I the way have led, and have often said,
'Tis well—if you follow me.

Some in their pride, this ordinance deride,
'Tis a non-essential they contend;
But while they disagree we will humbly bow,
And keep it to the end.

If we not look in the blessed Book
Of God's own word we'll see
That our Savior said, I the way have led,
'Tis well if you follow me.

Just go to the Word, and see what the Lord,
Has said in the thirteenth of John;
Where he plainly taught that ye also ought
To do as I have done.

My example true I give unto you,
As Lord and Master I be,
I the way have led, and have often said,
'Tis well—if you follow me.

He thought it meet, to wash their feet,
To show how he loved them still—
He used the rite, on humbly's night,
And placed it in his will.

Ye call me Lord, as in m Word,
I assured you thus I be,
And the way have led, you must do as I said,
'Tis well—if you follow me.

Then to Peter he came, to wash his same,
But Peter said he'd rather be excus'd;
But the Master replied, Oa you, selfishness re-plied,

By me you shall be refused,
'Tis mine to say, but yours to obey
With deep humility;

I the way have led, and have boldly said,
'Tis well—if you follow me.

Why say ye Lord, repeat—Lord, Lord,
And do not what I say;
You can't be my friends, if you only pretend
To feel—but not obey.

Take action hold, but not words soon told,
To tell us what we be;
For the Master said, I the way have led,
'Tis well—if you follow me.

Our souls are on fire, while we boldly admire
The humility and love seen here,
'Thank God for the rite, we'll obey with all our might,

Though the proud may laugh and sneer,
We have learned too well, what the Lord did tell

About this ordinance sweet;
I the way have led, do as I have said,
And wash one another's feet.

In a future array, at the judgment day,
When this ordinance all unfurled,
Shall with light most sweet, roll its trophies to the feet

Of our Lord—Judge of the world.

How will ye first tremble when the world shall a semblie
And stand their doom to see;
If the Judge shall say, Why don't you obey,
And meekly—follow me?

O brethren dear, the Master is near,
While humbly wishing feet;
I feel to rejoice, for I hear his voice
Of approbation sweet.

If you will obey, in a future day
You shall reign above with me,
Where all is peace, and storms all cease,
Till then—O follow me.

PRINCIPLES

BY O. H. BALSABOR.

WHO investigates them? candidly applies them? intelligently talks and writes about them? And yet what a show of devotion is made to them, while they are ignored and abused in their very advocacy. Liberty, progress, unfettered individuality, are the watch words of the day; and yet these underlie all evil, all sin, no less than good. Liberty to do wrong is the very pivot of moral being, and the law of progress remains in full force in the hellward no less than in the Heavenward course. No individuality, not even God's, is absolutely unfettered, all being bound to the inevitable consequences of volition. All responsible being has the power of choice between opposites of conduct and character, but not between their issues. There is no must in God's goodness apart from choice. "His peace which passeth all understanding" would be no peace were not omnipotent will and infinite love in it. We get ours on no other ground. No soul is either good or happy by chance. Not by blind, ignorant preference. Prejudice is not principle, although it bears its label. Reason, conscience, love are the precursors of right will.

One peremptorily announces, "I never did and never will advocate a peculiar cut of dress, but will do all in my power to do anything in harmony with the gospel." Will this brother please point out any dress, for angel, devil, man, beast, or plant, that has not "a peculiar cut." Every exterior is cut exactly according to its life. No exception to this law. Ignorance of principles lies at the root of such an utterance. Again speaks the same authority: "I believe if it was right for the old sisters to wear hats, it is not wrong now. I believe there is nothing in the Bible against wearing a plain hat. I oppose a fashionable hat, and will help expel any sister that wears a fashionable hat." Consummate nonsense. The plainest thing in the world is as liable to the principle of wrong as the gaudiest. Preference has a motive, and this is largely affected by circumstances. What are these circumstances respecting the deviation from established order? Do they in the aggregate, or singly, signify devotion to the cross, a higher appreciation and expression of the life of Christ? Who dare affirm? What sister will rise and in view of death and judgment declare that her plain hat is a matter of conscience, and worn for the sake of the principle that sets Christ so widely apart from the world? All argument that shirks this central idea is the very essence of rottenness. To refer to the hats worn by sisters in a former generation in justification of the modern custom is unfair in the last degree. Similarity of circumstances alone establishes identity of principle. Let us be open minded and honest. The principle that underlies legislation in the adjustment of this matter is an and not necessary. Whether the church has a right to insist on the particular costume she has adopted, is quite another question.

But the "cut" is not any more "peculiar" than any other. I am no advocate for the prevailing, or adopted mode, as being exclusively expressive of the idea of inward crucifixion, and separateness from the world. That it does express this principle none but a lunatic would gainsay. But such loose, thoughtless argument as that quoted above renders legislation imperative and at least approximate conformity to a standard mode. But while the principle is inflexible, the application is not. Christ and his apostles, and the early Christians, wore neither broad rimmed hats nor round coats. In revolutionary times both these were tip-top fashion. Deviation from rule can have but two motives: conscience and lust. And both of these must be interpreted by two specifications: a high and comprehensive objective standard, and the sum of the life in which the departure occurs. Jesus is the Ideal. Does His life, in its quality and exhibition, justify our liberty? Is our choice integral to the high calling of God in Christ Jesus? Intrinsic principles never change, but in representation, owing to equality of circumstances. The principle involved in the roving of a skiff and the flying of a bird is the same, and yet the form widely varies with a general uniformity. The showy, symbolic costume of the High Priest, and the sackcloth and ashes of the humiliated and low one root; both were related in principle to the Divine will and human frailty. Wherever there is ground for such a motive, i. e. all sisters wear hats all means, and brethren don the latest style, and chew and puff the latest brand of the weed which so man; value above the putting commission of Jesus. It is the life of God we want, and not the construction of propositions and definitions. The sun will shine any how, no matter what our philosophy of light. Its law waits for our chemical experiments and scientific deductions. Our natural life will fashion its exterior, quite the conflicting philosophies of biology. Will God manifest in the flesh do less? Has the Holy Ghost a tendency to carnal conformity any more than our physical vis vita to merge into the form of an ass or toad? Is Darwin right after all, even in the sphere of the Spirit's operation, evolving angels out of porwiggles, and snakes and snappers out of serpents? Is it to whom God dwells, who has knowledge of the Word in the letters, and, will need a scientific education to cut his dress, neither will he despise the law of the church necessitated by the presence and energy of such christian influence. "He that bath water, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." Rev. 2: 20.

Let the Teacher at Work

AM I MY BROTHER'S KEEPER?

BY D. F. MOORE

It was certainly the design of an all-wise and beneficent Creator, the originator of the human family that we should live in a body of fraternal brotherhood, to be mutually dependent upon each other, to love one another, and to labor to promote the happiness and welfare of all. There is none therefore so independent in the endowments of wisdom or wealth, or all worthy advantages combined but that they may at some time or other stand in need and be greatly benefited by the services of the most humble and independent member of society. The monarch and his subjects, the tyrant and his vassal, the master and his slave, the landlord and his tenant, the bondholder and his debtor, the farmer and the day laborer, the mechanic and his journeymen, the doctor and his patient, the lawyer and his client, the officers of government and their constituents, the man of poverty and the man of wealth—all these are more or less dependent upon each other and should live together in love, and assist and encourage each other as they have opportunity. They should feel that they are brethren, and that as circumstances may suggest that they "are their brother's keeper."

This idea is forcibly illustrated by the fable of the lion and the mouse. The mouse by chance falls into a trap helpless for relief. The lion discovers his situation and kindly relieves the prisoner; the mouse as a token of gratitude proposes when an opportunity presents itself to reciprocate the kindness of his friend. The lion however in the vanity of his greatness and comparative superiority, treats with contempt the offer of his little ward. But it so happened that the lion was captured and confined with a long chain; now just as helpless as the little mouse in the trap, but fortunately the chain was attached by a leather collar. Herein was an opportunity for the mouse, and setting about the work with means provided by nature, he soon cut the collar in two and the lion was free. The moral is in the text, "Am I not my brother's keeper?"

But alas for poor fallen humanity through the insidious devices of the adversary this beautiful order of things was perverted, and instead of that love which is of God, which is "pure, peaceable, easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, and without hypocrisy," the contrary is exhibited by Cain in the murder of his brother, and wherefore slew he him? The answer as given by the apostle is "because his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous." 1 John 3: 12. This is a question that may be more minutely considered. Cain is said to be of that wicked one, and hence to the human family the father, the patron and a type of all envyings, hypocrisy, and persecutions of every age and nation.

The immediate cause of this diabolical sin was envy, the worst of all the sinful passions that the sons of men are subject to. "Wrath is cruel, anger is raging, but who is able to stand before envy." Prov. 27: 54. We notice first how envy prompted the act, and second, how by stratagem and hypocrisy he succeeded in perpetrating it upon his innocent and unsuspecting victim.

Mother Eve at the birth of Cain said, "I have gotten a man from the Lord." We learn that "gotten" means acquired or possessed, and generally implies a high valuation of the acquisition. Probably therefore Eve concluded that this was the promised seed. On the other hand, the name given to Abel (which signifies vanity) seems to imply that far inferior expectations were formed respecting him. And if Cain was early taught to consider himself the superior of his brother, it would be likely to beget in him that proud, malignant, and envious spirit which produced these fatal consequences. Thus being bloated with the idea of pre-eminence he brought his offering unto the Lord, while Abel, under a sense of his dependence in the depths of humility, brought his offering, and the Lord who is a searcher of hearts, had respect to Abel's offering, and rejecting Cain's, brought him to grief, and so inflamed his cruel passion that he determined on the destruction of his brother, and in the extremity of his meanness lied to God, and insolently demanded to know whether he regarded him as his brother's keeper. Thus he foolishly employed his genius and energy in procuring the ruin of his brother instead of applying it to the use of the means as suggested by the Lord ("If thou doest well shalt thou not be accepted?") to relieve his lost position and elevate his standing with God and man. Better use the gift we have to improve ourselves than to injure others.

Next we notice the base hypocrisy of Cain in deceiving his brother by concealing his murderous hatred under the mark of cordial affection, entering into familiar converse with him till he draws him into a place of privacy where he took the opportunity of slaying him; and now frequently do we see the history of Cain repeating itself in the various departments of human associations, envious because of superior endowments, of greater advantages of a higher standing, the popularity of others and generally because of others being more respected, occupying higher position and more successful than ourselves.

It is more or less the case that the mechanic is envious of his compeer, the doctor of his brother physician, the lawyer of his neighboring attorney, the man who is less fortunate of his wealthy friend, the politician of his rival, and the preacher of his more gifted and popular brother.

This sunken spirit is exemplified in many instances on record; such as Cain and his brother, Joseph and his brethren, Herod the Great in the attempt to destroy the infant Savior, the Scribes and Pharisees in the persecution and murder of our Lord, and the thousands of martyrs whose blood crieth from the ground for vengeance upon their persecutors. Add to these the numerous cases upon the criminal records of this and other countries, and it would require many volumes to join their history. There is a peculiarity in the history of Cain and his brother that I wish to notice a little farther. It is remembered that Cain by virtue of his birth, as signified by his name, concluded that he had the pre-eminence over his brother, occupied a higher position, an elder, if you please, for the time being. If it was only provisional, he was entitled to more respect and higher honors, and perhaps in his pride and vain glory might say, "I am in the ascendancy, and you are in my power, and I will keep you there." But after the decision of the case before the great Judge, how changed was their decision! Abel had now superceded him, and he greatly humiliated, and something must be done; and he impiously challenged God's authority for inquiring of him concerning his brother, saying, "I know not; am I my brother's keeper?" And as for Abel he must necessarily have been put out of the way, but like all others of his kind, too cowardly to make an open and fair attack upon him in open day, like all hypocritical demagogues, to get the advantage of him, entered into familiar conversation with him, and likely if they would have engaged in a season of prayer he would have prayed fervently that his brother could believe on him and regard him as his friend, and perhaps would have connected with his prayer, a pretended effusion of tears. At any rate he succeeded in seducing him and getting him in a private place, or in other words, into his power, and accomplished his wicked purpose in ruining him. And just so his descendents in all ages and nations have acted towards those who they have in their power and of whom they entertained fears of losing this place and power and when having lost it hypocritically, feigned familiarity in order to seduce them and get an advantage over them. This is the case especially in political and religious circles. Political demagogues are legion, and religious demagogues are more numerous than they ought to be. Politicians say that all with them is policy and nothing for principle, and therefore will mount any hobby that promises to trample under foot any that chance to stand in their way, and carry them safely into power and political glory; financial prosperity to follow as a natural consequence. Just so the religious demagogue, though like Cain too hypocritical to acknowledge it, adopts this same theory. There are those before him who stand in his way to position of honor, and upon principle he is irreproachable. Policy, then, is the only alternative. Some quibble gets afoot in the church, the assistant beats around, and he learns that his supposed rival is standing upon principle, from which he cannot be divided for any consideration, having the spirit of a martyr, will suffer to be sacrificed rather than yield to such quibbling. But the aspirant learns farther that the other side has the majority, mounts the hobby and rides into the position from which he has succeeded in deposing his brother.

But forsooth in the loss of time, right and justice prevail, and the case is reversed; the demagogue falls below the level of his previous standing; now Cain-like, he becomes familiar, trying every means to remove the memory of his past conduct, and to get in the confidence of his injured brother; but the Abels of the present day having better opportunities profit by experience, and are not in all cases so easily decoyed, and while in obedience to the command of our blessed Master, they are willing to forgive, and do forgive from the heart, yet knowing that the other belongs to the family of Cain, they are careful not to give them an opportunity to get them into their power, ("By their fruits ye shall know them,") and will if possible keep out of harm's way. This idea is forcibly illustrated by the fable of the lion and the fox. An old lion who had for many years made havoc among the other animals, having them in his power, had no mercy upon them, but gratified his desires unsparingly upon them. But at length age encroached upon him, his strength and activity failing, and unable to pursue his prey, he too was under the necessity of resorting to policy, and retreating into a cave he issued his proclamation of peace and good will to all animals, and would devote the remnant of his days in making reparation for the misdeeds of his past life, and invited all to visit him in his retreat that he might give them an evidence of his sincerity and good intentions, and many became his dupes, and went in only to become a victim to his stratagem and supply the cravings of his appetite. By and by the fox concluded to pay his respects to the lion also, and for this purpose approached the cave; but when coming to the entrance his keen perception happened to notice that the tracks all pointed inward and none returning, he did not go in, and the lion remembering that the fox had not visited him, complained of his disinclination; but the fox replied by relating the circumstances of his visit to the entrance, etc., and asked to be excused upon the ground that the facts as there discovered awakened in him the suspicion that it might not be so safe to go in, and so close to remain where he would be sure of not becoming a dupe to his hypocrisy, not willing to trust him as his keeper.

To be my brother's keeper implies the idea of doing unto others (as we may have opportunity) all the good we can, by relieving their actual necessities, protecting their character, elevating their standing, and in every way helping their influence so as to promote their happiness and usefulness, and keeping out of their way everything that might demoralize them or disqualify them for performing their part upon the stage of life. To particularize we may mention the publishing and circulating, or in any way encouraging the reading of obscene or any other light literature, which at the present day is doing more to vitiate the tastes and demoralize the conduct of the rising youth than anything else. We will connect with this all, trifling amusements; such as attending theatres, the various exhibitions of the ring, circuses and other shows, the ball-room and all of their kind.

And in this catalogue we will notice the manufacture of having made of our grain, fruit, or anything over which we have control, selling or giving away, or in any way encouraging the use of intoxicating beverages, in the use of which more lives have been sacrificed, more wickedness produced, more suffering caused, more families ruined, more subjects for houses of correction and for the gallows, and more souls consigned to the regions of the lost—than any other existing cause. This being true, can we (who are designed and required to be our brother's keeper) have any business in jutting these things within the reach of him who in this sense (by creation) is our brother, causing his ruin of body and soul without making ourselves responsible and to meet the consequences of the final day, when the great Judge will call upon us and say, "Where is thy brother? Is it not a fearful thought?" Would we think for a moment of going into an armory and manufacturing canons, muskets, bayonets, swords, and carbines, instruments of death? When we can conscientiously do this, then, and not tell them, can we be our brother's keeper and allow ourselves to have anything to do directly or indirectly with the greater evils alluded to?

HOW TO CONQUER THE QUID.

DO you want to know how to get the victory over it? I will tell you. Good old Elder D—, of M—, who in my early ministry was a spiritual father unto me, was thirty or more years ago an inveterate user of tobacco. He chewed and smoked. He did so day and night. He says he used more tobacco than any other man in the town. But God converted him. Then came conviction of the evil of the strong habit. Then came the struggle. The habit was strong as death. It was as a deep, long rut, in which the wheel will run in spite of the driver. He prayed about it and left off. He was stupid, restless, wild, half-crazy. Then he used a little tobacco to cure him. "Just a little." God troubled his conscience. So he quit it again for weeks or months. His whole body was sick, craving the drug. He would think of tobacco, long for tobacco. He fell down in unconscious fits. Once he fell alone in the middle of the highway, and lay prostrate for half an hour. That wouldn't do,—he should die. So the plug was again resorted to. "Just a little, you know." He felt better, but God kept him on the anxious seat, and conscience thundered in her legislative chambers, "Stop using tobacco!" The victory came at last, but neither good resolutions, nor earnest desires, nor an adamant will won it without faith in Christ and his instant and gracious aid. And this is how it came:

One morning he went out to his barn to feed the stock, which having done, as was his custom, he kneeled on the barn floor and lifted his eyes upon high in prayer for the blessing. He always thus prayed in secret, but vocally, before breakfast. The breath of prayer and the steuch of the weed went out of the same mouth. But he was known in all praying circles as 'praying D—y.' His faith in subsequent years healed the sick, cured the despairing, and wrought wonders. Well, he rose in feeling, was in the power of the Spirit, was prevailing in prayer; and, with head thrown back, and face turned upward, was ready to seal the mount of God, when lo! as he was about to lay his hand upon the blessing, the quid which was in his mouth slipped down the throat and windpipe. The invocation was checked. Strangling, almost suffocation followed. The horrid demon was expelled, but not until he came so near dying there all alone in the barn, that in after years he trembled to think of it. A pause. Then sober reflection. He thought, "Here I am addressing the Holy God in the solemn exercise of prayer, and while in the act, am choked off from worship and blessing by the filthy weed! Now, tobacco, henceforth and for ever you and I have done. Here we dissolve partnership. God help me." The expelled quid and remaining plug were flung to the dung-hill. With a cleaner mouth another prayer was offered that aid might be given unto victory. God heard his servant. It was given. He lusted for the poison no more; had no fits; was not sick. Tobacco has never been wished for nor used by him since. Thus we have the secret of victory over evil habit, sin, and hell. A. T.

GAMBLING.

BY JAMES SAWYER.

WHILE standing in a shop where the dealer sold candies, I overheard a man ask the dealer the significance of the following placard: "Pop Corn Prize Package, One Cent."

The inquirer was a presiding elder, and the dealer was a member of his church. Said the man in response,—

"Each little parcel of pop corn contains some trifling toy or a five-cent piece; but it is only once in a while that a five-cent piece is found." He added: "When I first purchased the pop corn, I had no conscientious scruples about selling it; but now I think that it is teaching the young to gamble. To illustrate: One day a little fellow came in and bought a package. On opening it he found five cents. Enraptured at his brilliant success, he began to lay out the five cents in buying more packages. He spent all his money, but found no more packages with money in them. The news spread among the other children in town, and soon we had about a hundred cents from the sale of the packages. It opened my eyes to the influence I was exerting on the rising generation, and when the dealer came to bring a new supply, I did not purchase."

He also said that many times the packages would be opened, and the pop corn left. The minister then spoke of the cunningness exhibited by wicked men in their efforts to ensnare the young. Satan knows that grown-up people, with habits formed, are not so easily entrapped; hence the greatest effort is to beguile the young. He also remarked that candies are now made with drops of stimulating liquors inside, so that the young will acquire a taste for ardent spirits if they eat them.

Give not the tongue too great a liberty lest it take thee prisoner. A word unloosed is like a sword in a scabbard, thine; if vented the sword is in another's hand. If thou desire to be held wise, be so wise as to hold thy tongue.

Some men are always seeking for honors; trying to get higher positions. The better way is to walk faithfully in the path of duty and the honors will find them.

THE NEW MAN.

BY M. H. HENDERSON.

If any man be in Christ Jesus he is a new creature. This is the language of inspiration; the truth of this must be apparent to every observer; the names by which they are designated, are expressive of the heart-life and condition of each. They are designated as sinners and saints, as enemies to God by wicked words, and reconciled to God by His Son. The first is described as holy, the other unholly. One class as aliens, the other as fellow citizens with the saints and with the household of God. But the heart and life are no more clearly set forth than are their respective positions. The first is described as being children of darkness, the second as children of light; children of this world and children of the kingdom, as children of the wicked one and children of God. Their future is equally marked, to the first, You will not come unto me that you may have life &c. He that cometh unto me, I will in no wise cast out. To the first, Depart from me ye workers of iniquity; to the second, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the Kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

The Apostle speaks of the Christian having put off the old man with his deeds, and having put on the new man which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him. Concerning this change, we may not be mistaken. If the fruits of the flesh are still manifest we can rest assured that the old man still predominates. But if we have put on the new man and are in possession of the Spirit, the fruits will be manifest which are love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance; against such there is no law.

THE MASTODON IN RECENT TIMES.

PROF. John Collett, Ph. D., State Geologist of Indiana, gives some statistics in relation to the mastodon, that dispels the notion that these animals did not live in recent times. Archæologists who argue the great antiquity of man upon this planet, based upon the fact that his remains have been found with those of the mastodon, will be compelled to seek other lines of proof for their theory. We quote from page 385, Geological Report for 1880. Professor Collett says:—

"Of the thirty individual specimens of the mastodon (Mastodon giganteus) found in this State, in almost every case a very considerable part of the skeleton of each animal proved to be in a greater or less condition of decay. The remains have always been discovered in marshes, ponds, or other mirey places, indicating, at once, the cause of its death of the animal and the reason of the preservation of the bones from decay. Spots of ground in this condition are found at the summit of the glacial drift or in old beds of rivers which have adopted a shorter route and lower level, consequently their date does not reach beyond the most recent changes of the earth's surface; in fact, their existence was so late that the only query is, Why did they become extinct?"

"A skeleton was discovered in excavating the bed of the canal a few miles north of Covington, Fountain County, bedded in wet peat. The teeth were in good preservation, and Mr Perrin Kent states that when the larger horns were cut open, the marrow, still preserved, was utilized by the hog cutters to 'grease' their boots, and that chunks of sperm-like substance, 2; to 3 inches in diameter (dipceens), occupied the place of the kidney fat of the monster. During the past Summer of 1880, an almost complete skeleton of a mastodon was found six miles Northwest from Hoopston, Inquis County, Ill., which goes far to settle definitely that it was not only a recent animal, but that it survived until the life and vegetation of to-day prevailed. The tusks formed each a full quarter of a circle, were 9 feet long, 22 inches in circumference at the base, and in their upper crooked condition weighed 175 pounds. The lower jaw was well preserved, with a full set of magnificent teeth, and is nearly twice the length, the teeth, as usual, were thickly enameled, and weighed each from four to five pounds. The leg bones, when joined at the knee, made a total length of five and one-half feet, indicating that the animal was no less than eleven feet high, and from fifteen to six feet from brow to rump. On inspecting the remains closely, a mass of fibrous, bark like material was found between the ribs, filling the place of the animal's stomach; when carefully separated, it proved to be a crushed mass of herbs and grasses, similar to those which still grow in the vicinity. In the same bed of mire I saw a multitude of small fresh water and land shells were observed and collected, which were kindly determined by Dr. F. Stein, as follows:—

"1. Pisidium, closely resembling P. oblitum, (Haldeman). 2. Valvata tricaricata, Say. 3. Valvata resembling V. strata. 4. Planorbis parvus, Say.

"The shell-bearing animals prevail all over the State of Illinois, Indiana, and parts of Michigan, and show conclusively that, however other conditions may differ, the animal and vegetable life, and consequently climate, are the same now as when this mastodon sank in his grave of mire and clay."—Colton (Herald).

DEACONS WHO "RUN" THE CHURCH.

THE Alliance tells this story: An ex-deacon of a certain West Side (Chicago) church, a learned man, an able man too, is possessed with what may be called the deaconal ambition—an ambition usually confined to the owners of country groceries whose trade is increased by the honor. After having been deacon for a series of years, during which time he "ran" the church, he was suddenly ousted at a late election and is now reported to be plotting to drive the pastor out of the church. "Either he or I will leave within six months," he has said in effect to his followers. The pastor, though able and popular, is not a discreet man. He is apt to talk. This satiric deacon, knowing this, is laying all sorts of traps for his minister, with the intention of mortifying him by excluding the pastor at some future meeting of the church, thereby compelling him to resign. If this exclusion cannot rule the church, he intends to break it up, and will very likely succeed. There was a certain personage, who, according to John Milton, had such a design regarding heaven. There are a great many men with this small ambition in the churches. One gentleman with this tendency who had broken up every church that he had ever belonged to, found a hitherto harmonious church and commenced his machinations. This church was blessed with a genial and witty deacon, who arose one night at a prayer-meeting at which his plotting brother deacon was present, and commenced to lead in prayer.

"Oa, Lord, we pray that brother D— may die," he said, and the good brethren and sisters around his ears were well surprised. "Oa, Lord, we pray that brother D— may die and go to hell," he continued. So led off by an unwise deacon, the pastor was obliged to withdraw to rebuke the deacon when he finished a spiritual war with the words: "For we know it is good for him will be on a prayer-meeting in his place next year."

That church was broken up.

CHRISTIAN BENEFICENCE.

None part of Barnum there is a village of professing Christians, belonging to the Christian Church. Years ago, although they had their own teachers, they had no Bible—at least, their entire Bible was the gospel of Matthew, unaltered. One day the missionary's note was passing to a group of them that chapter which Christ speaks of being visited who were in prison, as represented in the parable of a disciple. They instantly took it lead to themselves. Like most churches, they had hitherto been mostly antis towards their suffering members. But they were not content with knowing the Lord's will; they went their way and did it. There was one poor widow who, with her child, was afflicted with leprosy. They had intended to let her pine away, neglected and uncared for; they now hastened to her aid. Some of them cleaned her house; another led her to some water; and some brought her rice and other comforts, till the poor outcast was bewildered with delight. In the same way they dealt with other afflicted neighbors, and it was not a mere spirit of kindness, but was sustained with silent and unostentatious perseverance, none being allowed to back what they themselves enjoyed.—Bible in Many Lands.

NARLETON allowed no chaplain in his army; and was content to say, the worse the man the better the soldier! The Duke of Wellington is reported to have said: "Men of nice scruples about religion have no business in the army."

It isn't long paying that counts with the Lord so much as giving four quarts for every gallon, sixteen ounces for every pound, and thirty-six inches to the yard; in fact, doing all others as we would be done by.

He that gains well and spends well needs no account book.

EVENINGS

BY A LADY

Tell me, ye Kinnis winds, that round my dwelling blow,
Do you know some spot where smoke do not go?
Some quiet pleasant dell, some valley in the West,
Where trees from pipes and smoke, a sound in peace may rest?

The land wind dwelled to a whisper low,
And sighed for pity, as it answered, no!

And you, then ocean deep, whose billows oft I see, Knowest thou some island home, to which our sex may fly?

Softness toloro quids and streams of filthy pee,
And no foul men's mouths? Oh what a vile slave!
For add waves, rolling in perpetual flow,
Support for awhile, and answer'd, No!

And thou, bright silver moon, when on thy mighty round,
Thou look'st down on earth, hast thou not somewhere found

A spot yet unfiled by those who are the weed,
And who instead the use of nature keep?
Have I a cloud the air with new her face,
Ave I an sadness answer'd, No! a place!

To I say, o' spirits bright, that now are hovering o'er,
Can you not culture this cause forever, ermine?
Or are it beyond this earth, such regions of the West;
Or west and in some place, where we, un-moored, may rest?

Faith, hope, and Trust—best buds to mortals given—
Wood their bright wings, and answer'd, Yes in heaven!

PARLOR'S JOKE.

BY MARIA PIER.

PARLOR'S has a great antipathy for the Recorder. The "Recorder" is a second-rate paper that principally records that which every one has become acquainted with through other papers, days and sometimes weeks before.

But it is not for this that Parlors has taken such dislike to the sheet, but purely from political reasons. He has often been heard declare that it should not enter his house; and more, that no member of his family should ever read it in any one else's house.

What, then, is a surprise one morning, up on reaching his place of business to be accosted by one of his slow clerks with the words:

"I see the Recorder has a new contributor this morning, Mrs. James C. Parlors."

"No!" and Mr. Parlors straightened himself up suddenly. But the other hands him the paper, and there it is in black and white. A stay in the Recorder, with his wife's name affixed!

His wife contributing to the Recorder! He sets his teeth and an angry flush pass over his countenance. But he takes a second look at the title and instantly the clouds clear away.

It is a piece that has been published in another paper and copied by this, of this fact he informs his exulting friend, and that friend is fated to quit no longer.

Now it happens that Mr. Parlors has his share of fun as well as most folks, and that, a great love. There is nothing gives him more pleasure than practicing a joke on some one. So it strikes him that he will have a little fun at his wife's expense, and writes her the following note, intending to follow it himself in a few moments.

"DEAR WIFE:—

Never, NEVER, did I think the fair name of the Parlors would be disgraced by an act of yours. If you care nothing for me, just think of our noble boy and beautiful daughter going through this world with the finger of scorn pointed at them. I suppose, although I am young in years, you will bring my prematurely grey locks to an untimely grave; and the flowers, that some strange hand once scattered over my last resting place, will refuse to bloom or even grow. Life hath no charms left for me; so let me die in peace. I will consult an attorney and see that you shall have to take to get a divorce and the custody of the children. I remain with a broken heart,—

JAMES PARLORS"

The wife receives the note while she is dividing her time between the noble boy of three months, and the beautiful girl of three years. She cannot comprehend it and reads it a second time, racking her brain for some little act that might have been committed and exaggerated to her husband by some malicious-minded person; but a clear conscience on this score fails to recognize one single error, and she is no nearer the solution of the mystery than before. Her bosom heaves, her breath comes short, and she trembles like an aspen; suddenly the thought comes—the most fearful from his lips what it means. He may even now be on his way to that untimely grave spoken of in his note.

She gives the crying child to the little "maid of all work," and making her toilet for the street in quicker time than she ever did before, or ever will again, starts for her husband's place of business, which is but a few blocks off.

But the husband had also started for home and left her now, carrying with him a copy of the obnoxious paper that has not entered his house for many years, to show his literary wife the meaning of his joke.

They miss each other on the way, and he reaches home to find the children both crying for their mother, the dinner burning upon the stove, and the servant girl in tears.

"What is the matter? Is she matter? and who is your mistress?" demands Mr. Parlors.

"O, Mr. Parlors! she got a note just now, and she put on her things and told me to take good care of the children for she did not know when she would come back, and the children wouldn't stop crying and the dinner was spoiled. And O, sir, I think you had better gather her, for she was as white as a sheet, and all of a tremble."

"Have you no idea in what direction she has gone?" He pauses with the door knob in his hand to ask the question.

"I think she said something about stopping at the State yard—"

He waits to hear no more but rushes out and back again to the factory. She is not there, but has been. Where has she gone? Towards the river. His informant told her he thought her husband had gone down there and indeed he had thought so, for Parlors had himself said he was going that very morning.

He starts in pursuit, inquiring of every one he meets if they have seen a woman going in that direction. Yes they have nearly all seen a crazy woman flying in the direction of the river and who would stop to answer none of their questions.

Mr. Parlors who is now very much excited, soon arrives at the river's bank, but she, of whom he is in search, is nowhere to be seen.

A little further up the shore he sees a group of men and hustles to them to enquire if they have seen her. As he nears the group he observes that they are standing around, and talking with some object. What can it be? It is the form of a man stretched upon the bank; and beside it is another form; that of a woman. One step nearer, the crowd separates, and O horror! he recognizes in the wan face of the unconscious woman, his wife.

"Good heavens!" he exclaims, and staggers back.

"Do you know the poor crazy thing?"

"Who is she?"

A dozen such questions are put to him at once.

"She is my wife, and she is not crazy. O, my precious wife!" and he takes the beautiful head with its abundance of dripping hair upon his arm.

"Put down her head if you want her resuscitated. If she is not crazy she acted very strange; for while we were all hussling around the man, she ran right into the water before any one knew what she was about, and came very near being drowned as dead as he is."

Parlors knows why she kept on into the water when she saw the drowning man, she thought it was her husband, and was determined to share with him a watery grave. A shudder creeps over him as he thinks what might have been the cruel consequence of his unfortunate joke. But he utters not a word of his thoughts, and as soon he perceives signs of life in the pale form, he has her removed to his home, where the poor wif is finally revived, but not until she has suffered a long and dangerous illness brought on by both the mental and physical trial she has undergone. It was a dear joke, and the last one ever perpetrated by Mr. James Parlors upon his wife.

A poor Irish woman applied to a lady for a flower or two to put in the hands of her dead infant, and when a hand-some bouquet was handed her she offered to pay her for it, which of course was declined, when, with a look full of gratitude, she exclaimed, "May the Lord Jesus meet you at the gate of heaven with a crown of roses."

THERE is plenty of opportunity for a man to make something of himself, despite his surroundings. God will help the man that has courage to help his self.

Two things are to be remembered in all our efforts to improve the condition of the world. First, that we can only do a very little; second that it is important to do that little.

BRETHERN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill.

IN WOODFORD COUNTY.

ON arriving at Reochoke we were met by Bro. P. A. Moore, and after introduction to sundry members at the depot, we were taken to his home. Sister Sallie Moore, of Mount Morris, accompanied us, and this having been her home many years ago, she found old friends on all sides to welcome her. On the evening of the 13th we met with quite a representation of brethren and friends from different parts of the country, in the M. E. Church, and enjoyed a pleasant season of worship. The front seats were early filled with a goodly number of brethren and sisters who are devoted to the Lord, and showed their zeal by singing the beautiful songs of Zion. O, the sweetness and power and grandeur of good singing! The organ set back in the congregation dumb and silent as Dagon. It kept quiet and we had a good meeting.

During the forenoon of the 14th, we visited sister Osborn, who has been sorely afflicted for the past eight years, but in her patience she has enjoyed many heaven-sent blessings from the Lord. She came to this country from Tennessee.

At 2 P. M. we met in the Panther Creek meeting-house near the home of Bro. James R. Gish, for public worship. Bro. Rufus has the rheumatism, having been attacked with the disease while in Arkansas last winter. He attended the afternoon meetings but could not remain for the night services, nor be present the next day.

Bro. Gish has been a faithful, devoted servant of the Lord for many years, and we pray that his health may be restored so that he can continue to teach the way of the Lord and strengthen the things which remain.

After the first meeting in the afternoon, the multitude went down to the water where two bright young girls were baptized. Now we have said nothing about going into the water: we only mentioned the multitude going to the water; but do not all understand that by our expression, that baptism in water is meant? So in the days of Christ and the apostles. Those who want to understand have no trouble in understanding.

The house was filled during the evening and many could not obtain admittance; hence stood without at the windows and were attentive listeners. This church permits each member to wash feet, and we commend that system especially for the order and quietness which comes by it. One can preach with ease and satisfaction during feet-washing, because of the good order and attention. Try it and be convinced.

We also state with joy that this church is in excellent working order, both males and females being zealous, loving, earnest, joyful and sociable. There is no confusion—no discord and strife over hats, caps, coats and ribbons, but all freely, and so far as we could learn, cheerfully comply with the Brethren's interpretation of the principles of plainness rather than follow the ideas of those not of us. There is life and light among this people; blessed be the Lord God who has called them to liberty. This church has been especially a place of much interest to the cause of Christ, on account of the good seed, the Word of Truth, having been sown there many years ago and ably advocated and defended by faithful men. Numbers have turned to the Lord here and gone to different parts of the country, carrying with them and scattering the Word of the Lord, thus honoring their Master and strengthening just and holy principles. The members remaining are decided and settled, firm in the faith and greatly attached to the Lord. We have found no greater faith anywhere. The brethren's fellowship and customs prevail exclusively and these are accompanied with love, zeal, knowledge, modesty and activity in making known the way of the Lord.

P. A. Moore, "a beloved brother and a faithful minister and servant of the Lord refreshed my spirit," and gave me consolation in the Lord.

James R. Gish, also a servant of Christ, took me in and lodged and fed me. "I bear him record that he hath a great zeal" for the people of God's pasture.

Geo. Gish, the meek and lowly, infuses life and submission into all who love the holy ways of the Lord.

And what shall we say more? There are Jacob King, a minister of the Lord, kind and good to all; and Henry, his brother, who brought me on my journey towards home; the Lord bless them and their households.

MORE ABOUT THE A. M.

OUR observations at the late Annual Meeting afforded us material for a good deal of thought, especially in regard to the manner of holding such meetings. Our experience at Lunark last Spring well prepared us for special thought in this direction, and we now propose to say something while it is fresh on our mind.

As long as the present plan of holding the meeting is continued, it is best to hold it in or near some town on account of lodging the people, and of other convenience. If the meeting at Adland, and also the one at Lunark, had been held in the country the lodging and care of the people would have been attended with much inconvenience, especially on account of the rain and mud. Then there are hundreds attending these meetings who desire to hire rooms in which they can lodge of nights so as to have their usual rest, and this cannot well be done in the country.

But even in this, care should be taken to prevent many of those, who attend the A. M., from being imposed upon by being compelled to pay unreasonable prices for the use of rooms. Those who desire rooms with conveniences should be willing to pay for them what is fair, but should not be taken advantage of on account of the urgency of the circumstances. A little effort on the part of a properly appointed judicious lodging committee will enable them to secure the rooms at fair rates.

Then there is attending the meeting an other class—and this class composes the main body of the assembly—who out of a brotherly and kindred feeling expect to put up with any kind of lodging that the members and friends may chance to have; they do not expect to pay for their lodging, for they think that the members in the vicinity of the meeting should throw open their houses and barns and do their utmost to give all some kind of shelter under which to sleep. This has long been a custom among our people, and one we would not like to see abolished as long as the present system of holding the meeting is continued. We do not want to see the time come when members, in the vicinity of the A. M., will charge members, for sleeping in their houses and barns. We have nothing to say against outsiders for doing so, for they are not under the same obligations that belong to members of the one common faith. During the throng at Jerusalem the members had all things common, and did their utmost to lodge and entertain the people. This kindred feeling should characterize us at our Annual Meetings—the members should throw open their houses and barns and shelter what people they can, free. This will give many of the poor a chance to attend and enjoy the meeting, besides this charitable way of lodging the people tends to develop charity and strengthen the brotherly feeling that should pervade our brotherhood. It does not look brotherly for members to call for an A. M., and then charge the members for sleeping in their houses and barns. If those lodged, feel like paying, all right—that looks very Christian-like—but to charge them does not have a good tendency.

For our own part we have no reason to complain, having never been mistreated in this respect, but we speak for the good of future meetings, seeing that the present tendency is in this direction, and we want to see it avoided as much as possible while the present system of holding the meeting is continued. We cast no reflection on any past meetings, knowing that looking back is not a good way of guarding the future.

The water supply at these meetings needs considerable foresight. The lack of drinking water at Ashland would have been felt seriously had the weather been warm and dry. We came near making a similar mistake at Lanark, hence had to haul to make up the deficiency. In addition to water required for horses, there should be not less than two very strong wells. One should be exclusively for the use of the cooking and eating departments, so arranged that others could not get to it, for people should not crowd around the cooking department. The other well should be not too far from the council tent, and supplied with a medium size tank into which fresh water is constantly pumped by a wind-mill. To this tank a number of dippers should be made fast that the people may come and drink at pleasure. These wells, if not already dug, should be dug in the Fall, and the water repeatedly pumped out during the Winter and Spring. This gives opportunity to test the strength of the water supply besides getting the water in proper condition for agreeable use. A well that can be pumped empty inside of seven hours will not do to depend on for A. M. purposes. We would not like to risk a well that could be exhausted inside of twelve hours. To have the water give out in the midst of the meeting renders things very embarrassing.

The baggage department at our A. M. is getting to be quite burdensome. It was very much crowded at Ashland. We experienced the same thing at Lanark last Spring. A room for this purpose should be not less than 12x30 feet, and have in it at least three expert hands who know how to arrange and handle things systematically.

An editors' tent, or place of doing business, becoming a necessity, for hundreds of people desire to meet the editors and settle their accounts with them. We do not believe in making this room a place of general traffic where people are urged, even against their will to purchase things they do not want. It should be a quietly conducted affair where patrons and editors can meet and do business undisturbed. A room 12x15 will be sufficient.

The use of Tents at our Annual Meetings is still, in my mind, of doubtful propriety. If it rains they leak. If the wind blows they are liable to fall. If the sun shines warm, then it is too sultry under the tent. So taking it, all in all, a tent is hardly to be depended upon. Our Committee of Arrangements in Illinois came to the conclusion that if we had used lumber instead of canvas, it would have been better for the meeting. In case of rain it would shed the water better than canvas, and not be so liable to blow down in windy weather. Should the weather be hot, it would be much more pleasant. The lumber could have been sold at a small discount so that the loss on it would have been less than what we paid for the use of tents. We coincide this suggestion to the serious consideration of those who will have charge of the next A. M. arrangements.

Too much time is taken up at our A. M. Meetings in making announcements, and the business of the meeting sometimes considerably prolonged. There is a constant demand for calling out the names of brethren to learn whether they are present. Those having charge of these meetings should make it a rule to make no announcements unless absolutely necessary for the good or proper information of the assembly. If a brother wants to find his uncle, cousin or some one else whom he thinks may be present, let him hunt for him. If possible all announcements should be held till just before adjournment. This thing of making railroad announcements in the council tent is a very unsatisfactory way of imparting information, especially when two or three hundred want to ask questions about their individual tickets. The better way is to have a properly authorized person in a little office building on the ground to attend to all railroad matters and refer the people to him.

We believe it would be more convenient if the editors' table was near the moderator, so we could keep a better run of the business before the meeting, on account of reporting it more correctly in our papers. This table should be so arranged that none but editors could occupy it. Otherwise too many gather around the table and often fall into a low conversation that not only disturbs the meeting but sets a bad example. The reporter, by all means, should be near the moderator and reading clerk.

At Ashland the platform for the Standing Committee and Delegates was at least one foot too high. It should have been as low, if not a little lower, than any other part in the tent, so as to permit those standing and speaking on one side of the platform to be plainly seen by those sitting on the other. This, however, is a common mistake at our Annual Meetings. It is supposed that the Committee should be a little elevated, but for the convenience it should be just the reverse.

It is hoped that no one will think that our object is to criticize meetings and arrangements in the past; we are looking to the future with a view of aiding those who may have charge of the meetings hereafter. Next week, if spared, we will enter the dining department and examine it in detail. We have some improvements to suggest, and may wind up with a plan that if adopted would render our Annual Meeting more pleasant, and everything more agreeable to all present, letting the meeting last as long as a night be thought proper.

STEIN AND RAY DEBATE.

THIS work of 433 pages, neatly printed and substantially bound is now offered to the public. We have given it a careful review, and regard brother Stein's part of the work as among the ablest ever brought out in defense of the doctrine of Christ. The arguments are clear, forcible and convincing. Every brother should have a copy of the work, and study the points presented by Bro. Stein. Dr. Ray's "wit's end" and "hard speeches" can be passed by, if desired; as it is wearisome to pick over such a vast amount of chaff, in order to find few grains of wheat. "Well why put it into the book?" asks one. For the very reason that the devil's words are put into the Bible. Gen. 3: 1, 4. Job 1: 9, 10, 11, and 2: Matt. 4: 3, 6, 9. If God permitted the very words of the devil to be put into his holy Book, that being in the flesh captive by him in his dis-union, then he was there is so born in print:—Dr. Rieu's "new words" side by side with the old language of Dr. Stebbins.

HISTORY OF DANISH MISSION.

THIS is a pamphlet of 74 pages, and contains an interesting account of the progress and present condition of the church of the Brethren in Denmark. The facts are given for all that has been done!

It is the desire of the author of this tract to bestow the greater number of copies upon brother H. J. P. A. who has labored and is educated as well as other brethren. He trusts that the tract will be read by many persons in reading the work, and possibly will be for the good of our dear country. The author remembers that the Brethren in Denmark have been toiling and struggling with difficulties to build up the church, and that at this time has been very successful in evangelizing, laying schools, and other good things, and industry, and the Lord has been adding daily to the number of our families. It is a joy to the author to read this history, and to see the progress of the church. We know that the Brethren in our own times are doing the same things, and that they are all for Christ, and are doing the same things for the church for years. Thank the Lord for the little children of our dear country, and for the devotion of our Brethren, and for the copies, and what should we do? Let us go away. Price reduced to 20 cents, and we will have them go out at once. A. B. WESTERN BOOK EXCHANGE, Mt. Morris, Ill.

THE NEW REVISION

[Too many of those who oppose and condemn the revised translation are not sufficiently acquainted with the original to know where they differ. That the work has been done as demanded, and most of them may believe. I found in the authorized version, the following from the pen of Isaac Erret, in the Christian Standard (a journal in harmony with our views), at the Philadelphia in calling the attention of our readers to it. It deserves a careful reading.—J. H. M.]

WE live in what we are to judge the statement made last week, that the new revision, whatever its merits, is a great improvement on what is generally held the authorized version—although we think it would puzzle the best informed to state how or when it was "authorized" by public subscription, by the crowing forces of which it was generally adopted, or why it should be called a version which was, in fact, but a revision. We call attention to this, here, to numerous instances in which, either by the change in the meaning of English words, since the beginning of the seventeenth century, or by an improved Greek text, or by a better acquaintance with the manners and customs, there was a need of a revision to change the reading of some of our version.

Mat. ii. 23: "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by the prophets, that he should be called a Nazarene." "He shall be called a Nazarene" appears in a. v. (common version) as a quotation from one or more of the prophets, while the n. r. (new revision) represents it as merely the substance of what had been spoken by the prophets. The latter is undoubtedly correct.

Mat. v. 15: "Ye are the lamp for candle and the stand; for ye shall not hide the text, but let it shine before men and as unto houses of men, that they may bring the translation to the light."

In some cases where gibbans occurs, we have gibbans translated as Mat. v. 23, while gibbans in the Greek text, it is gibbans in the Greek text. We have thus an important distinction since in the translation as gibbans and gibbans are relieved of their burden and difficulty. The reader will be struck by the difference in the translation of gibbans in Mat. v. 23, "For ye shall not have any gibbans" (Mat. v. 23).

Mat. v. 24: "If ye will fight against these things, ye shall not have any gibbans" in the common version. It is to be regretted, however, that in our version, it has not been corrected throughout in this rendering.

Mat. v. 31: "Do not your righteousnesses," in place of "do not your sins," is a change fully justified by the best authorities, while "sins" in Mat. v. 2, 3, and prayer and fasting in Mat. v. 16, where it is a proper rendering, is a change in this case; a part of the rightness referred to.

Mat. v. 25: "Be not anxious for your life," etc., is a change demanded by the facts of that meaning to the word thought—a word which, at the time the common version first appeared, conveyed the meaning which we now attach to the word anxiety. The change will relieve many conscientious readers of a great perplexity.

Mat. vi. 14: "narrow gate" is a decided improvement on "strait gate." "Narrow is the gate and strait is the way," will be more readily understood than "strait is the gate and narrow is the way."

Mat. vi. 1: "Immediately for by and by, and the thought correctly; and in Luke x. 13, traffic, in place of occupy, is a decided improvement.

Mat. xxvii. 19. In place of "let him call his disciples," we have "make disciples of all nations;" and in place of "baptizing them in the name," we have "baptizing them into the name;" while in Mat. v. 24, the rendering of gibbans in the word work, preserves a distinction between discipling the rebellious and teaching the disciples, the lack of which in the common version causes great obscurity and confusion.

Mat. xii. 15: "Should he converted" gives place to "should turn again," and so in numerous passages—conveying an entirely different idea. Thus, with other corrections in the rendering of Acts in. 19, 20, relieves the reader from the false teaching of the common version. We place the rendering side by side that the difference may be seen:

COMMON VERSION.	REVISION.
Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord.	Repent ye therefore, and turn again, that your sins may be blotted out, so that there may come seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord and that he may send the Christ who has been appointed for you even Jesus, etc.
And he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, etc.

It is scarcely too much to say that these are different gospel, so marked and radical are the differences. The difference between converted and turning, and between repenting and obtaining forgiveness when the times of refreshing shall come, and repenting and obtaining forgiveness so that seasons of refreshing may come, is so great as to upset much of the theology which has hitherto found refuge in the shadows of the common version.

In I. Pet. i. 15, we read in the new revision, "be ye also holy in all manner of living;" where common version reads "in all manner of conversation;" and in 1st Cor. x. 15, "for ye are vain matter of life," in place of "your vain conversation." A similar important change is made in numerous passages where the same word occurs. The change in the meaning of the word conversation since the common version was made, causes it to convey a false idea to the modern reader, as it involves the difference between talk and action, between speech and conduct. In Phil. iii. 20, where a different Greek term is translated conversation, the new revision reads, "For our citizenship is in heaven"—certainly a very different idea.

We have proceed for present in I. Thes. iv. 15; living for quick in Heb. iv. 12; baggage for carriages in Acts xii. 15; judgment for damnation in I. Cor. xii. 29, in the same verse a much clearer expression of the apostle's thought is the rendering, "eateth and drinketh judgment to himself, if he discern not the body;" love for charity in I. Cor. xiii; "he that is both," in place of he that is ~~rich~~ in John xiii; "desire to be rich" for "will be rich" in I. Tim. vi. 9; "the love of money is a root of all kinds of evil," instead of "the love of money is the root of all evil," in I. Tim. vi. 10; profess a good profession is changed to "confess the good confession" in I. Tim. vi. 12; Passover takes the place of Easter in Acts xii. 4; "strain out a gnat" supplants strain at a gnat, in Matt. xxiii. 24. In Heb. xi. 13 we have a much improved rendering: "They so all did in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them and greeted them from afar," etc. The image, as Chrysostom long ago remarked, says Dr. Roberts, is that of sailors who, catching a glimpse of the shores they wish to reach, salute them from a distance.

THE NEW BIRTH.

Dear and much respected brother, "Please give through B. A. W. a full exposition of St. John 3: 5, especially when and how the spirit bath takes place."
J. H. MILLER.

THE verse referred to reads, "Jesus answered, verily, verily I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter the kingdom of God." To give the "modus operandi" complete, in reference to the birth of the spirit, is, in our opinion, a little more than any one can do. Christ refers to this mystery in the 8th verse as follows: "The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the spirit." Things exist as facts, yet we, in our finite minds, may not be able to comprehend the facts in all their relations. It is thus in the birth of the spirit. The best we can do is to approximate such mysteries as near as we can by the light afforded us. This we will attempt to do in the above query.

One of the difficulties connected with the above query is: Does the birth of the spirit depend on the birth of the water? Are they inseparable? Another of the difficulties is, Does the birth of the spirit depend wholly on being born of water? From the reading of the verse containing the query, we get the idea that the birth by water, precedes the birth of the spirit; and that both are united. Christ doubtless had in view the visible entrance into the church or kingdom of God the penitent believer, by baptism. But Christ does not mean that no work or preparation is necessary before baptism. This is referred to by John the Baptist, who reproved the Pharisees for demanding baptism, on the ground that they were the seed of Abraham, and told them to bring forth "fruits meet for repentance."

FIRST. Conviction of sin is the first thing necessary in the work of regeneration—"Awake thou that sleepest. Arise from the dead and Christ will give thee light." When the Pentecostians said, "Men and brethren, what must we do?" they were convicted of sin.

SECOND. Repentance is the next step in order. By repentance, we understand that we cease to do evil, and learn to do well. It is, of course, understood that faith or belief precedes the whole work, and as we advance onward, faith is becoming stronger,—rumpung us to a proper discharge of all our Christian duties. Having these prerequisites we are proper subjects for Christian baptism. Conception, naturally precedes birth, thus the Word of God is conceived in the heart of the penitent before baptism, but the "bringing forth," "being born of God," is only made visible through the rite of baptism. Baptism, or birth by water, is not only the visible entrance into the church. While it means this, it also means more. "Bringing forth," naturally not only means an addition of one to the human family, but it also means a more active life, and a final, full development of all the attributes of our organism. After birth of water, and of the spirit, we are delivered as servants from the bond-maid and become children to the free woman. The object born, is the spirit. We are renewed in the spirit of our minds. The water is simply an element used to aid in and declare this birth. To say that because we conceive the word in our hearts prior to baptism; therefore baptism is not necessary, as a means to the new birth would be violence to the truth of the Gospel. As well might we say, say, when a child is conceived it is not necessary to be born, in order to become a living, active member of society. One will say, "This is mysterious!" True! It is not the bread and wine of communion equally mysterious? Who can tell how the material affects the spiritual? It is by faith that we must receive baptism, as well as the emblems of communion. It is God's ordained means of grace. It is no more difficult for God to add his blessing in obedience to the rite of baptism, than to give sight to one by washing at the pool of Siloam.

As to the second difficulty, whether the birth of the spirit depends wholly on the birth by water, we would say that this difficulty has, to some extent, been met in trying to explain the first. But, to be more explicit, we answer positively, no. If the birth of the spirit depended wholly on the water, then conviction of sin, repentance, and faith would not be necessary as prerequisites to baptism, and all we needed would be to baptize with water, as all the virtue consisted in the water. This would be rank Catholicism—baptismal salvation—a water birth only.

The German text reads plainer than the English, as follows: "Aus dem Wasser und Geist; translated, "Out of the water and spirit." The original reads: Ex hvdoto, pneumatico. "Ex"—"out of," hvdoto—"water," Pneumatico—"spirit." Hence, "out of water, and out of the spirit."

It is rather difficult for any thing to be brought out of water unless it be first in the water. We make this observation to show that baptismal water is referred to. Some are inclined to deny this, and say that literal water has nothing to do in the new birth. Some will say that if this is true, then every one who is not baptized will be lost. This depends on circumstances. God is not a tyrant. If persons have the opportunity to be baptized, and will not, whose fault is it if they are lost? Surely their own. If on the other hand they would be willing to receive baptism, and cannot on account of some physical cause, like the thief on the cross, then God accepts their will in lieu of the deed, and saves them. With God all things are possible. The rule is, to repent, exercise faith, and be baptized, and the rule we should always preach and obey, and when we cannot obey the rule, then only the exception becomes valid; for all rules have their exceptions.

THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISMS.

Please explain Heb. 6: 1, 2. We read we should leave the principles of the doctrine of a Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different "Von der Taufe, von der Lehre." Here we have to do doctrine and baptism. How are we to recognize the same baptism?
J. H. MILLER.

EVIDENTLY "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," has reference to the first principle; for these once learned need not to be re-learned. However, this does not mean that we should forget the first principle. Principles of a divine character should never be forgotten; but those named by the apostle are not designed for Christian practice in the church. The word "baptisms" has reference to the Jewish washing, whether of cups, and vessels, or persons. Baptismus and baptisma are not precisely alike. The former occurs in H-b. 6: 2, and has in it the act, the mode and the thing taught, while the latter does not include so much. Baptismus is plural and has reference to the Jewish washings. Baptisma is singular, and refers to Christian baptism. See Eph. 4: 6. The German word Taufe, we think, is as near as it can be reached in that language, and does not take precedence over the Greek. Let us also bear in mind that it is the doctrine or teachings of baptisms that the Jews were required to leave and go on unto perfection.

WHO WAS THE MINISTER?

Will some one please explain the 20th verse of the 5th chapter of Luke, which reads as follows: "And he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down, and the eyes of all of them that were in the synagogues were fastened on him." Who was that minister he gave it to?
LEAH SAEFFER.

IN Acts 15: 21 we read that Moses had in old time them that preach him, being read in the synagogues every Sabbath day. Moses was especially instructed to teach the obligations of the law to the rising generations. Synagogues were built for that purpose, and on the Sabbath day the Jews would meet there to hear the law read and expounded. To do this, ministers or teachers were necessary. On the occasion referred to in the query, the Jews had met for that purpose; and inasmuch as Christ had been teaching in their synagogues, and his teaching had been very acceptable thus far; they gave him the book of the prophet E-saias, and when he had read a certain portion of it, he handed back the book again to the minister, who usually officiated in the capacity of teacher, being a minister of the laws of Moses.

From the Protestant.

Epistolarly.

To Brother Isiah Horner:—

Your kind epistle is at hand, and shall receive a prompt reply. I will answer you through the papers, as many more like you may be in the same situation, and by this means get information. In regard to your letter and draft sent two years ago, I have looked all the names over but can't find yours, so I have not received it. I suppose your letter was sent when so many brethren and sisters sent money in private letters to me for brother Hansen, the poor, and the mission, not knowing, I suppose, that to send money in common letters is unlawful in Denmark. The postal department found out the letters contained money, so I had to open all letters received, and those containing money were all confiscated. In order to avoid this I finally concluded to return all letters to M. M. Eshelman. I returned many, but only a few reached him. The rest were stolen. Perhaps yours was among them, I do not know. But if you sent it as a draft, you may call on your banker, and find out if he yet holds the money, or if it has been paid out in Denmark. If it has not been paid out to some one in my name, you may recover it. All those letters I received I answered, but do not remember yours. It is a comfort to us to receive kind letters from any brother or sister.

Now to your question: My wants are now attended to in a good way. I can say those brethren appointed to attend to our wants have always done all they could, but if the treasury is empty they cannot fill it themselves.

Yes, dear brother, peace and love reign so far supreme in the church here. We have too much to do to have time to bite one another. Our meetings are as warm as ever. Brother Hansen lives near Hjørning, and works in a tailor shop. He is very poor, but is getting along better at present. He is, spiritually, as usual, but as yet he has never been chosen to office in the church.

The church moves slowly but steadily along, enlarging its borders and increasing its numbers yearly. Opposition is strong at present, as we are at war with the clergy, but then we receive more attention from the common people, and that is just what we want. It is to the poor that the Gospel must be preached. They are more likely to embrace it.

You write about troubles in America, as if from disorderly members and officials. Dear brother, I know too much about it, but I am comforted by the thought that it is necessary that there be heresies among you, that the honest may be revealed. The church was never free from such and never will be. Among the twelve was a traitor. He, too, filled the places assigned him. Redemption and Christianity could not spare him. He was productive of good for the saints. All such members are of service to the church, and the Lord will turn their wickedness to good for the saints. These are facts and Gospel truths, hence none should be alarmed by approaching uproars and coming divisions. Let it come; not one, not even the least of God's children, will be hurt by it; no they will even be profited. The Brotherhood, no doubt, needs a cleansing out of corrupt matter. It will come when it is ripe. Follow the footsteps of Cora and Dothan, and finally receive a like reward. But, my dear brother, it is an important matter for us to be genuine—to be gold, not straw. If gold, we will re-again after the fire has past and be all the brighter; but if straw, it were better we were never born.

Dear brethren, let us examine ourselves and see how we stand. If we stand true to Jesus nothing shall move us, and none will be able to harm us. As for me, I am in for the old order in dress, and because it meets the requirements of the Gospel, and because it is as good as any dress in which I can look unlike the world. And if God's children, should be of one mind in all things else, why not in this? I hope to end my days under a broad-brimmed hat and a round straight coat, even if all else should abandon it. I have taken it up freely without compulsion, and promised myself to use it while here below. I love it as a church order, because I was a vain, fashionable Christian once, and know 'twice and experience what fiery leads to. And I know that if the church ceases to work for it in love, before one year is past, we will be driving at a fearful rate into the swamp of folly and worldliness. The churches here are much of the same opinion. But God be praised, we never yet needed to cut any cff for pride, nor ever needed to preach an sermon on Jashon. We try to go by the rule, "Let the church do her own work." Our station is to be a servant for all. If a preacher will do this he will be loved by all, and never be called a tyrant. If he goes beyond that, he will some day regret it. But I am happy to know that America abounds with faithful members. I am happy to know that the Lord will carry out their wars. As you write holiness is what is needed, this need is filled by knowing our wants. Nor will it suffice to tell one another about faults and demand dues from one another, like the unmerciful servant.

We love him because he first loved us. Love is the root of holiness. Therefore, dear brother, look steadily into God's love for you; drink deep daily of the fountain filled with the blood of the Lamb; drink until you are full, and eagerly ask the Lord, "What shall I do?" until the Divine answer sounds as sweet music in your ears, "If you love me keep my commandments." May God bless you and all his children to do so. Amen. Pray for us.

Yours in love,

C. Horner.

Frederickshaven, Denmark, May 17, 1881.

Refreshing—1 Cor. 16, 18.

To M. M. Eshelman:—

Dear brother in the Lord: By this I mean much more than Christian courtesy requires towards all of the household of faith. Personally unknown and yet well known. Since I read your "Vital Piety" your inner man seems to be no stranger to me, so much so that I cannot help feeling a deeper love for you than we owe to every member of the body. I cherish a love to you that lives and moves in a higher and purer atmosphere than is dwelt in by many professed brethren. Your humble honest confession of wrong done in a moment of weakness, has endeared you to us all here. O that we would be willing to cleanse our sins, then the blood of Jesus would cleanse us from all sin. We know one congregation rent and torn asunder, love almost extinct, because there is such a reluctance to confess the wrong. When we are overtaken in a fault, let us get down on our knees in the dust, humbly ourselves before God, and he will exalt us in due season. We love to read what you say and appreciate your self denying labors of love. When you speak of racking mental toil and anxiety, we know you speak the truth. But after all you would not exchange places with the brother who has wealth, ease and absence of care and no cross to endure. Rest will come by aid of labor will end and your crown will be no less bright, your song of triumph no less sweet, its strains no less divine, no less redolent with the fragrance of eternal love, because you have sweated and toiled and watched in the vineyard. There is a glorious crowning, golden harp strings, the victor's palm—

Thou'nd and strung for endless years,
And formed by power divine
To sound in God the Father's ours
No other name but thine.

The thrilling words, "Well done," from the returning King will repay you a thousandfold for all your sufferings here. The most exalted imagination cannot realize the joy of seeing him as he is; add to this beautiful vision of the King in his beauty, the joy of seeing in real substantial corporeal form, shining as the sun in the Father's kingdom, the sufferers for the Gospel's sake in all ages, who have given all for Christ. In this society of spiritually perfected men you will never be pained, annoyed, or grieved with ease and flesh-loving professors. When the net is drawn at the end of the sixteen or age, the bad we cast away. What a multitude of bad fish have passed their way into the net since it was first cast into the sea of the nations. But when the good will be gathered into vessels, the Bride will be married to the Lamb, and not one of the flesh-loving, wealth-loving ease-seeking professors will compose the King's daughter, all glorious within; not one of the flesh crucified, suffering saints will be forgotten when the day of espousals comes. When we suffer toil and are ready to faint beneath the cross, then as the angel strengthened the suffering Man of Griefs condemned for us, as the exceeding precious promises breathe strength into our souls, like the sweet odors from the spicy groves of "Araby the blest" wafted to those who sail in Indian seas. Sweet consolation assurance, blessed hope, joy in the Holy Spirit are wafted to us across the gulf of time from the crystal sea, the Jasper throne.

The amen, the alleluia, the voice of the redeemed multitude, as the voice of many waters, of mighty thunderings, all saying, "The Lord God Omnipotent reigns." The gladness, the joy, the marriage of the Lamb, the fine linen clean and white, garments of wrought gold, the King's presence, these are all true sayings of God. No poetic dream of rapt imagination, but a faint picture of what it shall be to be there.

Then look again at the nature of your work. A co-worker with God in reconciling the world unto himself; the works of art, genius and the most brilliant achievements of the loftiest intellect must in time be as though they were not, but a soul converted from the error of his way is saved from death, and the remembrance of the instrumentality will never pass away. You labor with God to reconcile all things to himself, and to bring heaven and earth into union. You seek to eliminate evil, and to make good triumph you have tasted the divine love; it has conquered the natural enmity of your heart, and under its all-controlling power you labor to save those for whom the Prince of Glory died. Believing that Jesus died for all, you find your work to be a mission of love. You can tell sinners, "Was ever love like his?" With one hand you point to the cross and preach the Lamb for sinners slain; with the other hand you point to the crown of life, the immortality won by the great Life Giver as the inheritance of all who renounce the flesh, the world, its friendship and all that is in it. Soon he will appear and dry our tears, and in full glory shine and break the cruel chains of death.

To be one with Christ here is to share his love, his sympathy, to fill up what is behind the afflictions of Christ in your flesh for the body's sake, the church. Jesus died to restore the human family to the love of God, to bring fallen man again within the embrace of infinite love. With this God inspired power of the Gospel you can toil on and hope to the end. Like the little child, you may stumble and hurt yourself, but you are held up by a Father's hand, and nothing can separate you from his love, so long as you abide in Jesus' love. Watch with Jesus the little hour, contend for the gospel a little longer, endure the storm a little longer; the morning comes, and then the eternal sunshine of our Father's home.

JAS. EVANS.

From C. H. Balsbaugh.—Sinners do not imagine that their very sin declares their divine origin and the grandeur of their immortality. But so it is—sin would not be sin were not the responsibility and eternity of God in us. The greatest sin that man can commit has at root a Divine want and a Divine element. Jesus had never been crucified would not man be great enough to need such a propitiation, and mean enough to procure it. Before Incarnate Deity can become an offering for man, we must be like enough to God to justify it, and sinful enough to compass His crucifixion. It is because the world is too little to fill the great void in the soul caused by the loss of God, that the sinner runs hither and thither for enjoyment, and finds nothing but emptiness and ashes. The soul that embraces God is satisfied, and needs not room abroad for company or comfort. To be God possessed is salvation; and perfect peace and rest in God makes all the world ours. The sinner has a blood washed, Heaven endorsed title-deed to all the estate of Jehovah. Matt 5:3, Rom. 8:17, 1 Cor. 3:21, 22, 23, Rev. 21:7. For this we were created; its forfeiture is sin, and eternal bankruptcy is hell.

Our life must be like money current with the merchant, every penny, the least coin of word or act, must bear the image and superscription of Jesus. Gal. 2:20, and Philpp. 1:21 must become living, loving, ecstatic realities. To sin is to fill the golden cup of immortality being from the river of hell. We do as we list, because the grandeur and majesty and sovereignty of infinite will in us. Because we are gods in constitution, we want to be gods in independence. This turns angels into devils, and men into fit companions of the fallen, hell-chained principalities. Enoch walked with God. This is the all of Heaven, here and hereafter. Sin means walking with the devil, and the lake of fire is the necessary outcome of sin. That burning, torseing, tormenting Gehenna is carried in every sinner's bosom. Every sin adds a coal, but the River of life can flood it all, and quench every hell on earth.

From John Zook.—Permit me to say through your columns to the readers of your paper something about our Love-feast. It commenced on the 7th at 2 o'clock, and on the 8th had preaching at 9 A. M. and 7 P. M. We can say with ease of old that "it was good for us to be there," for we do think and feel that it was a Feast indeed, for we felt that Jesus was there, because the brethren held forth the Eternal Truth in its simplicity and with such power that it opened the fountains of tears of many in the congregation,—that saints were made to rejoice and sinners, we believe to tremble and almost cry out, "What must I do to be saved?" Therefore we ask all the brethren and sisters everywhere to rejoice with us, and pray for us so that we may hold out faithful, and in the end obtain that crown which was delivered unto the saints, is the prayer of your servant. Our ministers present were Daniel Longmacker, J. P. Llewellyn, from Adams Co., Pa., and Daniel and Adam Shroyer of Sugar Valley, Clinton Co., Pa., and on the second day were enforced by brother Charles Royer, of Union Co., Pa. We hope and pray that they may be honorably rewarded for their labors while with us. As the weather was somewhat wet and rainy, the attendance was not large; but we had very good order.—Leeds Creek Church, Pa.

From Geo W. Gish.—Our Love feast is past, and we may say we had a feast, indeed,—one no doubt to be long remembered by the dear brethren and sisters of the Panther Creek church; and we bless God that we had reason to go down to the waterside where prayer was wont to be made; then followed the baptism of two young sisters who made up their minds to walk with the people of God. May the blessings of God be with them, that they may hold out faithful with all the children of God, is my prayer. What joy there is on such occasions among the saints. The strange brethren that were with us were brother E. Helmar, C. Holsinger, K. Heckman, and John Y. Snavely, which did the preaching, and thank God it was well done. Another reason that we could rejoice was, one of our long-absent sisters, who was here before the brethren ever preached in this county, was present to commune with those she loved, namely, sister Sally Moore (mother of J. H. Moore) who, with five other members, was the cause of calling the Brethren here to preach nearly thirty years ago, when we united with that little band to walk in newness of life. I just wished we could have our dear child en, some of whom are on the Pacific coast, some elsewhere, at the Communion meeting, to join with us, and to sit under the sound of the dear brethren that dealt out the word to us with power. We were so sorry that brother E. Helmar could not remain with us any longer, it being the first time he ever was with us; and not only the members regretted to see him leave, but the Methodists and Baptists said, "Why did he not stay longer, for we so much like his way of dealing out the Word?" I must stop, lest I become wearisome. Will say to the dear brethren, come again.—Romoke, Ill.

From C. Lesh.—Brother P. R. Wrightman, of Kansas, stopped with us on his return from Annual Meeting, and preached three sermons in the Lutheran church for the people of Flora. The house was crowded; had good attention, good preaching, and one addition. To God we give the honor and glory, thanking our brother for his love to us, and say to him, come again.—Flora, Carroll Co., Ind.

From D. E. Brubaker.—Our Sunday-school is largely attended, with much interest. Work on our meeting-house is being pushed along nicely now. Last Saturday at our quarterly council meeting, two precious souls were added to the fold of Christ, by baptism. Have a very fine growing season so far.—Peoria City, Iowa.

From Jacob Hilderbrand.—Four more were baptized—two young persons on Sunday previous to our Communion. On June 15th, the day of our Communion in the evening before services, an aged lady in her eightieth year went down into the water and was baptized. Another aged person the next morning could not leave the place of meeting until she too was baptized. Our district, at present, numbers three hundred and fifty-four members. One half of the people staid out doors for want of room. Brother Daniel Shively from Millford, Ind., officiated in the Communion services. A number of ministers were present, whom we feel to remember in our prayers for their services of love in the cause of our once crucified Lord and Savior. Our church seems well pleased with the result of our last Annual Meeting, and feels to thank God. Take courage and go on, remembering the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church. God bless the faithful standards of our beloved Brotherhood. May they live long to guide the church by the hand of God.—Walterton, Ind.

When that illustrious man, Chief Justice Jay, was dying, he was asked if he had any farewell address to leave his children. He replied, "They have the Bible."

Health and Temperance.

HOW I GOT SICK.

ABOUT eight miles north-west of our village you will find as nice and productive a farm as usually seen in this country. Its fences, buildings, etc. in good repair, as that of a systematic farmer. It was there I was born and brought up. Was acquainted with farm life, as I took an active part in the practical portion of the business incidental to the occupation of the farmer. Laboring hard, and generally healthy, food of all kinds were relished, of which our table was always blessed with a plenty, and being comparatively ignorant of the laws governing life and health, I ate indiscriminately, and of the richest foods. About fourteen years ago I moved to town and went into business. My habits were now somewhat changed, being sedentary, yet so far as my dietaries were concerned, there was no material change. Pork with all its greasiness or fattiness and attendant (?) sweetness was a principal dish. Pepper, spices, and other condiments were ever welcomed, as you know they keep up a burning sensation in the stomach, ever reminding one of what he ate a meal before. Hot teas or coffees were also among the indispensables. This, in connection with the irregularity of eating, was enough to make a person begin to inquire whether his health was on the wane or ascending. Fruits, the great blessings of heaven scarcely ever found their way on the table save in delicious (?) preserves. I thought apples, pears, peaches, grapes, etc. were only to be eaten between meals. I thus lived as I thought, and ate accordingly. After eating a meal and about the time the food was digested and the stomach ready to fold up and go to sleep, some fruit would not be amiss, and of course was eaten. Figs or nuts were sought and on their reason, anything palatable. By this indigestion, eating all hours, my stomach had to do more work than naturally than the body. Is it any wonder it became tired and finally wore out?

One day I was to be fed to the porkers and when I had cut them. Wheat must be ground fine enough to kill the life of it, and then be allowed to make it lively, which of course must be encouraging to health.

That evening had little attention as to what I ate and how I ate, my health gave way, and under the pressure of business, I felt the load and the consequence of those habits of eating and food on the body gave way, the mind disturbed and it seemed a burden. I soon became morose, gloomy, and in its train many other ailments followed which rendered life miserable.

After some of thirty-four I consulted a physician who put me on the road to health. Today I regret more than if a man of thirty-eight and of good health and feel myself a new creature from my former mode of living, and affirm that health is the right way of living and observing strictly the rules governing life and health. Next how I got well. D.

THE MOMENT OF PERIL.

ALDERGYMAN'S son, one Saturday afternoon last Winter, was amusing himself with his velocipede. He was carelessly dashing along at full speed, intending to cross the railway track, when a train came thundering over the road. There was but one course for him to pursue. He could not stop the impetus of his vehicle; to attempt it would be certain death. So he dashed across within reaching distance of the engine. The slightest jolt of his wheel, a puff in his way, a little unsteadiness of his own, and his doom was sealed. Do you suppose any sum of money would induce him again to run such a risk?

A boy was sliding down hill, and in the excitement and enjoyment of the sport, he forgot to watch for danger. His path ran over the railroad track, and as he was almost upon it, he saw a slowly-moving freight train passing along. To stop was impossible, and he dashed on, just passing between two heavy laden cars. The slow rate of motion at which they were moving was all that saved him. But he will never go down that hill so recklessly again. It will serve as a warning to other boys also, who witnessed his peril.

What a pity that they will not take warning by the great danger: the sadler fate, of so many men and boys about them. I see lads every day in this town standing on the steps of the billiard saloon and the tobacconist's shop, who are drawing near to a more fearful doom than either of these lads. They are suffering themselves to be drawn into a maelstrom, from which there will be no retreat. They are preparing for a plunge into a fearful Gulf of intemperance, where body and soul will both be swallowed up. Look over into this Gulf. Listen to the fearful cries that come up, and can you, dare you, risk 'the plunge'? The moment of deepest peril for you, is the one when you take up your first glass. (B)

COURTESY.

COURTESY is not courtliness, for courtliness carries the idea of mere mannerism, and courtesy carries the idea of good feeling. Courtliness is a manner put on—is something external, the way of making a bow, of taking a step, of carrying the hand, and the gentle posture of the body, while courtesy is of the heart, and springs from real kindness of soul, seen in tenderness, sympathy and love. (B)

MR. GOUGH IN A TIGHT PLACE.

IN relating his experience in public speaking, John B. Gough, after facing over eight thousand audiences, acknowledges, that on one occasion and one only, he encountered an embarrassment which he could not overcome—And as he tells on himself, we reprint the story for the benefit of others who may be similarly circumstanced:

I was engaged to address a large number of children in the afternoon, the meeting to be held on the lawn back of the Baptist church in Providence, R. I. In the forenoon a friend met me and said,—

"I have some first-rate cigars. Will you have a few?"

"No, I thank you."

"Do take half a dozen."

"I have nowhere to put them."

"You can put half a dozen in your pocket."

I wore a cap in those days, and I put the cigars into it, and at the appointed time I went to the meeting. I ascended the platform and faced an audience of more than two thousand children. As it was out of doors, I kept my cap on for fear of taking cold, and I forgot all about the cigars. Toward the close of my speech I became more in earnest, and after warning the boys against bad company, bad habits and the saloons, I said,—

"Now, boys, let us give three rousing cheers for temperance and for cold water. Now, then, three cheers. Hurrah!"

And I taking off my cap I waved it most vigorously, when—away went the cigars right into the midst of the audience.

The remaining cheers were very faint, and were nearly drowned in the laughter of the crowd. I was mortified and ashamed, and should have been relieved could I have sunk through the platform out of sight. My feelings were still more aggravated by a boy coming up to the steps of the platform with one of those dreadful cigars, saying, "Here's one of your cigars, Mr. Gough."

Satan's efforts at rebuking sin were never very highly appreciated, and men half filled with tobacco, do not make the most effective temperance speeches.

New York City has nearly 4,000 dram-shops kept by women, of whom 1,104 are German and 2,549 are Irish; and one says it is said is a native American.

Dr. Dio Lewis has looked up the matter and finds that no tobacco-using student has graduated at the head of his class in Harvard College for the last half century.

An edict has just been published in Unterballen, a town in one of the Swiss cantons, forbidding any person under 15 years of age to smoke either in public or private.

The wife of a well-known Chicago artist has brought a suit against a saloon keeper for $25,000 damages for ruining her husband's professional prospects, and in joining his health, by supplying him with whisky.

SECRETARY Lincoln inherits some of his father's good sense, if we judge from his order forbidding the use of tobacco by the army cadets of West Point. The cadets at the Naval Academy at Annapolis have received a similar order.

The whole science of hygiene may be included in the one word CLEANLINESS. The removal of refuse of all kinds, solid, liquid and gaseous, is embraced within it, and pure air and water become a necessary result of the operation. It is a trite saying, "Nature abhors a vacuum." or more correctly it may be said, Nature always supplants herself with dust, we admit air and generally far purer air and water, to take their places.

FRITZ.—In Diler, Jefferson Co., Neb., in the bounds of the Beatrice church, May 25, 1881, sister Minerva, wife of Bro. John Fritz, aged 57 years, 7 months and 20 days.

Our dear sister came here with her husband from Keokuk Co., Iowa. She was but a short time with us, yet was loved and respected by all who knew her. She was sick only one week, and that was a week of suffering, but she bore it patiently. She wanted to see them but could not see all, as one was in Leadville, Col., two girls in Iowa and one here. Three have not yet made peace with their God as they should.

The last hour she was unconscious of all around her. She was continually engaged in prayer to God for all, and so kept on, until she expired without a struggle or a groan.

This sad and unexpected occurrence cast a gloom over the entire community, which, we hope will not pass away without leaving traces of God's mysterious working for the good of mankind and the glory of his name. She was a good wife and a kind mother, and we hope our loss will be her eternal gain. Funeral services by Bro. Wm. Bratt, from Rev. 14: 18. ELLEN ZOOK.

IN MEMORIAM.

In the Knob Creek church, Washington Co., Tenn., on the 7th of May, 1881, Elder Austin Hylton. He died of old age, being 83 years, 1 month and 10 days old.

He was confined to his home for upwards of two years, and to his bed, utterly helpless, for fifteen months. He bore his confinement with patience, though he frequently expressed a desire to go to rest, wondering why others, who were young and useful, were called away and he left.

Father Hylton lived a consistent member of the church of the Brethren for 55 years. Two or three years after uniting with the church, he was chosen to the eldership, but was unwilling to be ordained unless Bro. Christy Bowman was also ordained, which the church did, he having the necessary qualifications.

He was the father of ten children, six of whom are now living and all are members of the church but one. At his death he had 40 grand-children and 24 great grand-children.

The funeral attendance was very large, and the occasion was improved by brethren Joseph Bowman and Christian Diehl, from Rev. 29: 12.

Bro. Bowman, in his remarks, put the usual interrogation: "Who will he next?" But alas! how early and unexpected the call came. Within five minutes of two weeks after the death of Hylton, the monster, death, visited the same bereft and gasped from the tomb of a pious family, a noble boy—George E., son of Eul. Geo. C. and Anna Bowman, and a grand-son of father Hylton.

On the evening of Thursday, May 12th, George was riding on a saw stock conveyed on a wagon, when suddenly the wagon was upset, and in some unknown manner his left leg was broken below the knee, and the ankle crushed. The wound was so severe that amputation was necessary. This was performed on Monday following, by the most skillful physicians in reach, but he only survived until Saturday, the 21st.

George was in his tenth year since last New Year's day. He was remarkably quiet, self, and innocent in disposition. Was never known to have an ill feeling towards any one but was a single instance, which he seemed to regret with the feeling of one of mature age. He loved his books, his play-mates and the Good Man, as he was accustomed to say.

He bore his entire suffering with indomitable courage. He seemed unwilling to have his leg taken off, but when his father told him that his that it was the only chance, he readily consented, and bore it without a single murmur. He frequently spoke of death, and just a little while before it came, his father asked him if he was afraid to die. "No, I am glad to die," was the prompt reply. He was conscious to the last and spoke within five minutes of death.

If our Heavenly Father uses means outside of his Word to draw his creatures to him, surely Georgia is performing his mission, for he lives in the hearts of his playmates, who, in order to be good, will emulate his example. He made special request of several of his brothers to be good and to let him there. Long will those who were more intimately acquainted with him, brood in doleful lovingness on the life, unfortunate death, but now enraptured soul of George Bowman.

He left behind a father and mother, seven brothers and a sister to mourn his loss. T. C. G.

THROUGH an attempt to light a lamp with kerosene, Mrs. Egler, of Pittsburgh, was fatally injured, her husband rendered insane, and her little daughter burned to death. Seven frame buildings were consumed, and a fireman was badly scorchered.

The boiler of an Illinois Central engine exploded when near Monroe, Ill. The bell was found in the track, of one two hundred and fifty feet from the engine, and an ornamental brass bell was found one mile away. Three men were on the engine, but no one was badly hurt.

A NEW source of water supply in the vast desert mountain range of California and Arizona is worthy of note. No rain falls over a wide area. It is covered with cactus plants of every variety, and they are juicy. Millions of land tortoises feed on these plants and Indians make soup of them. Inside of each is an anatomical tank, that holds about a pint of water. Many are cut open to get at this tank. The water is palatable. In this way meat and drink are supplied, and the dry cactus makes excellent fuel. The law of compensation is here forcibly illustrated.

As a proof that the right kind of education does not "put up" we remark that one of the students, after delivering his graduating oration in the morning, was in the afternoon found in our press-room, with hat, coat and vest off, turning the press. We told him that was practical education.

OFFICIAL statistics show that in Italy only one out of five of the men know how to read, and of the women and girls only one out of eight. A much less proportion know how to write. Yet Italy is the home of the oldest Christian civilization, but it is where Rome has held the influence, for those many years.

LEWIS A. EDWARDS, of Magnolia, Washington Co., Arkansas, writes that Miss Lavinia Jones, of the Round Mountain S. S., committed to memory, in one week, the whole book of Mark, consisting of 673 verses, and reported the same in open school. He wants to know if this feat of memory has ever been equalled.

RECENTLY, while on a visit to Lena, Ill., we called at the Star office to see Mr. Lewis, who, at one time lived in Leamark and edited the Carroll County Gazette. We were pleased to find him in new quarters and his room neat, clean and orderly. Why should a printing-office not be tidy and beautiful? Editors and compositors are hard workers, and deserve pleasant rooms in which to labor.

Bro. H. C. Lucas, of Macon, Ill., is engaged in teaching short-hand. This is a good work, and he who is apt in this kind of labor, is useful to his fellow-men. By sending six cents to him, you will receive a large six-teen-page paper, containing short-hand alphabet and samples of writing, together with much other useful information. We shall be pleased to learn that our brother is doing good by teaching photography.

UNITY OF LIFE.

Psalms 39: 4.

BY ALICE M. TROSTLE.

Oh Lord, make me to know mine end,

The measure of my days;

That I may know how frail I am,

Teach me to know thy ways.

Oh Lord, teach me how short life is—

How sure death comes to all;

Teach me to live a holy life:

Prepare me for thy call.

Help me to feel how vain life is;

How soon we pass away;

That life is but a vapor here,

Then vanishes away.

Then hear my prayer, oh Lord;

Give ear unto my cry.

Teach me the wisdom of thy ways;

In peace then let me die.

Then let me fly on wings of love,

Up to that great white throne;

There I may bow at Jesus' feet,

There find a heavenly home.

For the Brethren at Work.

"GOING HOME."

BY M. D. HENRICKS.

I'm a poor way-faring stranger

Travelling through this world of woe.

There's no sickness, toil or danger,

In that bright world to which I go.

I'm going there to see my father;

I'm going there no more to roam;

I'm just going over Jordan;

I'm just going over home.

I know dark clouds will hover round me;

I know the way is rough and steep,

Yet beautiful fields lie just before me,

Where God's redeemed their vigils keep.

I'm going there to see my mother;

She said she'd meet me when I come.

I'm just going over Jordan;

I'm just going over home.

I'll soon be free from every trial;

My body borne to the church-yard;

I'll drop the cross of self-denial,

And enter on my great reward.

I'm going there to see my brethren

Who've gone before me one by one.

I'm just going over Jordan;

I'm just going over home.

I want to wear a crown of glory,

When I get home to that good land.

I want to sing redemption's story,

In concert with that heavenly band.

I'm going there to see my children;

I know they're near my Father's throne.

I'm just going over Jordan;

I'm just going over home.

Learn to rebuke and check the distracting tongue by showing that you do not listen to it with pleasure.

FIRST NIGHT AT SEA AND VOYAGE TO RIO.

BY ADDISON HARRER.

MANY years ago there was built in Philadelphia a ship of war, named the Vandalia. A crew was shipped for a voyage of three years. This is something exciting in the idea, over the vast ocean. My young mind was captivated, and I became one of her crew. With what anxiety did I wait for the anchor to be raised and for the ship to sail on her voyage! At last the well come time arrived. The orders were given to weigh anchor; the pilot on board, soon her white sails were spread to a top gallant breeze. She moved off as a thing of life. How majestically she plowed the Delaware! It was her first voyage. The captain watched her as she smoothly glided along, and so did the crew—all were anxious to know how fast she could sail. Orders were given to cast the log, that is, to measure how fast she is sailing. "Eleven miles," was the answer. You could see the countenances of the crew lightening as the sentiment went the rounds: "She is a noble craft." Orders were given to set the royals and weather studding-sails. The order was obeyed. "Cast the log," commands the captain. The order is obeyed. "How fast is she going?" "Thirteen and a half miles." "Three cheers for our noble ship," was responded with a hearty good will by captain and crew.

Soon we passed outside of Cape May. Our pilot handed the speaking trumpet to Captain Galliher, as noble a seaman as ever sailed the vast ocean. Our ship heading to South America, the pilot in his boat to Cape May, and many eyes took a last longing gaze on the land as it passed from their vision. To-day as I write, it is as fresh in my memory as in days of yore. Ere long the wind increased into a gale, the waves dashing against the side of the vessel, and night was approaching, the wind increasing, the crew engaged in making the ship snug for the storm. Ah the night that followed will ever be remembered by me as long as memory lasts. I soon became sea-sick, like unto death.

The winds whistling and moaning through the rigging, the ship was tossed to and fro; as she plowed the vast deep, the rolling waves dashed over the side of the ship. Thinking I would be safe, I was disappointed, for soon a heavy wave dashed over the side of the vessel, and washed me from under the gun to the lee side of the ship. Thus I passed the first night at sea. During the night the wind calmed, the day dawned, the sun arose as if from the great deep. I gazed with intense anxiety toward the land of my birth. I thought of the many miles between my fond parents and me: are they offering up a prayer for their prodigal son—"O where is he drifting to? Will he sink in the deep ocean? or be dashed on some coral reef? or be stranded upon some lone shore? God only knows, whose eye penetrates the vastness of his creation."

During the day all hands were called aft, for the purpose of knowing how many of the crew were willing to stop the allowance of ardent spirits allowed by the government, or take one dollar and eighty cents a month in its stead. Here was a crisis, it seems to me my future for weal or woe depended on my choice. I firmly said, stop my liquor. The purser's name was Purdy. I will remember the questions asked by him:

"Is this your first voyage?"

My answer was "Yes, sir."

"You may be saved; stand by that resolution."

"I will, sir."

"Where are you from?"

"Virginia."

"Are your father and mother living?"

"They are."

"Do they know where you are?"

"No, sir."

As the tears rose in his eyes, he remarked, "How sad they must be." He proved my friend ever after. And now my dear reader, a word to you. I see relating scenes as they actually transpired. How often have I weighed and pondered in my mind the words of Mr. Purdy:—"You may be saved."

It seemed scarcely possible, looking at my surroundings, that I could possibly pass through the storm and not sink to rise no more. The words often loomed up in my mind: "You may be saved," and yet what a journey was before me, and is still before me. How many coral reefs, how many breakers, how many quick sands yet to encounter, and yet not eternally saved! My mind soared aloft; faith bids me press onward. Hope, the offspring of faith, says you will moor ship ere long, beyond the beautiful river in the land of the blessed. But to my narrative. I was in a new position of life; I was to learn the duties of a sailor. I was curious to learn the art of navigation. How often would I watch the man at the helm, guided by the compass giving direction to the ship as she dashed through the great deep to her port of destination. I wondered, how is all this! How is it! The needle in that compass always pointed north, and man out on this great expanse of water can steer by that compass and have full confidence in reaching his port of destination. Mystery! Mystery! And so it rested for the time, but not to rest forever; these thoughts were to return again. I heard the officers talking about the ships making leeway. I was anxious to know what leeway meant, and I learned the fact: currents striking against the weather side of the ship would drift the ship away to leeward, and although the head of the ship might be looking due north, yet if no calculations were made for leeway, and the head of the ship so altered as to meet the drifting to leeward, they know very well they could not expect to land safely in the destined harbor.

Again at 12 o'clock I saw one of the officers taking an instrument called a quadrant. I saw him looking in the instrument, and I wondered what this meant. He was pointing it towards the sun. The officer's name was Farrigut, afterwards Admiral (or Commodore Farrigut.) He has passed from this earth to the spirit land. Peace be to his ashes; for he was a noble man. I was anxious to know what he was doing. I inquired, "Will you be so kind as to tell me why you are pointing that instrument toward the sun?" He answered, very pleasantly, "To know where we are." "And can you tell by looking in that instrument where we are, away out here entirely out of sight of land?" The answer was, "Certainly." It was all mystery to me. Today as I write, and as age has advanced, and experience with it, I can see Admiral Farrigut pointing the quadrant to the sun, and ascertaining on what part of the ocean the ship was sailing, and how far from land. I want a solution of this problem. Why can this be done? The scientists tell me "that is very easy. It is a mere question of calculation." I admit that, but that does not solve the problem. Suppose the sun is behind time; how then? "Oh that would alter the case. I would be left to mere conjecture." Then you are relying upon the certainty of no variation in the sun. "Yes." Well who directs the sun? "Nature and nature's laws," (says the scientist.) But can there be a law without a lawgiver. That seems reasonable. "There cannot," answers the scientist. I will return to my voyage from Cape May to the harbor in Rio Janeiro in South America. I shall ever remember the time, which has made an indelible impression on my mind.

The wind was blowing from the north-west. Our ship was heading her course. The crew was engaged in the various pastimes common on board of a ship when sailing under a strong breeze. The officers of the deck were standing on an after gun, looking to the windward, all seemed well; no danger apprehended. The captain of the ship came from the cabin taking a survey of the surroundings; his experienced eye saw danger, and seizing the speaking trumpet from the officer, the orders went forth and aft, "All hands reef top sails. Here was a sudden change. What can all this mean? Has the captain gone crazy? But orders must be obeyed. The ship was soon in a condition to meet the storm that was rapidly approaching. The captain's practiced eye saw a small cloud moving with great velocity from the windward, and knew there was no time to be lost. The storm was terrible; but the good old ship rose upon the top of the waves running mountain high, and sank and rose again. Braving the tempest, and saving the crew from a watery grave, the captain as soon as the storm had abated, handed the trumpet to the officer, remarking, "Keep a good lookout to the windward." I have often thought of the advice of the experienced mariner, he who had sailed over the great ocean time and again, whose experience had made him master of his profession. I can at this time see him in my memory handing the trumpet to the Lieutenant, saying, "Keep a good lookout to the windward."

My dear reader, we are sailing on the vast ocean of time, tempest-tossed and tempest-driven. The sky may be bright. We may be gliding along smoothly—all may seem well, but how easily we may be deceived; how many temptations surround us! In a moment our bright hopes may be turned to gloom and darkness. Let us ever remember the experienced sailor's advice: "Keep a good lookout to the windward."

We were approaching the equinoctial line. The question went the rounds: "Will we have Neptune to come on board when we get under the line?" The long-expected time came; it was a beautiful morning, the sun was shining brilliantly, the sea, smooth with scarcely a ripple upon the surface; the ship moving slowly when the orders were given to lay the ship to, when a boat was lowered and Neptune with his trident got into the boat and was rowed ahead of the ship. Neptune was an old sailor who had often crossed the line, and braved many a storm. The captain stood on the bow of the ship. The ship's bell was tolling, the crew, all expectation and excitement, waiting the coming of Neptune, the boat is slowly approaching. Presently a voice comes rolling over the smooth sea: "What ship is that?" The captain answers: "U. S. ship — Vandalia." "Where bound?" "To Rio." "Have you on board any one that has never crossed the line?" "Yes." "Come on board." Neptune comes up the side of the ship. These to be initiated are arranged in line. The ceremony of shaving, etc. gone through with, all hands are called to splice the main brace, the yards are braced around, and the ship moves on towards the port of her destination.

Nothing of importance occurred as our noble ship pursued her course toward Cape Frio. It was early in the morning as the lookout from the mast head proclaimed, "Land!" O all was excitement; for my part I longed to see the port of Rio. I had heard so much about this harbor, — of the oranges, pine-apples, etc., and I was expectant. The captain asked the lookout, where? "Right ahead." "What does it look like?" "A high mountain, rounded up like a sugar loaf." This is the entrance into the harbor of Rio. Our ship was heading right into the harbor. St. Lawrence was sailing master. Capt. Gallier complimented the Lieutenant very highly as a navigator. I wondered then: How can this be seventy-two days from land to land, having traversed the vast ocean by storm and tempest to leeward? But so nicely was the ship navigated gated her course had not to be altered, but passes in between the forts at the entrance of the harbor, and moors ship in safety.

Dear reader, we are on our journey to the spirit land; we must soon anchor in some harbor: we can't stay here. We have an experienced navigator that has gone before us. He has left us the Gospel compass. By that we must steer, as we are sailing over the ocean of time; and when drifting to leeward, let us be sure to rectify our course before it is too late, so that when the angel of death casts in his sickle we can see by faith the beautiful land of the blessed.

WHAT IS CHRISTIANITY?

BY G. H. BALSBAUGH.

THE question of questions. The words Christ, and Jesus, and Christian, are not found in the Old Testament. Yet all these are there in substance. Radically there is no difference between the law and the Gospel. The law fulfilled by Christ is to us Gospel—glad tidings. The law is Christ prefigured, the Gospel in the bud. The law saved nobody, and yet souls were saved. It was the vestibule that leads into the temple. It brought salvation because it held in germ the perfect revelation of God in the flesh. We are all saved by law, even the law that was written in stones, washings and sacrifices, blood of bulls and goats. Not a tittle or jot is abrogated, although in its primitive form it is wholly "done away." It all foreshadowed Christ, and in Christ is all consummated and perpetuated, and what is now Gospel is the righteousness of the law stored in a Person who made it imputable to all who believe. Without the righteousness of Christ we perish, and he has no righteousness to impute save what he obtained from obedience to law. The law he came to fulfill was law before Adam or Moses. The form is not the law but the law's expression. Man is the image of God, and one law must necessarily serve for both. "The Law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus," is the law of Eternity, the law of God, and not only from God. Forms vary because there is progress in the revelation God gives man of Himself. The Divine Incarnation is the finality of God, and in Christ is not only the fact but the form of all true Christian progress. "Seven Thunders" and all similar emanations have quite overlooked this cardinal truth. Whoever is the author of that tract, he utterly misconceives and misrepresents the character of God and man and sin and redemption. With equal propriety he might insist on a text, "only one," that prohibits euchre and chess and croquet and gambling. Every living thing in heaven, earth, and hell, shames the thought. "Everything after its kind" is the law of the Universe, God included. The Divine Being is the ground of all his revelations in nature, symbol, Christ and Christian. We want no literal text to prove that the vine is not to bear blackberries, or the lily, acorns. A tree has no will, and therefore it cannot divide its life into opposite forms. Man is a free agent and esu voluntarily let himself down from the life of spirit into the life of sense. But whatever his choice, he is inexorably bound by the law of the realm in which he moves. "What is born of the flesh is flesh, and what is born of the spirit is spirit." In the interest of what department lies the plea of "Seven Thunders"? If the principle herein stated is fundamental, the question answers itself. The plea is born of the flesh, and can be of service to none save those who "walk after the flesh, and not after the spirit." All life is self-demonstrative, and needs no texts to prove its genus or status. Any child learns this among its earliest observations. "Seven Thunders" busts Christianity below the level of beast and insect and plant. God gave his texts for other purposes. There is neither syllable nor letter in the New Testament forbidding a plain hat for sisters, nor any number of feathers and ribbons and fixtures on it. Why should there be? Will author of "Seven Thunders" give a reason? Is life such an indeterminate thing that it cannot come into details without the help of the alphabet? God needs the alphabet no less than we, but He knows how to use it. Will a rose not take its essential form unless some one writes a system of botany? Will the Divine infleshing not strip off "the lust of the eyes, and the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life," without having every sin-form labeled with an authoritative prohibition? The very simplest article that man or woman can put upon their persons must be the outcome of a motive, and this is inevitably determined by the circumstances that define the person's relation to the cross and the world. What are the circumstances connected with the liberty for which the "Seven Thunders" so vehemently yet so weakly plead? If he is a man of observation, discretion, and conscience, will he dare to affirm that the principle of the cross and devotion to the Crucified lie at the root of the preference which he so zealously maintains? There is no intelligent, principle comprehending, self-understanding, Christ-appreciating man or woman in the Brotherhood that will for a moment associate the object of his plea with the self-abnegation of the life originated and sustained by the Cross. The "Seven Thunders" has its entire animus and purpose in the ingrained opposition of the flesh to the fellowship of the Crucified. Where Christ has a free outcome in the life there is no room left for the motive which alone can raise a question whether I may not do so and so, and venture this or that. Had the author of the "Thunders" consciously and deeply realized the great and awful truth that "to live is Christ," he would have shrunk from the very thought of pleading for a principle and a privilege that can live and reign only where the cross is disowned. One of these flesh-carriers stands on the Annual Conference Record in this wise: "I believe if it was right for old sisters to wear hats, it is right now." "I never did and never will advocate a peculiar cut of dress." Is this to pass for Christianity? This is deemed good enough to go abroad in our reports as the mind of God as expressed in the incarnation! Has that brother ever seen one of those old sister's hats? If he ever passes, or sees, from Harrisburg to Philadelphia via Lebanon Valley Railroad, and will stop off at Hummelstown, and call on my aunt Katie Berst, one and a half mile south of station, he can see one of these antiquities. The very sight of it would make our fashionable sisters faint. They would be shorn and shaven rather than wear it. These eager advocates of the flesh tatter their self-stultifications as if the same thing was the same thing in reversed circumstances. Old-time hate were worn as world-separators: now as world-conformers.

The day may come when hats for sisters will again be the order of the day. But then fashion mongers will not want them. Those who plead for them now in public council, and in "Seven Thunders," will then denounce them. "Never advocate a peculiar hat!" Will that brother point out the principle of his latitudinarianism and indefiniteness any where in the works or word of God? It has no existence save in the mind moddled by "the lust of the eye and the pride of life." God never moves his hand and runs His shears at random. He works and cuts by rule. With him everything is "peculiar"; and if he can have his way in us, we will be a "peculiar people." How far? In what? Will the no peculiar-cut-brother answer? Where shall the exception begin, and how far extend? At what point shall the moulding of the life by Christ cease, and the world and the flesh become regnant? Shall to live mean Christ in its totality, or shall the peculiarity of sainthood dwindle into the promptings of the flesh and the allurements of the world? This takes in many abnormalities of the church, but not on the same practical ground. To smoke and chew are in essential principle as antagonistic to the cross as the most greedy, untrained fashion worship. But in motive there is nothing in common. Did sisters wear hats and other gawgaws as brethren use tobacco there would be but little stir about it. But they not only do not, but cannot. The very nature of the case forbids. The two evils start differently, because differently related to their objects. Here is a poser for "Seven Thunders", and the "no peculiar-cut" advocate. The primary relation of the smoker to tobacco is one of revulsion; that of the fashion follower to dress is one of fascination. The one repels; the other draws. The one becomes desire by habit; the other is desired independent of habit. Smoking and chewing, and dressing lustfully, are not in the same category, and not subject to the same condemnation.

What is Christianity? It is "Christ in us the hope of glory." It is the very life of Emmanuel, possessing and employing the flesh for the high ends of God. It does not necessarily mean round coat, or straight coat; broad brim and low crown, or vice versa. Five hundred years ago these peculiarities were not; and in a century hence there may not be a round coat or broad-rimmed hat on earth. But the Christian's exterior will be none the less peculiar and definite. What is faulty now may be insubordination then. The motives that took sisters out of the church twenty years ago to float in crinoline, now leads them to abhor that style of dress. It is under the law of the world, and therefore intolerable. Christ was in Eden as the Tree of Life, in the deluge as the Ark, in the manifoldness of the Mosaic ritual, in the sacerdotal robe of Aaron, in the baptism of John, in the Eucharist, and in Christian dress through all the centuries, but never in anything that did not express, either intrinsically, or by ordination, or by motive, His life as the Incarnation of God. Nothing of all this is applicable to the object sought in "Seven Thunders," or to any production in that line of thought.

THE "NAZARENES" OF SERBIA AND HUNGARY.

AT a recent meeting, Mijatovich, late minister of Finance for Serbia, bore a remarkable testimony to the piety of the religious sect of the Nazarenes among the Servians and in Hungary. He says that strangers are perfectly confounded with the evidence these simple men produce from the Bible in support of their tenets. The civil authorities, to whom the Nazarenes are obnoxious, because of their refusal to serve as soldiers, are unanimous in praising their honesty, loyalty and earnest Christianity. Some of them have been condemned to death for disobeying orders of the military authority to go to fight. The death penalty has been commuted to twenty years imprisonment with hard labor. The ex-minister has had occasion to visit them several times, and when leaving them he always thanked God that there are Servians who, whilst wearing chains for conscience' sake, rejoice. These Nazarene prisoners diligently read the Bible, and on all occasions proclaim that their chains are easy and that the darkness of their prison is light, whilst they have the Bible for their companion and Jesus for their Comforter. Dr. Ziemann wrote three years ago, from Belgrade, thus describing a visit paid by himself to these imprisoned Nazarenes at Belgrade:—"I was anxious to see them, and the Governor accompanied me into the prison yard. They were out, and the Governor explained to me ~~that they were~~ sentenced to labor, but he used them mostly for new and garden work. They were sent for here. They came—clank, clank—heavy chains on their feet, clothed in ominous gray prison garb, led by an armed guard. Only two came; one is a patient in the Lazaretto. These two looked neither ill nor downcast—just the reverse—their faces had a calm, peaceful look. They did not complain, neither did they burst out with a show of their martyrdom. Reserved and exceedingly meek, they answered my questions simply, and confirming what I had heard already—that they would rather die than carry arms, 'because God had forbidden to murder.' The chains and the prison they could endure, but to disobey God they could not and dare not. Did they feel unhappy? There were tears in their eyes, 'but,' said the one, 'the Lord Jesus Christ had told his disciples before hand that they would have to suffer, and then, eternal life!' I asked if I could do anything for them; they looked long and steadily at each other, and then very timidly asked if I could obtain permission for them to read the Bible in their cells? I cannot tell what I felt like as I stood before those martyrs; I had come to show them much sympathy; but I assure you that I felt that I could bow down and thank them for the privilege of this interview. The Governor promised me that Bibles should be given to them, and that he also would gladly speak for them if a petition for pardon were sent to the Government. As far as prison rules allow, I made every arrangement to make their lot there as comfortable as possible." The Herald of Peace adds to the above: "On making inquiry, we find that the Servians, imprisoned several years ago for conscience' sake, are still (1881) undergoing punishment."—London Friend.

He that never changed any of his opinions never corrected any of his mistakes; and he who was never wise enough to find out any mistakes in himself, will not be charitable enough to excuse what he reckons mistakes of others.

A man had better be poisoned in his blood than in his principles.

COME TO JESUS.

BY J. M. N. ENGL.

"Come unto me and I will bestow life upon you freely."

THESE are the words spoken by Jesus, to people who had seen most of his mighty works done in their cities and would not for all that repent and have their souls delivered from the curse awaiting them at the awful day of judgment. After he had upbraided them, and thanked his Father—the Lord of heaven and earth—because he had hid these things from the wise and prudent, and had revealed them unto babes, he changes his voice and invites all wretched souls, not bodies, to come and find rest.

Poor, wretched sinner, here is something for you; if you have really seen how dangerous, uncertain your present condition is, and how you tried to find rest to your trembling soul by working out your own salvation, is it not better just at this moment to abandon such a labor, which exhausts all your mental power without making you better, and simply believe in Jesus, fully convinced that God is reconciled through the sacrifice of him on Calvary, when he died in your place? It may be that you have wished you were a creature that had no immortal soul within its body to live forever, either among the happy saved souls in heaven, or among the unhappy perished souls in hell; or it may be, you think you are quite safe, because you look upon yourself as an honest, respectable man or woman and find no occasion for a new birth in your case. Come, I will show you something you have never carefully noticed before.

Can you see a man in a great pit at the end of the way you are now traveling? Can you see he is surrounded by flames? Can you hear him crying for mercy? Listen to his words: "Father Abraham, have mercy on me, and send Lazarus, that he may dip the tip of his finger in water, and cool my parching tongue; for I am tormented with this flame." Let us hear the answer: "For, remember," thy lifetime." He must have been a cruel man, you say. No, I will tell you his story:—

He was once a rich, and for aught I know, a respectable man, clothed in purple and fine linen, and dined sumptuously every day, as he was able to pay for his clothes and meat him self; and a certain beggar named Lazarus was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table. I never heard he got any crumbs, but the dogs came and licked his sores. His religion was, that he trusted Abraham as his father. He died and was buried. This is all I know about him, and now you see him there. Your safety is shaken now; therefore give up your labor, and trust Jesus as a Savior mighty and willing to save you. If you only believe in Jesus he will fill your heart with a peace and joy which passeth all understanding, and make you so happy as you never have been before. You need not do any thing but simply rely on Jesus, and when you have found him, you are willing to keep all his commandments. Let him save you for nothing, or I am afraid you will never get saved at all. Come, poor sinner, while the gate of heaven is open; come to-day, or it might be too late if you tarry till to-morrow. Come to this blessed Jesus who died on the cross, that he might deliver you from the devil's snare, from the eternal perdition.

WHO SHALL ROLL US AWAY THE STONE?

BY C. D. HYLTON.

VERY early in the morning of the first day of the week after the crucifixion of our Redeemer, Mary Magdalene and the other Mary went to the sepulchre that they might anoint the body of the Lord with sweet spices. They were evidently much fatigued owing to the circumstances which had just occurred. The question then arose "Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" (for it was very great.) These women were well aware that the unbelieving Jews and Pilate had set a watch and caused the stone, that Joseph rolled to the door, to be sealed.

Now we have brought sweet spices to anoint our Lord's body; but who is to roll away that great stone that we may apply them to our Master? We can't do it without help, it is utterly impossible for us. But to their happy surprise on reaching the sepulchre, the stone was already rolled away and the angel of the Lord was seated upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow. And the angel answered and said unto the women, "Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus which was crucified. He is not here; for he is risen as he said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay." The angel then gave them instructions what to do (preach the first resurrection sermon) and as they hurried to do that they were hidden, behold, Jesus met them, saying, All hail! What a glorious salutation this was to those holy women who had been weeping and lamenting over the death of him whom they expected to be King of the Jews.

In this narrative may be found a grand lesson both to the saint and sinner. It teaches us there is something for us to do. First in order to be born again we must make a start in that direction as Mary Magdalene and the other Mary did, in order to reach the sepulchre.

Second, when we remember there is a great stone between us and our God, we must not stop and say the stone is too great. If these women had stopped they never would have known that the Lord rolled away the stone. We might represent these women as the sinners starting for the church, and the sepulchre as the church, the stone as the door through which we enter the church, the angel as God's minister, and the women leaving the sepulchre as saints.

On their way to the sepulchre, they went weeping as penitent sinners; but left rejoicing as saints.

There are thousands of sinners who start this road; but the remembrance of that "stone" makes them tremble and fall, and the sad result is they perish near the open door. God did not cause the earth to quake and his angel to descend simply to roll back the stone for those women; but dear reader it was for you and I, and the whole world. The door is open, the way passable, and Jesus says come, for all things are now ready. The plan of salvation is finished. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth." "I am the door." "Come unto me, all ye ends of the earth, and be ye saved."

"Come in joy and come in sorrow,
Come to Jesus as thy friend,
Be not careful for the morrow,
He will keep thee to the end.
Only trust, believe and pray,
Jesus rolled the stone away."

TWO WAYS OF READING.

A LITTLE boy came home one day from church service, from which his parents had been detained, and asked his father if he ever read the twenty-first chapter of Revelation.

"Oh, yes; often," said his father.

"But did you ever read it aloud to us here at home?"

"I think so."

"Well, father, I don't think I ever heard it. The minister read it to-day, and it was just as if he had taken a pencil and paper and pictured it right out before us."

So much is there in good reading. I have often wondered how Jesus read the old prophets, on the day he went into the meeting and took up the Scriptures and read them before the congregation. The eyes of every one were fastened upon him, and all wondered at the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth. If we could read the Bible as he did, what a power it would be in our houses. It is worth a mother's while to study elocution, to some extent, as well as to study deeply into the spirit of the word, if she would make her Bible reading effective on the hearts of her children. A monotonous way of reading takes much of the life out of the sweetest portions. A conversational tone and manner is much more instructive than the "Bible twang," which the good old Scotch grandmother held so sacred that she slyly reproved her lad for using it when reading the newspaper.—Advocate and Guardian.

WHEEL-BARROW RELIGION.

RICHARD Baxter said a good thing when he said of some one who lived in his day, that they had a "wheel-barrow religion." They "went when they were shoved." I would be hard to find a better name for the religion of many who live now. Many people are like wheel-barrow, and no Paddy up and down a steep incline has harder and more weary work than those whose duty it is to push them. As often as not they are quite empty. They take what is put into them, whether it is good or worthless. Whatever knowledge-feeling of duty they have, is proof of some one else's work. They are easily upset and emptied, and they have no power or will to get up again. They move as long as a firm hand grasps them and keeps them going. As soon as they are left to themselves they stop, and are helpless and useless until they are lifted. When they move, it is up and down, backward and forward, never getting farther, or showing any life of their own.

Home and Family.

MARY G. NORMAN, SHARON, MINN.

REVISED

For the Brethren at Work.

TO THE DESPONDING.

Have courage, wipe your weeping eyes,
A light still lingers in your breast;
Do not despair, hope never dies,
And man is always to be tried;
Forget the sufferings of the past,
Anticipate no future grief;
Your sorrow shall not always last,
Your aching heart shall find relief.

O, throw away the bitter cup—
The bitter cup of deep despair;
Soar upon wings of hope, soar up,
Far up above the misty air.

In faith grasp Hope's extended hand,
And wear allegiance to her sway;
Rich pearls lie mixed with burning sand,
And roses bloom all 'long the weedy way.

Have courage, downcast soul, cheer up,
There 're blessings scattered 'rywhere.
Reach out and take enjoyment's cup,
And drown the voice of pain and care.

Dismiss your doubts, they give but pain,
For doubts are traitors at the best;
Your wishes, dreams, are all in vain,
They give no ease, they give no rest.

Be patient, hopeful, and content,
However dark the way appears;
Think not of grief as punishment,
Dispel your gloomy, dreamy fens;
Enjoy those blessings at your door,
Enjoy them to your soul's delight,
For blessings ne'er are valued more,
Than after they have taken flight.

A FEW THOUGHTS ABOUT HOME.

A HAPPY home is, as we have said before, the most delightful, and the most to be desired above all treasures upon earth. Hence it should be our utmost desire to know how to make our homes both pleasant and happy. This great work should not be merely verbal, but it should be a practical work. It is one thing to teach, and quite another thing to put our teaching in practice. Our motto is, always practice what you preach. Then your teaching will be a power for good; others seeing our good works, may glorify our Father in heaven. This, says St. James, is a living faith; but faith without works is dead (James 2: 20) Let us first know how to perform our work aright, and then to go ahead, regardless of what man may say or do. God has given us a work to do, and also a rule whereby we may perform this work. Hence we are without excuse; home is where our work should begin, it is where God designed it should be; for all we care, or ever will be, is what was first formed at home. There is where our character is chiefly formed, where the natural affections are cherished, and where habits are formed. Hence the mother should understand her duty well, as a great responsibility, rests upon her in regard to how she performs her work in the family circle. Mothers should study how to make their homes attractive to their children by every lawful means in her power. She should use every opportunity to improve their minds in things that are noble and virtuous, and cultivate true affections for home. It should be remembered that a happy home does not consist of much land, fine clothes or richly furnished parlors; but where there is love and peace. For love is the great key note of all true happiness. The wife should always give the husband the parting words of love as he goes forth to meet the trials and difficulties of business.

Husbands talk to your wives lovingly; for it is tone and temper, that makes life joyous or miserable. Mothers do not fret and scold at your children's faults; but reprove them when necessary with a gentle command. For calm, sweet words will do more than harsh ones. Always let pity and love rule, for a kind and loving mother is never forgotten by her children. Mothers teach your children to be brave and true, teach them to be pure in thought, deed, and action; teach them to engage in honorable work for self-support, tell them about Jesus, what he has done for them, teach them to pray, and pray with them. If you thus perform your home duties the result will be a beautiful husband, loving children, a gentle and kind mother, a pleasant and happy home, a type of our heavenly home; where none but those who are lovely can enter.

The heads of families must endeavor to maintain family-worship. This is an indispensable duty of Christian parents; and parents who neglect this duty criminally disregard the souls of their children and servants. Reading the Scriptures and offering up prayers every morning and evening, is one of the most effectual means of maintaining peace and love in the family circle. Let this duty be engaged in, in the fear of God, and you may confidently expect his blessing; but we cannot expect the blessings of God without prayer. Therefore, let every effort be begun, continued, and ended with prayer. To God, the Only Wise, be glory through Jesus Christ!

CHARACTER.

A REFINED and elevated Christian character prepares us for Christian work. God does not send us out on difficult duties while easy and pressing ones are left at home undone. Faithful in a few things precedes rulership over many. We have no need to search other continents for work, while our own servants at home cannot read, nor fancy ourselves called to showy exploits, while a neighbor's child is ill for want of food, or a brother or sister unhelped in our own house; the careful gleaner will return home at nightfall, richly laden with the "golden grain."

HOW SHE PEELED THE ONIONS.

A "NICE young lady" shows nicer in any circumstances for having a common-sense education at home. If any girls still suppose that they cannot peel onions without shedding tears, they can learn something from the cook's account of the young lady who helped make clam-chowder. A fashionable yachting-party were setting off for a Summer picnic. Says the cook:

She came on board as pretty as a daisy, and as sweet and fresh as an elegant get-up could make her. There was a chattering all, on the yacht, what they would have for dinner, and it was agreed, for in, that as it was chowder, each one was to do something towards the same.

"You have got to peel and chop up them onions," says a daudy kind of a fellow to the pretty girl.

"Agreed," said she, not wincing a bit, and they all laughed and pitied her. When the time came for fixing up things, kind of orged it, I brought that pretty girl a peck of the finest onions—real red-skin ones—you ever saw—all-

"There is going to be a lot of crying," thinks I. "If that would be the only sorrow in her life!"

Says she to me, "Mr. Roberts, do you hand me a bucket of water," and I did, "Now," said she, "just you put them onions in that water," and I did it. Then she took off her white hangers—a lot of rings and put them in her pocket, and asked for a knife, and the onions being in the water, she peeled and sliced them under water, and nary a tear came, nor nothing.

That's the way I learned how to peel onions and not cry over them.—Washington Commercial.

CONSPICUOUSNESS IN DRESS.

IF a lady's dress is especially conspicuous, it may be to the advantage of the dress, but it is to the disadvantage of the lady. The dress may be artistic in color, design, and arrangement; but the lady who wears it is evidently lacking good taste. The dress might do credit to its maker if it were on a lay-figure in a show-window; but it brings discredit to its wearer when it calls chief attention to itself, and brings her into prominence only as its exhibitor. A lady is never well dressed when her dress is conspicuous, any more than a picture is well framed when its frame is more noticeable than the picture. This principle is applicable to truth as applicable to truth as to persons. That style is never a good style which calls attention away from the truth which it essays to present. Rhetoric and oratory are truly effective only when they are subordinate to the sentiment which they embody and emphasize.—S. S. Times.

FOLLOWING JESUS.—Two persons were walking together one very dark night, when one said to the other, who knew the road well, "I shall follow you so as to be right." He soon fell into a ditch and accused the other with his fall. The other replied: "Then you did not follow me exactly, for I have kept free." A side step had caused the fall. There is like danger in not following Christ fully. N.

A Russian soldier, on a very cold piercing night, was kept on duty all night, a poor working man, moved with pity, took off his coat and lent it to the soldier to keep him warm, adding that he should soon reach home, while the poor soldier would have to remain out all night. The cold was so intense that the soldier was found dead the next morning. Some time afterward the poor man was laid on his death-bed, and in a dream saw Jesus. "You have got my coat on," said the man. "Yes it is the coat you lent me that cold night when I was on duty and you passed by, I was naked and you clothed me." N.

BRETHREN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ozark Co., Ill.

TO OUR READERS.

WEEK before last as we began to print the paper, the boiler gave out; so we put two men to the wheel, expecting to run that issue off by hand. All went along smoothly until about half of the papers were printed, when the press broke. The torus were then taken to Oregon, six miles, and the rest of the papers printed there. This accounts for the delay of last issue. In the meantime we went to Chicago, purchased an eight horse power boiler, and now think we have something that will stand the test. It also took considerable work to mend the broken part of the press so that we are compelled to drop out one number of the paper, for which our readers will pardon us for the present, as it is the very best we can possibly do under the circumstances.

OFF FOR REST.

IF editors were made of iron, steel and brass instead of flesh, blood, bones and spirit, they would need no rest; but they wear out, and that too, at an early age as a rule, especially when poverty is their lot. If they had wealth so that they could hire clerks to attend to their vast correspondence, and prepare, by dictation, the thousands of lines for the paper, they could pass along as do other men. But few indeed know the great strain upon the mind of the conscientious and careful editor. Such appreciate our statement that no other labor is so exhaustive—so wearing as literary labor. We have split rails, chopped cord wood, dug coal, plowed, sowed and reaped, taught school, and scribbled as an editor; and among them all, the editorial is the hardest.

We must have rest. We therefore pass the reins over to Bro. J. H. Moore, for the time being, and wing our way to the mountains of Colorado for a few months to seek that relief which we so much need. There is a mighty work to do in behalf of pure Christianity; and we feel like remaining on earth a little while longer to engage in that work if the Lord will. Our heart's desire is, to stand on the parapet, and prevent some invader from coming into the fort at that particular point. There are lambs that need sympathy and instruction, and we are willing, if able, to act our part with them. The Lord help us to do them good. Take away the good and pure from the church, and the church ceases to be a thing of God on earth. Pure corruption loses in the church, and the light of God is extinguished from among his people. A brick is as certainly a brick when covered with slime and filth as one that is clean and pure; but what good is it unless cleaned and put in the building? We are for cleaning it up and putting it to use.

Before this reaches our readers we shall be on our way to Colorado. We expect to see the saints there and rejoice with them in the knowledge of God, but cannot promise to work for them until refreshed in body. We shall abide among them a few months, the Lord willing; and hope to form many acquaintances which shall last through eternity.

And you, my dear good friends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, remember us at a throne of grace; and seek the Lord's help: for we are all so needy. We shall be pleased to have you write us. Your letters will be highly appreciated, while among the mountain wilds. Receiving letters will not add to an afflicted state—nay, they will rather give strength to our wasted system; but please do not ask us to answer unless on important business. It is the much writing that exhausts us—not the receiving of many. We hope to hear from many of you; for you know it is painful to be away from one's dear family—especially when there is all joy and peace in the family. We shall miss the dear good companion, and the lovely, obedient children who so often make us glad with their presence. We commit them to God's care, who is willing to protect and provide for them. Our address, for the present, is Longmont, Colorado.

And to our contributors permit me to say, your hearty co-operation with Bro. Moore is desired and respectfully solicited that he, with you, may make the B. A. W., a very giant in defense of pure Christianity. Good news of the prosperity of Zion, and essays on doctrine and practical truths are needed; hence be diligent in supplying these for your paper.

Should Bro. Moore err, please do not let him know it via Berlin, Huntington, or Ashland, but run the news into Mt. Morris direct, as he will appreciate it the more. It is wrong to tell a man his fault in such a roundabout way; go to him directly, as the Scripture teach. In the light of recent events we think we are qualified to give some advice on this point.

We also trust that our agents will not relax their efforts in extending the circulation and usefulness of the paper. What about the 10,000? One brother has already found forty-one new subscribers, and says he will not stop until he has one hundred. Are there fifty others of the same spirit? If so, the 10,000 will be reached, and then there will be joy all around.

And now may the God of peace and love, abide with you all. Do not become weary in well-doing, but by grace divine resolve to fight the good fight of faith, and win the crown.

AGED MINISTERS.

THE following we clip from the Church Union. It treats a subject that many of our people can study with profit. It seems strange that age and experience commends a physician or lawyer but must be reversed when it comes to a religious teacher. We need more sound, sacred preaching and it requires age and experience to supply the demand. But to the article:

"It is often noted with surprise that while the gray lock of wisdom commends a physician or lawyer, a minister of the Gospel, after passing the age of fifty or sixty at most, is not usually desired by the churches.

While few seek young doctors or lawyers, and while their acceptability increases with years, even to the extreme of life, the case with ministers is exactly reversed, and we have scores of pious, able, and faithful Gospel preachers, just in their prime in all respects, crowded out of the pulpit by persons whose chief commendation seems to be youth.

These facts, and the evils flowing from them, are often noted. Probably they have never existed in any period or place to such an extent as now in the United States. I will note a few reasons for this preference of the Church "without note or comment."

The churches see a possibility of future greatness and distinction in young men. They see a chance of winning "a star of the first magnitude." People would rather worship a son-dog rising than the king of the day himself sitting. Young men usually have the most animation orunction. It may be the inspiration of personal ambition or vanity, but it is an element of acceptability.

The young are generally more agreeable to the young, and they are expected to exercise more toleration toward worldly amusements and follies. This is regarded as a very important consideration. Some times ministers grow ease-loving, plethoric and indolent, with years, and only bring forth things that are old. Young ministers are less apt to be lazy and more apt to bring forth novelties and make sensations.

Those who control supplies learn that, as a rule, youth draws better than age, and they act accordingly.

Congregations dread to have an enfeebled or a disabled old pastor on their hands.

And finally, men of mature years look less hopefully at the prospect of the long predicted and boasted conquests of the many giant evils that exists by present agents and agencies. Even men who do not at first attend to inspired prophecies, are compelled to learn by repeated conflicts with these evils, and they speak with less and less confidence of 'taking the world for Christ,' etc.

Young men indulge more in dreams and all sorts of imaginary progress, conquests, and success. These brilliant harangues are pleasing and popular. Such are a few of the reasons for this strange preference."

In reading the history of the Waldenses we have frequently observed the kindness they manifested toward their aged ministers. They were inclined to listen to experienced counselors, and always retained the training of their young ministers to the aged and gifted elders. Among them age and experience were honorable.

THE GRADUATING EXERCISES.

OUR last issue went to press a few days too soon to give anything in regard to the graduating exercises of the College, June 28th.

No time was spent in foolishness and making preparations for worldly displays. The students continued their regular course of studies and examination till Monday evening, and on Tuesday morning met in the Chapel for the Commencement and Graduating exercises. At 9:30, the large room was well filled with an intelligent and appreciative audience. No displays whatever were seen in the room. Every thing was as orderly and simple as one of our common meetings. The Graduating class, _____, _____, _____, entered and took seats to the right of the stand.

Services were opened by singing and prayer—Bro. Eshelman officiating. After this Prof. Hogebs took charge of the class. The first, a sister, read a well prepared essay. The remaining five delivered orations, the preparation of which, would be a credit to any institution of learning. This part of the exercises occupied two hours. Prof. Hogebs then delivered an excellent address on the practical part of education—urging the graduates to put in practice what they had learned, telling them that a small amount of practice was worth more than much education. He then presented the diplomas to the class. The whole scene was as solemn and impressive as some of our religious exercises; many in the audience could not refrain the tear.

After this, Eld. R. H. Miller, of Ashland College, delivered a short address that was well received. He then closed the exercises with prayer.

Thus ended the closing exercises of the first graduating class that has left the school since it came into the hands of the Brethren. One of our county papers says there was an "absence of the feathers and pomp usual on such occasions." Another one says, it was unlike any thing ever before seen in the College—referring to the absence of unnecessary display—demonstrating the oft repeated assertion that Colleges can be conducted in a simple quiet manner, void of unnecessary worldly display and foolishness.

Many of the pupils left in the afternoon for their homes. One of them said he would not take five hundred dollars for what he had learned in one year.

The school is now in an excellent condition financially and otherwise, with a better prospect before it than ever before. We learn that the discipline hereafter is to be even stricter than heretofore, and that special efforts will be made to keep the school in harmony with the teachings and practices of the general brotherhood, that members and others may send their children here where they will be surrounded with good influences, such as are calculated to make them useful men and women.

THE ASSASSINATION.

THE whole country has been startled by the attempted assassination of President Garfield. Last Saturday morning as he and Secretary Blaine were walking in the B. & O. R. R. depot, in Washington, one Charles J. Guiteau, who was in the rear, fired two pistol shots at the President, the last taking effect above the right hip, near the kidneys. He fell to the floor, bleeding profusely. It was thought that the wound was fatal, but it is now Saturday and the President still lives with fair prospects of recovering. The entire nation was grief-stricken and many prayers were offered for the recovery of the Chief Ruler of the nation.

The loss of a good ruler is a sad period in the history of any nation; but when one falls by the hand of an assassin, it so enflames the people as to sometimes threaten the very existence of the Republic. In this case a feeling had been worked up by an element opposing the present administration, and the agitation became so strong that the mind of this frantic Guiteau thereby became inflamed to such an extent that he ventured to commit the horrible deed, and thus not only destroy a father and husband, but one whose duty it is to preside over the public affairs of the nation.

The assassin was born and raised within twenty miles of Mt. Morris, and was well known to many of our people. Though raised with pleasant surroundings, he became a fanatic and spent the most of his life as an eccentric lecturer, and was generally considered an unsafe man. Some of his brothers are men of excellent standing in the community where they live, and are greatly mortified over the deed.

It is to be hoped that the country will not soon be called upon to hear the sad and distressing news as it passed over the wires last Saturday and Sunday. A few similar deeds at the seat of government would unavoidably plunge the nation into a horrible confusion from which it would never entirely recover.

J. H. M.

Bro. Hope lately captured a little boy only thirteen years old. His faith was strong.

When last heard from, Bro. Eshelman was nearing the mountains of Colorado.

In a time of profound peace, and with an army of only 25,000 men, yet our government paid last year $41,000,000 for military expenses, besides $6,500,000 for Indian expenses, $15,900,000 for naval expenses and $50,200,000 for pensions. War and all its incidents are very expensive. What a jubilee it will be when men learn war no more.

"In the days of clay turnpikes in Ohio there was a gate keeper on a much traveled road who made it a point to answer promptly any calls for "open gate," and to receive toll. He had the habit of reading the Scriptures and praying in his family twice a day. He stated that for twenty-five years, the whole time of his service the call for the gate keeper had never once been made during the family worship. The writer of these lines often went through that gate and often heard that statement from the gate keeper."

While many are writing and talking and planning how to preach the Gospel—and how to find homes, our beloved brother John Metzger goes forth into the city and into the country and tells the old, old story in a plain, old fashioned manner, and the people believe, repent, and are baptized. Bro. John was not afraid to go among others who were preaching, but boldly stood up and preached Jesus. O for thousands of such workers! And while Bro. Metzger was sounding out the word of the Lord in St. Louis, Bro. D. M. Miller was rightly dividing the truth in the wood country of Minnesota, baptizing all who believed on the Lord. Let others go and do likewise and the Lord will be magnified by his people.

It is related that there was once in an English dockyard a great ship to be launched. The multitude had gathered to witness it. The blocks and wedges were knocked away, but the massive hull did not stir, and there was disappointment. Just then a little boy rushed forward and began to push with all his might. The crowd broke out into a laugh; but just then it began to move—the crowd applauded. Away went the ship into the water. The few pounds pushed by the lad were only needed to start it. He took hold and helped. We suppose that in every position of duty in which we are placed the forces are just so nicely poised that it requires only our little strength to overcome the last feather's weight of friction and set the sometimes vast things of God in full motion for grand results. Cowardice, or doubt might have kept that boy from pushing just at the right moment. But enthusiasm which throws itself into the scales upon the right side every time, and does what it is able, wins victories and does great deeds. Every possible opportunity is a call upon you to push. Do it, and be a hero, whether it be a great or a little thing.

ANNUAL MEETING

THE present plan of arranging the cooking and eating departments is the best system yet introduced. It is, perhaps, better and more systematic than the world itself has, yet it is susceptible of some valuable improvements. For the present I will speak of the proper way of carrying out the present plan.

The cooking and eating departments should be separately conducted. Between the departments there should be a long, wide counter, with places for bread underneath so that it can be taken out by the waiters in the eating department without entering the cooking room. The cooking department should be in charge of a cool-headed, energetic man, who knows how to conduct business systematically. For his assistants he should have a good cook, one person to make and handle the coffee and tea, a fireman, one to handle the milk and butter, one for the sugar and apple-butter, and a door keeper, making in all seven persons in the cooking department. Different parts of the counter should be appropriated to the men having charge of certain things. There should be a place for the meat, another for coffee and tea, another for milk and butter, and another for sugar and apple butter. The bread should be cut ready for the table and thrown under the counter.

Outside of the cooking department there should be three committees. One to look after the meat, another for the bread, tea, coffee, sugar, etc., and another for the milk, butter and apple-butter. These committees have nothing to do with matters inside of the cooking department, but it should be their duty to deliver these things to the manager of that department with all needed promptness.

We will now pass into the eating department, which should be about 64 feet wide and 160 feet long, divided into two parts by a ten foot aisle running lengthwise, leaving 32 feet on one side for the men, and 22 feet on the other for the women. The length of the building will admit of about 18 tables on each side, or 36 tables in all. To each of these tables there should be two waiters—one man and one woman. Each table should be numbered, having the odd numbers on the men's side, and the evens, on the women's. The waiters should be numbered the same as the tables they have in charge, and made responsible for the proper care of the tables entrusted to them. In addition to the necessary dishes etc., each table should be supplied with a hnsel basket, a small tub, water bucket, two coffee-pots, and one for tea. The two waiters having a table in charge should consult in regard to the manner of dividing their work that they may fully understand each other. When the signal, for getting the tables in order, is given, each waiter will go to the counter for the provisions wanted. If meat is wanted, they go to that part of the counter where the meat is dealt out by the person having charge of it. If butter is needed, they go to the person at the counter having charge of that. Thus the work goes on. All of this time the foreman of this room (who by the way should be a man who fully understands his business) has nothing to do but keep out of the way and look on, for if the waiters have been properly instructed they will see to it that their tables are in good order. When the foreman sees that the tables are prepared he will give one vigorous rap on the circular saw that should hang near the center of the aisle. This brings each door keeper (who should be the man waiting on the table) to his door. A glance at the tables will show that at the end of each one is a basket of bread, bucket of water, two pots of coffee and one of tea. Two raps on the saw and the doors are opened: the people enter and are counted as they pass in. If every thing is in order it will require about two minutes to seat one thousand persons; 30 minutes to eat and pass out, and ten minutes to prepare the next table. When all are done the dishes may be washed in the small tub, at the end of the table, for that purpose, and replaced on the table ready for the next meal. By thus arranging things 3,000 persons may be fed and the tables put in order in about two hours, thus giving the waiters a good chance to attend all the services.

It is best to have the same set of waiters serve through the entire meeting for it takes about one day to train them, and if they change every day it will be found difficult to handle the eating department as systematically as it should be conducted.

Care should be taken to keep people out of the aisle; in fact, no one but the waiters and manager have any business in there at any rate. Business conducted in this way will require but little commanding, as nearly every thing can be regulated by signals.

I would like to see at least one change in the above mentioned departments. Instead of having the cooking department at one end have it at the side. The aisle should be at the same side, thus making the tables longer—less tables and more waiters to the tables. The people would then enter from one side of the room only—the men at one end and the women at the other. This arrangement would save the waiters about two thirds of the amount of walking they now have to do, and enable them to prepare the tables in much less time.

At present there are no important changes required in regard to the manner of arranging the meat tickets. The price, however, is too low. It should be not less than 15 cents per meal and the person required to pay only for the meals eaten. We further think there should be an occasional change of food. At Annual Meetings we are compelled, in order to get enough to satisfy the body, to eat too much meat, which is not good for people who are not taking their regular amount of exercise. Considerable fruit and some vegetables should be used instead of meat. They would cost less and are better adapted to our wants at a time when we are not laboring.

I close this series of articles by again suggesting the plan mentioned three years ago: That is, to select some central point, having good railroad and other necessary facilities, erect suitable buildings and there hold our Annual Meetings. It would then make no difference whether it rained or not, nor would the meeting in any way be disturbed by the wind. At such a point we could have good sleeping arrangements at very reasonable rates. We could pay for the meals eaten, as long as the business of the meeting required and be a burden to nobody. The whole arrangement should be in charge of one or two brethren who could take care of the property and keep everything pertaining thereto in proper condition. They should be men who know how to handle a meeting of this kind economically and systematically, for it will require rare skill and much executive ability to manage so much on a large scale. The meeting properly conducted would pay all expenses and afford a suitable salary for the one having it in charge.

CHILDREN'S TRACTS.

FOR several years we have been thinking about preparing a series of small tracts for children; but the constant pressure of business seemed to prevent, until recently we simply set business aside and went to work on tracts. Several are now ready and for sale by the Western Book Exchange, of this place. Each tract contains 16 pages, and will be sold at the following low rates, 1 copy 3 cents, 5 copies 10 cents; 25 copies 40 cents; 50 copies 75 cents; 100 copies $1.00. The children will like them and it will do you good to buy a lot and give them away. We shall continue publishing new ones until the series is complete.

M. R. Z.

In one of his late lectures, Dr. J. P. Newman said: "Ridiculing is an easy thing. A man can ridicule his own mother if he has the heart to do it."

If a new rendering of a passage of Scriptures happens to agree with our doctrine, we are inclined to say it is good. If it does not support our doctrine then we say it is a 'bad' translation, thus making our doctrine instead of the original Greek version the standard of authority.

A BILL has been introduced in the French legislature providing that any citizen who loses his life while saving life or property at a fire, any physician who dies while laboring in the hospitals in any time of epidemic, and any one who dies while endeavoring to save a fellow-being shall be regarded as a soldier slain on the battle-field and insure a double pension to his family. This is true statesmanship, which seeks to cultivate and encourage the sentiments and impulses which serve others at the sacrifice of self.—Statesman.

It is easy to take a man's part, but the trouble is to maintain it.

Will some one explain Genesis 4:15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him?
ROBERT T. CROOK.

Does Gen. 4 infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living? If so, who was his wife?
MARY C. NORMAN.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not?

THE HOLY GHOST BAPTISM.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 43rd.
WM. LONG.

THE portion of Scripture referred to above contains the sequel of Cornelius' conversion. Forty-third verse reads: "To him gave all the prophets witness, that through his name, whosoever believeth in him shall receive remission of sins."

The term "believeth," in the verse above, does not simply mean absent of the mind to the doctrine of Christ; but it means laying hold of the measure of grace contained in the Gospel of Christ, by our obedience prompted by a living, abiding faith in the Son of God.

Forty-fourth verse reads: "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word." From this verse we learn that the descent of the Holy Ghost was of such a character that its descent could be seen and heard, and his effects on those whom he entered were clearly manifest, in their speaking with tongues, and magnifying God as shown in 46th verse.

Forty-fifth verse, "And they of the circumcision which believed were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost." From this verse we further learn that the believing Jews had no idea that the Gentiles would be committed into the kingdom of Christ, on an equality with them. It also seems clear that the Jews would not have received them into their fraternity had it not been for the miraculous pouring out of the Holy Ghost.

The latter part of 46th and the 47 verses reads as follows: "Then answered Peter, Can any man forbid water that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Ghost as well as we?"

The reason Peter asks the question, "Can any man forbid water," etc., is because the giving of the Holy Ghost in this case was out of the usual order. The usual order was to receive baptism by water first, then the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as in the baptism of Christ, the Pentecostians, the Samaritans, etc. Peter saw at once that an objection to water baptism might be urged, on the ground that Cornelius and his household had already received the Holy Ghost, what need had they now of water baptism? But to show the importance of baptism by water, he asks, "Can any man forbid water?" etc. As much as to say, "he cannot," even if the baptism of the Holy Ghost, has come first. This does not invalidate the ordinance of baptism by water, for the same person. "And he commanded, and they were baptized."

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;"—was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and there stopped, or is it right to pray it yet?
ANNA GUNDEY.

THE idea that any part of the Lord's Prayer was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, is an error. Christ gave us a form of prayer that will be valid while he has a kingdom on earth. When the kingdom of God came with power on the day of Pentecost, that kingdom was not fulfilled, but merely introduced, and has been in the world, and subjects have been gathered into it ever since, and will continue to be until the last one that is to be saved, is gathered in. Christ himself compares the kingdom of heaven to a man who delivered his goods to his servants, then took a journey into a far country. The heavens must retain him till the final restitution of all things. Christ will come again to gather in the subjects of his kingdom. Then his kingdom will be manifested in all its glory and splendor. It will be real, visible, and not merely spiritual as now. For the consummation of that glorious period and the ingathering of many souls into that kingdom we should pray, "Thy kingdom come." The kingdom of God began to form from the days of John the Baptist, and has been forming ever since; i. e., souls have been born into that kingdom, and in that sense the kingdom is coming; and in that sense we should pray for its greater extension, "Thy kingdom come." "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." This language is also as appropriate in prayer now as it ever was. God's will is implicitly obeyed in heaven; but it is not thus obeyed on earth. Men are doing their own wills. But the time will come when the knowledge of the Lord will cover the earth, as the waters cover the great deep; then God's will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. Let us pray for the consummation of that glorious period.

AUTHOR OF THE BOOK OF MORMON.

I. Who was the true author of the "Book of Mormon"?
PLOREM.

ANSWER.—The "Book of Mormon" is claimed by those who have investigated its author and origin critically to have been written by Solomon Spalding, who graduated at Dartmouth College in the year 1785. Spalding was a native of Ashford, Conn., and, two years after his graduation from college became a minister, preaching for several years. Then he retired from the pulpit and went into business at Cherry Valley, N. Y., and in 1809 came West and settled in Ohio. Three years later he went to Pittsburg and thence removed to Amity, Pa., where after a residence of two years, he died in 1816. He was the author of several novels, for which, however, he found no publisher, and his custom was to read these to his friends in manuscript. While he lived in Ohio he wrote quite a story to show that the Indians were the descendants of the lost tribes of Israel, a view then taken by many in accounting for the origin of the aborigines. This he named "Manuscript Found," and proposed to publish with it, as a preface or advertisement, a fictitious account of an early discovery in an Ohio Cave; and the work was announced in the year 1813. Mrs. Spalding published a statement, some years after her husband's death, declaring that in 1812 he placed the manuscript in a printing-office at Pittsburg, with which Sidney Ridgdon, then a young man of nineteen or twenty, was connected, that Ridgdon copied the manuscript; and that his possession of a copy was known to all in the printing-office, and was frequently mentioned by himself. The original manuscript was returned to Mr. Spalding, and his widow kept it till after the publication of the "Book of Mormon," when she sent it to Connecticut, in Ohio, where she and her husband had lived, and where it was publicly compared with the Book of Mormon, at a meeting composed in part of persons who remembered Spalding's work. The manuscript came into Smith's hands, and was published through Smith and Ridgdon being early associated in the Mormon movement.

WHAT IS PUBLIC WORSHIP?

Some go to church just for a walk;
Some to stare and laugh and talk;
Some go there to meet a friend,
Some there idle time to spend;
Some for general observation,
Some for private speculation;
Some to seek or find a lover,
Some a courtship to discover;
Some go there to use their eyes,
And newest fashions criticize.
Some to show their own smart dress,
Some their neighbors to assess.
Some to see a robe or bonnet,
Some to prize the trimming on it;
Some to learn the latest news,
That friends at home they may amuse.
Some to gossip false and true,
Sals hid with the sheltering pew;
Some go there to please the squire,
Some his daughters to admire;
Some the person go to fawn;
Some to lounge and some to yawn.
Some to claim the parish doles;
Some for bread and some for coals;
Some because it's thought genteel;
Some to vaunt their pious zeal.
Some to show how sweet they sing,
Show how loud their voices ring.
Some the preacher go to hear,
His style and voice to praise or jeer;
Some forgiveness to implore,
Some their sins to vaioish o'er.
Some to sit and doze and nod,
But few to kneel and worship God.

NUMBER VI.

FAYETTEVILLE, W. VA., JUNE 20th, '81.

We left Wooster, Ohio, the evening of the 13th, and arrived at Pittsburg, Pa., and went aboard one of those magnificent river boats that ply the between Pittsburg, Cincinnati, and Louisville. The boat left at 6 o'clock, and the ride down the Ohio river to Huntington, a distance of 306 miles, was a pleasant one. We took the train over the Chesapeake & Ohio R. R. at 1 o'clock A. M., arriving at Charleston, W. Va., about daybreak, and at the home of brother and sister Hays' for breakfast. It is needless to say we enjoyed the visit and kind reception.

Preached at night to an attentive congregation.

Charleston, the capital of W. Va., has improved some during the past eight years; but there is not that thrift and enterprise that characterizes the western towns. The capitol house is being enlarged and quite an extensive custom-house is in course of completion.

Friday the 24th, at 1 o'clock, we again boarded the train. Passing up the great Kanawha River Valley, we noticed that the harvesting of the golden grain had commenced. Kanawha Falls and the "Hawks Nest" were passed; arriving at Cotton Hill, we descended from the train and soon commenced the ascent of one of those rugged mountain roads so common in that section of country.

A kind reception at the home of brother D. Harschberger, who met us at the station, caused us to forget the result of the general shaking up we experienced, and after a good night's rest, we resumed our journey, with brother H. as our pilot, a drive of six miles took us to the home of wife's parents, — a happy meeting after a separation of nearly eight years. Sunday the 26th in company with our brother-in-law, J. F. Saeger, we went to Mead or Fork to attend the regular appointment of the Brethren. It was a joy to our soul to meet with the dear members once again, many of whom we regarded as our children in the Gospel faith, as it was in this part of West Virginia we lived for some years and labored in the Master's cause. Familiar faces greeted me; but some of those that we gave the farewell parting hand in years gone by were absent, gone to rest from their labors. We expect to tarry here for a few weeks and shall say something more concerning the church and country here in our next.

A Call.

"Hearken unto me, all ye people of the Lord, and do what I declare unto you." If ye love truth then read "Daniel's Vision" in No. 24 of present volume B. AT W., and learn to know of some of the abominations standing where they ought not. Also read the piece selected by M. C. N. in the same number and profit thereby; for the Word saith, "Be not unequal yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? And what communion hath light with darkness? And what concord hath Christ with Belial? Or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? For ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty; for the fashion of the world shall pass away but the Word of the Lord will endure forever, and by it we shall be judged.

Notice to the House-keepers of the Different Congregations of Northern District of Indiana.

By the consultation of a number of elders and others being present immediately after our return from Annual Meeting, it was agreed to call a meeting on the 29th of July, '81, to be held at the Big Grove Church in Solomon Creek congregation, Elkhart county, Indiana, two miles north of Milford Junction, to take in consideration the preliminaries of an arrangement of our Annual Meeting of 1882. It is urged that each congregation in said district be represented by one or more delegates.

Notes by the Way.

On the 2nd inst., wife and I boarded the train for Ashland, Ohio, to attend the Annual Meeting. On the morning of the 4th we landed safely at the place of the great ingathering of loved ones.

I need not give a description of that tabernacle and surroundings. Others have done that in glowing language.

In the evening we were conveyed by my dear cousin and brother in Christ, George Shidler, to his hospitable home.

On the 5th attended Sabbath-school at Maple Grove. Had a good time. The Brethren have a good school at this place. Brother Alpheus Dickey is Superintendent, assisted by a corps of officers, who are all noble workers.

After Sunday-school we listened to an interesting sermon delivered by brother George W. Crisp. In the evening returned to Ashland and heard brother M. M. Eshelman deliver a good discourse in the Presbyterian church. Spent the week in the business of the A. M., until Friday evening, when the A. M. closed.

On Saturday morning 11th, left Ashland en route for home. Stopped off at Tiffin, Ohio, and attended a Love-feast in Green Spring congregation. Had a pleasant meeting with the Brethren at this place, but the spectators were very ill-behaved in the main.

On the 12th at 3 P. M. met at the Brethren's meeting-house at Sugar Grove near my brother's, David Wise. Had a happy time. Met many 11 friends and acquaintances.

Monday 13th, spent in visiting until 7 P. M., when we again boarded the train, and on the 14th at 2 P. M. landed at Cerro Gordo, Ill. Stopped at the Love feast at this place. Had a good meeting. Met next morning at 9 A. M. Had an interesting farewell meeting. Spent the afternoon visiting among the members. Eld. John Metzger and sister Mary Heoricks, (relict of our late lamented Joseph Heoricks) were among those we visited. Had meeting in the evening in Cerro Gordo—a good meeting. Next morning boarded the train at 6:15; and at 2:40 P. M. landed at Mulberry Grove. Found all well. Thank God.

Yours,

JOHN WISE.

From J. M. Ridenour.—Our Love-feast is past. It was indeed a season of enjoyment and consolation—a looking forward to the time when we can partake of the "great supper." Wm. Hemberry and E. P. Strickler were present, and labored earnestly in the cause of Truth and to the demolishing of Satan's kingdom. May the good seed sown fall upon good soil and produce abundantly in the Master's kingdom. Six were added to the church by baptism. Hope they may prove faithful to the cause they have espoused and become earnest laborers in the Master's kingdom. We think good impressions have been made up on others. Oh may they soon turn in and be saved. We think the meeting had the effect upon the members in uniting them more in union, love, and fellowship.—Garrison, Iowa.

From J. D. Haightlin.—I just returned from the Panther Creek Love-feast, (Iowa). The attendance of members was quite large; but being a very busy time there were comparatively few spectators. We had a very pleasant and hope, profitable meeting. Brother Yoder, of Shelby county and Musselman, of Cedar county, with ministers from adjoining churches did the ministerial work. Frequent and heavy rains made bad roads and backward farming. Health, good. Thank God.

From Daniel P. Shively.—Our church (Pipe Creek church, where the Walker and Miller discussion was held) is still progressing finely. We have increased our membership about one half since the discussion. Nine were baptized at our council meeting last Thursday, making thirteen for this Spring, and the church at this time is in love and union. Expect to hold a communion on the 11th of this month. The health in this community is good. We feel thankful to God for the blessings bestowed upon us.—Peru, Miami Co., Ind.

From David Brower.—I will inform the readers of the B. AT W. that our Communion meeting is past, and no doubt will be remembered for a long time. We had very good meetings during the time. Members were much encouraged and edified. Sinners were warned to flee the wrath to come. Many tears were shed. The weather was very rainy, yet we had many hearers, and with many of them the order and attention was very good. There were no accessions by baptism and only two by letter, yet we think the Lord was with us during the meeting. We divided our area of the church which had been called "The Willamette Valley Church" into two arms, naming the arm of the church in Linn county "Lebanon," and this arm of the church in which we reside, we have named the "Salem Church," including all the members in all the counties in this valley south of Linn county, and the elders of the Salem church having the oversight of both churches. We wish it to be understood that we have dropped the former name "Willamette Valley Church" entirely. During said meeting we held a choice here in the Salem church for two visiting or deacon brethren, and the lot fell upon Brethren Samuel Foreney and Joseph Kimball. These brethren were installed into their office in the presence of the entire congregation, and the scene was a very solemn one indeed. Hope these Brethren will be faithful in their calling.

Yesterday morning after breakfast nearly all the members took their leave from us, giving us the parting hand; some going south, some north, some east, and some west. There were about fifty-five members present at our meeting. If the weather had been favorable we would have had more members and many more spectators. As it was, my barn was well filled a part of the time. The meeting was held at our residence.

On Sunday morning at 9 o'clock our Sunday-school met here in our barn, which was well conducted by our Superintendent, and made it very interesting indeed. The interest manifested by teacher and scholars is very commendable. The singing, the asking and answering questions, and the recitation of verses committed to memory and recited were heart-cheering. There being some six or eight nutes present, they were formed into a class after the others were through; and my oldest son, who is a mute, read and explained some Scripture to them in the sign language, which made it very solemn. Upon the whole, we had a blessed time during our meeting—Salem, Oregon.

From J. H. Miller.—Arrived home safely from Annual Meeting. We left on Monday, on a special train with some two hundred brethren. On that train were members from eighteen to eighty-nine years of age. A brother from North Manchester by the name of Henry Penrod nearly 60 years old, was sitting in the same seat with his father, who is 89 years old. He stood the trip remarkably well for a man of his age. It is said Indiana is ahead on the Danish Mission, and had, perhaps, as many members at Conference as any other State. And what State can say they had an older brother than the Hoosier State?—Millfoot, Ind.

From John Metzger.—I left my home June 17th, en route for St. Louis; stopped with elder A. S. Leer at Morrisonville, Ill. Saturday morning the 18th I started for St. Louis, and arrived there at 11 A. M. Stopped with some friends. They soon told me that they had no place to hold meeting. I told them I thought there would be a door opened that we could have some meetings. Saturday evening we went to where the Salvation army had their meeting. The leading man of the meeting requested me to speak some. I spoke about ten minutes; tried by the help of the Lord to interest the people as best I could. At the close of this meeting the leading man of the meeting came to me, and requested me to preach at that place on Sunday at 3 o'clock; I consented. Had a good, interesting meeting. On Monday afternoon we went to the river, and I baptized four,—two of the Salvation army converts, visited some females, and preached to the people.

On Wednesday, the 22nd, Bro. Myers, a young man, and myself went to take a look at Lafayette Park. It is a delightful place. There are many large beds of flowers to be seen. After seeing all, we stepped on a street car, and went to see the court-house. We ascended the stairs until we got up in the dome, then went out on the porch. Here we could see all over the city. I had to think of Jesus; when he saw the wickedness in Jerusalem, he wept over the city. Christians should weep over St. Louis, seeing drunkards and all kinds of wickedness going on; yet there may be good, warm-hearted people in the city that are seeking Jesus. On the morning of the 23rd, we went to see the water-works; then took the street cars, and went to see the city cemetery. Saw where the rich and the poor are buried. Thousands of dollars are paid for fine and costly tomb-stones, and many fine vaults are built; but many of the poor have no vault or tomb-stone.

On Thursday afternoon we went to the river again; four more were baptized, making eight in all, and one more applicant, with prospects for more.

Friday morning the 24th, left St. Louis en route for Jefferson county, Ill. Stopped at Mt. Vernon. Baptized one. Monday morning started, and arrived there at 8 P. M. Found all well. Thank the Lord.

LATER—June 28th.—We had our Communion meeting June 14th and 16th. It was a feast long to be remembered. The attendance was large and good order prevailed. We were well supplied with ministering brethren,—elder John Wise and M. J. McClure, from Christiana County, Ill., and the brethren from the adjoining churches were with us. The Word was preached with power. General health is good. At this time plenty of rain. Prospects very good for a good crop of all kinds, except wheat.—will fall short this year.—Cerro Gordo, Ill.

From T. D. Lyon.—Met in the Urbana church, Ill., June 16th. Held a Communion meeting with the brethren and sisters. Had a good time, as the attendance was large and the order most excellent. The weather was all that could be desired. The next day attended a meeting of the sisters in the interests of the Orphan's Home. The sisters appointed as selectors for the Home were the cause of said meeting. It was opened by singing by an 253 and prayer by Bro. John Barnhart, who has the "Home" at heart, which was manifested by the fervency of soul with which he pleaded the cause, and invoked the blessing of God upon the institution. Here we had to leave for home, as train time was fast approaching, and did not hear the sisters' report.—Urbana, Ill.

Our Communion is among the things of the past. James K. Gish and K. Heckman were the ministers from a distance. The attendance was large, and the order most excellent, which speaks well for our community. Through the remins of brother John Y. Snavely we had the pure "fruit of the vine"; so we were made to feel good that we not only had unleavened bread, but an unleavened cup, to represent the broken body and shed blood of our crucified Redeemer. One was received into the church by baptism, A' together joyous. Amen.—Hudson, Ill., June 23.

From John Knisley.—As an item of news will say we have very good health in our neighborhood, and good growing weather; harvest at hand. Last Sunday, the 26th inst., two more were added to our number by baptism. Thank the Lord. May they hold out to the end.—Plymouth, Ind.

From F. C. Myers.—Since our returning from the wild. On the 15th of this month brother John Metzger came to this city to carry on the work of the Lord. On the 19th he preached the Word with great force. On the 20th we retired to the Mississippi river. While there we were made to rejoice by seeing four buried with Christ in baptism. On the 23rd we were made happier than before; we retired to the same place, and saw four more buried beneath the wave, to rise in newness of life. One of these was a young man whom I have known for a number of years. God has as good kept him from his enemy. The interest is deep. There are more applicants here waiting until the next time. We do not know what we would do if it were not for our dear brother Metzger; for he takes such an interest in coming, and he is thought so much of. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters.—St. Louis, Mo.

From John Knisley.—I wish to inform you, dear readers of the B. at W., that since wife and I came back from Pennsylvania, which was on the 10th of December, 1880, we have received, by baptism, thirty-three members, and reclaimed three. We hope and pray that they will hold out to the end. Last Sunday, (June 19th) brother W. C. Teet r, from Mt. Morris, Ill., preached a very good sermon for us. In the afternoon he talked to the Sunday-school. May G d bless him.—Plymouth, Ind.

From J. S. Snowberger.—Health in this part of Nebraska, is good. Crops are promising for a large yield, if nothing happens from now till harvest. On the 9th quite a hail-storm passed through the north-eastern part of York county, Nebraska, destroying all the crops where it passed through, demolishing windows and doing general damage. We had our council meeting on the 11th; visit reported, everything went off right, and all is peace and love. Thank we can enjoy a love-feast in deadland in truth on the 18th, the Lord willing. Our love and many good wishes for the B. at W. Hope it may be the means of doing much good.

The King of Dahomy, Western Africa, continues the custom of annually sacrificing some of his subjects. Last December several hundred of them were cruelly killed.

HOW I GOT WELL.

BEING ignorant, to a great extent, of the law governing my being, I suffered for several years from that nauseating disease—dyspepsia, which greatly demoralized my very being by its touch. Being conscious that it was only the result arising from the transgression of the violation of law, and which consciousness I received from a noted physician I then turned my attention more fully to the philosophy of Christ which is in favor of law. I soon learned that much of lunatic ailments and lunatic suffering arose from living too far from Christ's law. And suffering from bodily disease incurs spiritual hindrance, a great obstacle to a growth in a divine life so acceptable and desirous to every true child of God. Mental suffering follows physical suffering. And in the majority of cases to relieve the spiritual, the physical must first be remedied.

A visit to "Our Home" among the hills of Western New York resulted in placing me at a elevated plane to health. I learned there that "A sick Christian, would he have Jesus cure him, must bring into service his reason, common judgment, will, his passions, emotions, affections and intuitive perceptions. These become the place at the disposal of and control of his Master." This was a lesson, a page torn to the philosophy of Christ which illumined my mind such as it never was before. I became more conscious of my violation of law and then proceeded to use the best agencies and influences which are generally considered healthful, and by so doing Christ worked in me and I confidently relied upon him, having an inner consciousness that his philosophy obeyed strictly, would insure health. When Christ was upon earth he wielded a power over human diseases, healed the sick, restored the blind and lame, etc. And now that he is risen should his power on earth be less potent? I was made to feel that it was not, and with that faith in Christ I changed my method of living, and by a strict compliance to the laws of life and health and the laws of Christ I became restored in body, my mind has put on new vigor, and I find my affections, my desires and my whole life so changed that I yet shall or may become whole. I find it now more easily done, and far more nicely divine to say, "whether we eat or drink or whatever we do, we will do all to the honor and glory of God." I learned that to get well I must reduce my labors to a system, must not overtax the body nor the brain. Should have regular hours for all things. Should eat proper foods and at regular intervals, and instead of leaving my places of business and hurriedly eating a meal in two minutes, thirty minutes should be brought into requisition; in short, my whole life, labor, and habit must be changed.

I accepted this change; though severe at first, it has made me a new man. I began by rising at 5 A. M., retiring at 9 P. M., and changing from three meals to two per day. Foods—I discarded pork and lard entirely, using occasionally some beef, fresh fish or fowl. Graham or brown bread, cereals, fruits and vegetables a plenty. For drink, pure water, and but little of that while eating, allowing the salivarian glands to furnish liquid enough to moisten the food while masticating it.

Occupying thirty minutes to eat my meal and then when once done eating, allowed no food of any kind to enter the stomach until the next meal, thus giving my stomach a chance to rest. Spices, pepper, etc. were absent from the table. Plain, simple foods only used, and by this simple or plain method of living, I found disease giving way, and health returning, and to-day I know nothing of dyspepsia. By reducing my labors, both of a physical and mental nature, to a perfect system, I can perform as much and easier. By the change in my dietics I have better appetite, eat with better relish, and by this strict compliance to law regulating my laboring, studying, eating, sleeping I find myself comparatively well, and as a result, good health, happiness follows. Those agencies worked silently but wrought great changes, and now I feel more and more under the guidance of the Holy Spirit and recognize Jesus as the Great Physician of soul and body and will endeavor to glorify God in the body and in the spirit, which can only be done successfully when the body is in healthful condition. B.

A FOOLISH CUSTOM.

ONE of the most absurd of all foolish customs is that of inviting a crowd of friends or strangers up to the bar 'to take something at my expense.' Some one has sensibly said:—

"Now, boys, if you want to be generous, and treat each other, why not select some other place besides the liquor shop? Suppose as you go by the post-office, you remark, 'I say my dear fellow, come in and take some stamps; stamps will cost no more than drinks all around. Or go to the clothier's and say, 'Boys come in and take a box of collars.' Why not treat to groceries by the pound as well as liquors by the glass? Or take your comrades to a cutler's and say, 'I'll stand a good pocket-knife all around.'" This would be thought a strange way of showing friendship; but would it not be better than to offer to your friends a maddening, poisonous, deadly draught?

A WORD OF CAUTION.

WE can scarcely take up a daily paper, without reading of the accidental drowning of incautious persons. Hence we are constrained to repeat what is said, over and over again during the Summer season, and seems to need constant reiteration: "Don't go into the water, when you are heated."

Within a few days, cases of drowning have been very frequent, and it would certainly seem that in most of the cases reasonable care would certainly have prevented fatality. On these extremely warm days there is a great temptation to seek relief from the intense heat by a leap into the cool and refreshing water.—While at best the relief is but temporary, the danger is too serious to be overlooked.

The best time in the day for bathing purposes is in the morn'ing. If that is inconvenient, it may be prudent to bathe in the evening, provided that for an hour or so previous to entering the water the body has had sufficient rest for the blood to have cooled. Swimming however, especially for persons indulging in any exertion through the day, is not absolutely safe 'except in the morning.

At any time and under all circumstances it is absolute dangerous to enter the water while the body is in a state of perspiration; nor does it alter the case much to take off the clothing and sit in the air in order to cool the body. A little patience with the weather, and a little common sense reflection on the part of those who enjoy swimming, would doubtless prevent many of the sad drowning accidents which occur during every Summer.—Zion's Watchman.

The Rev. Dr. Tiffany in a recent sermon stated that if the grain used in the United States, in the year 1875, in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors, has been converted into flour, and baked into four-pound loaves, there would have been a sufficient number to have given one to every family in the country forty-seven weeks of the year.

A STRONGER temperance sermon will never be preached than that which an unfortunate woman of Cape Girardeau, Mo., recently delivered before her husband in a bar room. Setting a covered dish, which she had brought with her, upon the table, she said: "Presuming, husband, that you are too busy to come home to dinner, I have brought you yours," and departed. With a forced laugh he invited his friend to dine with him; but on removing the cover from the dish, found only a slip of paper, on which was written: "I hope you will enjoy your meal; it is the same your family have at home."

LET children have plenty of sleep. As sleep is the period for replenishing the system, for restoring the cells wasted by the nervous activity of the day,—the period when the processes of digestion reach their final result, by identifying the new nutriment with the system in the place of the waste of the tissues,—it follows that children need more sleep than grown persons. Many who might be plump, active and happy, if given sleep sufficient, are flabby and sallow, weary and fretful, because they do not sleep enough to allow the demand of the system for nutrition to be supplied. Children often feel it very hard that they are sent to bed early, while the grown people sit up and enjoy themselves long after they are in bed. If any children chance to read this paragraph, to that we would say: You need more sleep than your parents, because you have to grow and they do not. You need to use a great deal of the food you eat in growing larger and stronger; if you consume it all in activity, you will not have enough to grow with. Therefore you ought to sleep a great deal. Let the body rest, if you would grow strong.

From E. A. No human production gave me more real joy than his "Problem of Human Life." I have read the writings of all the most learned skeptics, and for some time taken the "Princeton Review" and hence I was all the better prepared to enjoy the book.—Plattsburg, Mo.

KNODLE.—In Mt. Morris, Ill., July 2, 1881, Mrs. Barbara Knodle, aged 85 years, 10 months and 4 days.

The deceased was born in Pennsylvania; moved to Maryland, and in 1841 settled in Ogle Co., Ill., where she remained until her death. She was a member of the M. E. church for over forty years. Funeral discourse by M. M. Eshelman to an appreciative audience, July 3rd.

SHIDLER.—In the Salimony church, Huntington Co., Ind., Jan. 20, 1881, Bro. Amos Shidler, aged 20 years, 10 months and 20 days. Funeral services in the Brethren's meeting-house at Lancaster on the 5th Sunday of May by the writer, assisted by H. Wyke and J. Eikenberry. Funeral was postponed on account of sickness of the widow, who, together with three children, is left, mourning the loss of one dearly loved.
J. W. SOUTHWELL.

JOHN GABLE.

EMMERT.—In the Panther Creek church, June 18, 1881, sister Mary E. Emmert, daughter of Bro. Christian and sister Susa Long, aged 45 years and 11 months.

She leaves four children to mourn the loss of a kind mother. The church has lost a faithful member, but we mourn not as those who have no hope. As her life has been one of severe trials and afflictions, we hope it is her eternal gain.

Funeral services by the Brethren from John 5: 25 to a large assembly.
SAMUEL BADGER.

LINT.—In the Meyersdale congregation, Somerset Co., Pa., of consumption and dropsy, sister Elizabeth, wife of Bro. G. C. Lint and mother of Eld. C. G. Lint.

The following was read at her funeral by Bro. J. R. Lichty, June 27, at 10 A. M., which was very largely attended and very appropriately improved by Elder Jonathan Kelso and Joel Gaagy from Rev. 14: 13—

Elizabeth Hochstetler was born in what is now known as Greenville township, Somerset Co., Pa., April 11th, 1812, and was intermarried with G. C. Lint, March 6, 1832, when they settled down in what was then known as Myers' Mills, (now Meyersdale) where she spent the remainder of her life, which closed in peace, June 25, 1881, at 3:15 P. M., at the advanced age of 69 years, 3 months and 14 days, leaving her aged companion with whom she lived in holy wedlock over 40 years, and 8 children, with a large circle of friends to mourn their loss. She was the mother of 12 children, 5 sons and 7 daughters; 2 sons and 2 daughters preceded her in death.

She was received into the Brethren church in the Summer of 1834, baptized by Eld. Peter Cober, 47 years ago, and lived a consistent member of her faith. Saw all her children that came to man and womanhood, with her beloved companion (who formerly stood identified with the German Reformed church) baptized into the same faith with her.

She was confined 13 weeks, during all of which time she never gave a murmur, but with Christian resignation she bore it all. She was rational up to the time of her dissolution. Peace to her ashes.
A BROTHER.

NEWCOMER.—In the George's Creek church, in Fayette Co., Pa., Bro. Joseph Newcomer, aged 59 years, 3 months and 2 days. Disease, falling ill.

Bro. Joseph was subject to severe attacks of fits from his youth, yet was a noble-minded man, who was not affected. His temper was of that innocent quiet kind, that is pleasing to all. He was a regular attendant upon the worship of the Living God; and was a consistent member of the church for over 35 years. He left a family of wife and 8 children to mourn their loss, which is his great and eternal gain.

The funeral services were largely attended; discourse to an appreciative audience by the Brethren from John 5: 28, 29.
JOS. I. COVEN.

A Beloved Companion Gone.

To Bro. J. M. Eby of Nora Springs, Iowa:—

Your card of recent date, announcing the death of your beloved companion, filled my heart with sadness, my eyes with tears, and with falling white I read the sad message to my family. Having in by-gone years been companions in sorrow, we thought, "Was it not enough? Must it still come more heavy?"

Yes, dear Bro., we enjoyed many happy seasons together, but never more so than when, as companions in sorrow, we endeavored to cheer and encourage each other. O how thrillingly sweet at this moment does memory bring to me your voice, dear brother, uttering words of comfort in my ears, making my poor, sad heart pulsate with hope, and the inherent sensation of being encouraged and strengthened for the hard battles of this inconstant life, I desire to reciprocate, and be assured, I can do so from the heart.

Be assured that whilst the loss of your beloved companion brings heavy sorrow to your heart, there are those who to a very large degree share that sorrow with you.

But can we not get a little sweet out of this extreme bitter? Ah, yes! through a loving Father's inspired volume, our ears are greeted by the voice of sovereign grace, "All things work together for good to those who love God."

Comforting thought! that even the afflictions and sorrows of this life may become sanctified to our good. The Christian constancy of your departed wife should give you strength to still contend and labor for God, in the hope of meeting her in the glorious splendor of immortality—eternal life.

The soul-cheering doctrine of future recognition is taught in our Savior's transfiguration on the mount, and in other places in the inspired volume, should powerfully influence you in regard to hope, and keep you from being overcome by over much sorrow. It is true, this life may seem more gloomy and cheerless to you, than it did when the chief sharer in your sorrows was still by your side, but how eminently sweet is the thought that it won't be long.

Let your heart be set on correct principles, and though, like it is generally the case with true men, you may get still sicker of the world and its vanities, yet in the distant dawn you can feast your eyes on the dazzling beauty of the blush of the immortal morn, and behold the sweet by-and-by rapidly approaching. Though wifeless and motherless, though the softening influence of woman is entirely lost in your family, yet gently sweet comes the voice of the heavenly Dove.—Be patient; ere long you shall greet her at home,—the home of immortal bloom.

The stillness of death is terrible, but the joyous and refreshing morn of immortal life, filled with the anthem of the heavenly songsters, will atone for it all. Turn to hymn 362. Let his sentiments cheer thee.

A ROMAN Catholic paper says, that had the church retained all her children, there should now be in the United States from 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 members of that church, whereas there are now less than 7,000,000. It attributes the great loss to the influence of the public schools.

A SEA MONSTER.—Captain Larsen, of the bark Honor, which arrived in Galveston a short time ago, reports, that while about half-way between Madeira and St. Vegas, Canary Islands, he passed one of the most remarkable fish that he ever saw. This marine monster is described as being about forty feet in length, with four large fins, or wings arranged in a row down its back. These fins varied in length, according to the reckoning of Captain Larsen, from eighteen to twenty-two feet and in width from six to nine feet. At the time of its being sighted, the fish was about a quarter of a mile to windward of the vessel, and was lashing the water with its tail and wings, evidently in combat with some other monster.

THERE has been an extended discussion in England on the question whether the Revised Version can be legally read in the churches of the Establishment. The general opinion is that it cannot be so read. Two legal journals give long opinions in this effect. Considerable contention will likely grow out of this subject, for which however there is no necessity if people will use a little good judgment.

For the Brethren at Work.

THE SELF-RIGHTEOUS.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

There was a class of men who lived in days
Of grace, who figured largely on the earth,
Whose boasted theory was faith alone
In Jesus Christ and his atoning blood,
Regarding not his word, his sacred will,
His covenant of grace on certain terms.
They lived on creeds, the doctrines and commands

Of men, and fed on righteousness their own.
The plain commands of God they stubbornly
Refused, and in their place ordained them rites,
And practices which they observed. They lived
Such moral lives, at least the greater part
Of them, that naught of evil could be said,
Regarding kindness and moral worth.
Their membership in some sectarian church
They held, attending worship regularly,
Wherein the siren goddess Fashion reigned;
And having zeal amazingly, they sent
Their heralds into foreign lauds to preach
The Gospel in their creed, to multiply
Their membership and propagate their faith,
So certain did they feel that they were right.
There was another class who formerly
Were right in ordinances they observed
According to the letter of the law
Of Christ, whose hearts were full of worldliness,

Of selfishness and self-aggrandizement,
Whose cold formality and wantonness
Exposed external from within by signs
The falseness of their hearts. Their faith was like Sourness brass, or like a sounding horn,
Strong in themselves, but lacking charity
That heaven essential gift of godliness.
And others still, with sanctimonious airs,
According to their creed, returned not ill
For ill, nor went to law, but calmly bore Ill-treatment from their fellow men. So had They hope by thus debasing self, that they Eternal life would gain, although instead Of keeping God's commands, they kept their own
Traditions, ordinances, rites and rules.
And thus they lived in faith, and strong in hope,
And died in faith and hope, undoubting faith,
In all good conscience toward God; they crossed
The chilly stream and took their "chambers in
The silent halls of death." Eternity Rolled on; they slept in peace, and in their works
Which followed them, had confidence secure.
The time arrived, the trump of God was blown,
The righteous Judge appeared and called them forth
With other nations to the great assize.
Forthwith they came rejoicing, strong in hope
And faith, though destitute of charity,
With certainty of acceptance, there
To meet with approbation of their works.
And when the Judge gave sentence in their case,
How were they struck with consternation dire

In disappointment sore they hardly could Believe his word, so certain had they been Until the very last, that they were right,
And would that day with ac-ception meet.
Dejected thins, you hear them answer him:
"Why Judge, you must be wrong! How can it be
As you decide? Did we not eat and drink
In thy great name, and in thy name eat out Devils? Have we not in thy holy name Done many wondrous works? How can it be
That thou decidest thus?" Then hear the Judge reply:

"I never knew you; go depart from me
Ye cursed workers of iniquity.
Not every one that saith to me, Lord, Lord,
Shall enter into heaven's kingdom pure,
But he that doth my holy Father's will
Who is in heaven." So had they lived on earth
And died in serving God in ignorance;
They know not God and were not known of him.

For the Brethren at Work.

THE COURSE OF CIVILIZATION.

BY ALPHONSO G. NEWCOMER.

IN looking over the history of the past, we find that men and empires first appeared in the East.
Tradition confirms this; the Bible corroborates it; all human records agree to this fact. But human records are perishable and are ever perishing. From the few that are left us, we learn that the East was the cradle of mankind; that there empires rose, flourished, and fell; that there nations sprung up, and thence were scattered over the earth. We can learn these general facts, but of too often, we can learn no more. Whole dynasties have risen and have passed away, and now there is left us hardly a trace of their former existence. Kings have lived and ruled whose names are now unknown, and whose deeds are forgotten. Mighty cities have been built, and there now remains in their crumbling ruins, the merest vestige of their former glory. But from the few scattered links of this much broken chain of ancient history, we gather that civilization also, as well as men and empires, appeared first in the East. This is natural. Man is a progressive being;
and if he found his first home in the Orient, there should we expect him first to attain to some degree of civilization. And thus we find it.

Every nation, about whose origin there can be thrown the least doubt, has claimed a great antiquity. China seems to surpass all others in this respect; and, with Egypt, appears to have the most evidence to support these claims. The asserted duration of this empire is 280, 000 years. But this is fabulous; and, indeed, is little believed among the Chinese themselves. The first dawn of authentic history was in 2153 B. C. At this time there arose three successive rulers, who are styled the "Three Em-perors," and who are said to be the inventors of all the arts and accommodations of life. At this period Chinese civilization seems to have been at its height, and the empire certainly was in a most prosperous condition. Of its previous progress and its rise to this position little is known. Its history before this, is involved in much obscurity, and contains so many myths that it is impossible to separate the true from the false. But since then we find that there has been little change. Indeed, Chinese civilization and Chinese government have maintained a stability and uniformity unequalled in the annals of nations. Since China reached its height, many countries have appeared, have reached far greater heights and have declined; while it has hardly changed.

But its history is not uneventful. It, too, has been torn by intestine factions and vexed by external foes.
Yet, through all, it has preserved its government, its civilization, and its individuality. It has, however, changed.
For more than 4000 years it gradually, almost imperceptibly, declined. Of late, perhaps, some advancement has been made, but it does not stand to day, where, to all appearances, it stood in the thirtieth century before Christ. And yet, China never fell into barbarism.
But other civilizations have so far surpassed its own that, shut in from the outer world, influencing none and influenced by none, it has been unheeded, forgotten, and has almost lost its place among civilized nations.

While China was beginning to decline, another country was rising whose civilization was destined to be as great, perhaps, as that of its predecessor. This country was India. About 3000 years before Christ, or about the time that China attained its greatest eminence, the ancient Hindoos crossed the river Indus and gained possession of the entire peninsula. The nation made rapid advancement in the various arts and sciences and in literature, and before long arrived at quite a degree of civilization.
At just what time it reached its height not known—somewhere about the twen-the fifth century before Christ, or about a hundred years later than China. But at this period it seems that no more progress was made. At any rate its golden days were past and it was steadily growing dim before the brighter light's appearing.

The next one to flash forth upon the world was Assyria. We find it at the zenith of its power and magnificence under Semiramis, the daughter in law of the famous Nimrod the builder of the city of Nineveh. This remarkable woman added to the dominion of the kingdom by the conquest of Ethiopia and the greater part of Africa. She it was who built the mighty Babylon, that city which stood for 1500 years, a picture of grandeur and magnificence now unknown, and a monument of the power and glory of ancient Assyria. But the height of this country's career, though bright, was brief. With the designation of Semiramis, which occurred about 2150 B. C., it immediately began to decay; and this process continued for 1400 years when it went to ruin.

About the time that Assyrian civilization was at its meridian, another country was rising in another continent, Egypt was entering upon its historic age under king Menes. For 700 years this country made steady progress, until 1491 B. C. when Sesostris succeeded to the throne. This mighty king conceived the design of conquering the world. He vanquished nation after nation, until, says Herodotus, the Egyptian Empire extended from the Danube even beyond the Ganges, and included all of Africa. At this time Egypt was at the highest pitch of its power. The period of a country's greatest power is not necessarily the period of its highest civilization. Yet this is generally the case. It was so with Assyria, and so we find it with Egypt. During the reign of Sesostris, Egyptian civilization reached a height hitherto unparalleled. But under succeeding reigns the empire, together with its civilization, began to decline, and in less than 1000 years, fell before the Persians under Cambyses.

While civilization in Egypt was slowly decaying, it was again gaining strength in Asia. From the ruins of fallen Assyria, Babylon, Nineveh and Media arose. These were consolidated, and merged into the Persian Empire 536 B. C. The ancient Assyrian civilization had not been wholly extinguished, and the smoldering embers were fanned into a flame brighter, but briefer than the former one. For this brilliant Persian Empire lasted but 200 years, when it fell a prey to Alexander the Great.

And now a mighty change was to take place. Thus far the history of the oriental nations has been a history of despots and dynasties. But a nation was rising, whose government gave that individual freedom so necessary for the proper growth and development of civilization. For "political liberty," says Swinton, "means intellectual liberty," and intellectual liberty means intellectual progress. The civilization of the ancient despots of the East was characterized by unchangeableness; that of the rising democracy by progress. The architecture of the Egyptians was marked by vastness and sublimity. Their palaces were pictures of "gloomy grandeur." Their temples, monuments, and tombs present spectacles that excite awe rather than admiration. So also in sculpture, they aimed at the colossal; they never reached the beautiful. And in their paintings the distinguishing feature is brilliancy of coloring; they never attained true excellence. This was left for succeeding nations, and how well did they accomplish it!

The Persian Empire in its glory stood alone. It had a powerful rival that was undoubtedly the cause of its brief existence. This rival was Greece, by which the great change in the character of civilization was inaugurated. The grand age of this country was the age of Pericles—a period of fifty years between 480 and 430 B. C. Then literature reached its full development, and Pericles, from whom the age was named, was one of the most famous of ancient orators. In architecture they reached a degree of excellence that was entirely without precedent, and it is said that in sculpture they attained absolute perfection. But Greece, too, was destined to fall. Weakened by the Peloponnesian War and the various civil strifes that followed, it became an easy prey to Philip of Macedon. But finally Macedonia and Greece were both swallowed up by a still greater power—Rome.

The ambition of rising Rome was unbounded. She conquered country after country until she became in truth the proud mistress of the world. But, though successful against foreign foes, she was long rent by struggling factions within; until finally Octavius found himself at the head of the most powerful empire the world had ever known. He assumed the title of Augustus Cæsar, and ruled successfully for forty-five years. This was at the beginning of the Christian era. Then Rome reached the highest pinnacle of its power. But under succeeding reigns it declined, and in less than 500 years, perished. In the year 476 the barbarian hordes of the North swept over it and completed its dissolution.

Thus was extinguished the light of ancient civilization; and the world was left in darkness. Long did it struggle in the midnight and anarchy of the Dark Ages; it struggled and found no light. For 600 years it seemed that the sun of civilization had set forever; and so it was with the sun of ancient civilization. But a new and brighter one was to rise; it was rising even now. At the close of the 11th century, after these 600 years of gloom, its first rays fell upon Europe. The nations received a new impulse; they were quickened with a new life in the form of modern civilization, a civilization founded upon Christianity. And it has grown and developed until to day we see the grand results. All Europe feels its controlling power. And not Europe alone; America, too, has come under its influence. It has risen with a rapidity entirely unprecedented, and to day the New World bids fair to surpass the Old.

In looking back over the course of civilization, we find that it has never been from east to west. The first nations that felt its influence were China and India. These were soon followed by Assyria whose civilization was marked by its rapid rise and fall. It next appears in Africa; and Egypt becomes the leading nation of the world. Europe is visited; and then follows "the glory that was Greece and the grandeur that was Rome." The destruction of the latter was the end of ancient civilization.

Hitherto, every nation that had come under its influence, had, after a brief exultation, declined, and, with the exception of China, perished. But now, through the obscurity of the Dark Ages, there was struggling into existence a civilization that has steadily advanced for 800 years and has known no decline. This is the modern civilization that sprung up in Europe about the end of the eleventh century, and there grew and flourished until it has pervaded every nation on the continent. It has reached America, and upon our own shores, flourishes equally well. This is not the unchanging civilization of China and India, nor the brilliant one of Assyria and Persia, nor the majestic one of Egypt; not the glorious one of Greece, nor the grand one of Rome; but it is modern civilization, powerful, progressive, and truly great. It has never yet declined, but it makes constant progress, and rapidly spreads from nation to nation. In our own land its short existence has been attended with a prosperity that augurs for it a grander culmination than the world has ever witnessed.

We can now look back through 5000 years and behold the westward course of the sun of civilization. Beginning on the western shore of the Pacific, it lights up successively China, India, Assyria, Egypt, Greece, and Rome. After a brief period of gloom, it bursts forth upon Europe with a greater splendor. It darts its rays across the Atlantic and they fall upon the New World. The light has spread across the continent until it rests again upon the shores of the Pacific. It has passed around the globe; the cycle is complete; and now it sheds its light upon our land. We feel its brightening beams. May they never grow dim, but ever brighten and be diffused over the world until every nation on this broad earth shall feel the combined influence of Christianity and civilization.

PLEASURES OF KNOWLEDGE.

BY ANGIE YANZEA.

HOW excellent and manifold are the works of the Lord! in wisdom has he made them all.

We, the creation of God's own hand, in his own image, and in position only a little lower than the angels of heaven, are endowed with certain faculties capable of indefinite improvement. We are placed in this world, which is so profusely graced with our Maker's handiwork, for a grand and noble purpose, and it is our duty, as well as our privilege, to act up to the great object of our existence: to cultivate our minds, to improve our God-given talents, to acquire the knowledge which is necessary to enable us to act with honor and usefulness.

The high value of mental cultivation is a weighty motive which incites us to labor. It is this cultivation which distinguishes the savage from the civilized nation, which forms the principal difference between men as they appear in society, and which brings to us the richest enjoyment of intellectual companionship.

We are placed in a free and intelligent community, and right demands that we improve the God-given means of knowledge. Here the way to fame, usefulness, and happiness is open, and we all have the grand privilege of entering upon it with great prospects of a glorious reward for our labor, but if we neglect that golden opportunity we shall reap only barren regrets, when the harvest of our life shall come. Shakespeare, no doubt, felt the importance of the immediate seizure of this opportunity, when he said:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads us to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is boundless in shallows and in miseries."

We, while devoting our lives to the pursuit of knowledge, become habituated to a pleasure which is not reproachful, which is innocent and noble, which will cleave to us as long as we live and of which no human being is able to rob us. Is this not an ample reward for our incessant toil, our sleepless nights, and perplexed brain? Some persons who have not tasted of the sweet pleasure there is in knowledge, say that in the pursuit of it we experience nothing except hard and continual labor, but to the contrary, a vastly different result is realized. Often our happiest moments are when we are searching for the precious jewels of truth, the boundless truths, concealed in their hiding places, awaiting our discovery.

Our labor becomes our greatest delight. How incessantly have men worked and seemed to enjoy life in no other way. It is said that Burke was the most industrious and indefatigable of human beings, and Milton was at his studies with as much regularity as any business man, and as a consequence mastered all the knowledge of his time. An old adage says, "There is no excellence without great labor," and this may be said as truly of pleasure, for there is nothing in this world of any worth which has not labor for its price. The greatest achievements of knowledge have been wrought by the greatest efforts, and the love of knowledge is the great incentive which prompts us to put forth our utmost efforts. Sydney Smith in speaking of the love of knowledge has given us some cheering encouragement. He says: "If any man has embarked his life in pursuit of knowledge, let him go on without doubting or fearing the event, let him not be intimidated by the cheerless beginnings of knowledge, by the darkness from which she springs, by the difficulties which hover around her * * * by the want and sorrows which sometimes journey with her, but let him ever follow her as the angel that guards him and as the genius of his life. She will bring him at last into the light of day and exhibit him to the world comprehensive in acquirements, fertile in resources, rich in imagination, strong in reason, prudent and powerful above his fellows in all the relations and in all the offices of life." Is not this a beautiful summary of the fruit of a student's labor?

"Knowledge partakes of Infinity." Men have spent all their life-time prying into the hidden mysteries of nature and then at last have been forced to exclaim, "How narrow are the utmost bounds of human knowledge!" The more they have attempted to penetrate these mysteries the more vividly have they realized that there is but little known of this vast universe of hidden treasures, yet it is our privilege to rise higher and higher, and in this way widen our capacities for knowledge, for the higher we rise in it the greater, grander, and more sublime are the prospects it stretches out before us.

This world with its varied interests is a great field of knowledge. In it we may spend our whole life-time in study, and new beauties will continually rise to arrest and please our untiring minds. The different branches of knowledge which a student may pursue will afford him lasting happiness. The astronomer, for instance, views the heavenly bodies through his telescope and notices the different planets sailing in their silent majesty and seemingly hanging suspended in the air. The geologist descends into the earth and pries into its hidden treasures and is enabled thereby to ascertain, to a certain extent, its history. The botanist, by the aid of his microscope, examines and admires the garb of the earth, the plants and flowers, and notices how different they are, how numerous, and with what exquisite skill they are formed and adorned. Christ himself directed us to "consider the lilies of the field, how they grow," and surely we ought to find it a profitable and pleasant study. In all nature we may learn of the great goodness of our Creator, his matchless kindness and infinite wisdom, and after having directed our attention to the study of nature we are made to realize more fully how wonderful the works of the Lord are, and our hearts are raised to him in praise and thanksgiving for our pleasant surroundings.

Every human heart feels that knowledge is better than riches, and more precious than rubies, for riches may take wings and fly away, and we may be despoiled of our rubies; but no earthly being can rob us of our knowledge. In our efforts to gain knowledge we must remember that whatever we do we ought to do to the honor and glory of God, and that he will bring us into judgment for all that we do. With this understanding we may delve into the hidden mysteries as liberally as our natures crave or their opportunities offer.

We sometimes find that "knowledge puffeth up," but this is generally among the more ignorant class or among those who have not yet arrived at that period of their education when they are enabled to realize how little they know. An accurate knowledge naturally represses pride and promotes humility, as Taylor has said, "The diligent student of nature, as he gains a deeper and deeper knowledge of the great Book of God's wisdom, goodness, and power, necessarily sees all finite glory dwindling and fading, he must see himself, too depreciating in comparison with the extent and grandeur of the objects, which successively occupy his vast and illuminated field of view." The pride of knowledge is a gross evil which we ought to guard against; for "God raiseth the proud but giveth grace to the humble." We need divine aid to direct us to make the proper use of our knowledge.

Solomon says, "Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom; and with all thy getting get understanding;" "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, for her ways are ways of pleasantness and her paths are peace." Do we not see this verified every day, that, if we walk in wisdom's ways, her paths will be pleasant? It has been said that knowledge is not wisdom; it is only the raw material from which the beautiful fabric of wisdom is produced. Then we ought not to spend all our days in gathering material. The question may arise, How may we get wisdom? God only knows the way of it; but he has said, "The fear of the Lord is thy wisdom, and to depart from evil, thy understanding."

It is well for us when providing pleasures for this life to remember its termination and how swiftly and suddenly the end may come. "Here we have no continuing city." We are "pilgrims and strangers." We may ere we have well entered upon the enjoyments and labor of the present, be launched into the invisible and future world that awaits us. At the best, life is short. Is it not prudent then for us to direct our efforts into that course which will bring us lasting happiness and joy forever? We are not always prepared to realize the transitoriness of life. We are apt to care only for the present and take no thought for the future. It is not required of us to have this terrible and awful picture continually before us, but we must do our duty and live each day as if we were waiting for it and ready to encounter it.

There is a Book, the book of all books, the best and noblest that has ever honored and dignified the language of mortals and one that is within the reach of all. God is its author, and it came from heaven. It contains treasures that cannot be estimated by the perishable things of this world but by the enduring perfection of an eternal kingdom. This book teaches the way of life. A knowledge of it will lead us into unspeakable joys that are everlasting, and gives us a foretaste of heaven while upon earth. We read the Holy Word and find the truths as lovely and sublime as God himself and as unchangeable. Truly we may say, "It is pleasant to seek truth and it is beautiful to find it." The more we read of it the more we love it, and the more numerous are the beauties presented to

The Biblical student derives the only perfect pleasure that can be obtained in this world, and by a compliance with the requisites of the Word is enabled to enter into the haven of rest where pleasures have no end.

A CAUTION.

BY J. D. HAUGHTSLIN.

THERE are occasionally articles published in our papers wherein the writers quote, "Remember the Sabbath-day and keep it holy," and similar passages of the Old Testament Scriptures, as though they were a part of the new, or binding upon the Christian. Such articles are noted by the Sabbatarian and used with a telling effect against the cause of the Brethren, especially with those not posted in that direction. We caution our dear Brethren to remember that the New Testament is "the perfect law of liberty," (Jas. 1: 25) and that the old covenant (with all its time-bound institutions) is done away in Christ. 2 Cor. 3: 14.

This is not written to arouse controversy, but for the good of the cause. Remember our Master said, "New wine must be put into new bottles." Mark 2: 22. When Brethren write about the first day of the week and apply the law of the seventh day, their argument will go with the new wine in old bottles.

THAT MAN is a bad preacher in the pulpit who is not a good preacher out of it; and no man in the world has a right to stand up for God, if God has not adorned him with personal holiness. We should preach by what we are, as well as by what we say.

MEMORY.—It was Bishop Beveridge who, when dying, had forgotten his friends, even the face of his own wife, but who, when asked if he knew Christ, exclaimed, with intelligent and joyful emphasis: "O, yes, precious Savior! He is my only hope."

ONE watch set right will do to set many; but, on the other hand, one that goes wrong may be the means of misleading a whole neighborhood; and the same may be said of the example we each set to those around us.

HE that ruleth his own spirit is great, more than he that taketh a city;

SANCTIFICATION.

BY L. J. ROSENBERGER

THE above is a theme of Gospel teaching, and like many other subjects is variously mapped off by writers; owing to the education of the author's pen.

The term sanctification means the act of rendering sacred or holy.

To accomplish an end or state, God always employs means.

The means designated by heaven to accomplish the above happy state are worded variously by different writers of the New Testament.

Paul, in Eph. 5:26, speaks of a sanctification, or cleansing done by "the washing of water by the Word."

In Heb. 13:12 it is said that Jesus also, that he might sanctify the people with his own blood, suffered without the gate. In this text the sanctifying power is attributed to the blood of Christ.

Again Peter, in Acts 15:9, says, "God put no difference between them and us, purifying their hearts by faith." Here the purifying, or sanctifying power is attributed to faith.

But as inclusive of the above texts and their parallels, the Savior in his prayer to his Father says, "sanctify them through thy truth, thy Word is truth." John 17:17. 1 Peter 1:22, also adds "seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth" etc.; hence the summary of all the sanctifying power is God's Word—the Gospel.

I stand confused at this point to know how persons can enjoy the sanctifying power of God's Word and reject a part of the same; Jesus testifying that man duth not live by bread alone; but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Matt. 4:4. John also declares that if any man shall take away from the words of the Book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of Life, and out of the holy city, and from the thing which are written in this Book. Rev. 22:19. How persons can feel the plainly-taught observance of fast-watching, salutation of the holy kiss, anointing the sick with oil, etc., and yet claim to enjoy the sanctifying power of God's Word in the light of the above texts, and their numerous parallels, is not so clear.

It is agreed upon all hands the reason in his unconverted state is defiled with sin and in order to his being made holy or sanctified, his sins though they be as scarlet, they must be white as snow, though they be red like crimson they must be as wool.

Thus far I know of no dividing sentiment; but after the individual has been regenerated and born again, and enters upon his new life, I find two theories advocated.

1. The heart thus cleansed, God will keep pure by not allowing it to sin.

2. The heart thus cleansed may be "over-taken in a fault," and as such "have an advocate to the Father—Jesus Christ the righteous, who is able and willing to cleanse" that heart from all unrighteousness. In either theory the heart and desires are the same—one alike pure.

It should be remembered there are two kinds of sin spoken of in the Scriptures.

1. Sin of weakness. If any man be overtaken in a fault, Gal. 6:1.

2. Willful sins. If we sin willfully after we have obtained the knowledge of the truth there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin. Heb. 10:26.

1. The Scriptures teach that God's children do commit sin through the weakness of the flesh.

In Rom. 7:19-20, Paul tells us "the good that I would, I do not, but the evil which I would not that I do. Now if I do that I would not, it is no more I that do it but sin that dwelleth in me."

Again, in 1 Cor. 15:31, he says "I desire," i. e., he was daily over-taken in faults to which he died, i. e., ceased doing. The above texts are plain in evidencing the proposition above—that God's children do commit sin through weakness; the desires and intentions however being good.

2. The Scriptures again provide for a sinning state.

In that beautiful prayer taught us by the Savior, we ask him to forgive us our debts, or sins, as we forgive our debtors, or those who sin against us. How could this be if Christ's disciples did not commit sin?

Again, in Matt. 18:15, Christ says: "Moreover, if thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone. On the same occasion, Peter came to him and said, "Lord how oft shall my brother sin against me and I forgive him? till seven times?" Jesus saith unto him, "I say unto thee, until seven times, but until seventy times seven."

Now if we could arrive at a state in which we could not sin, I have confidence that the Savior would have impudently rebuked the doctrine, when Peter so pompously brought the matter up.

1 John 2:1, also alludes to the possibility that is made for our constant sins: "Little children, these things I write unto you that you sin not. And if any one sin we have an advocate to the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is the propitiation for our sins." Finally John, in warning up to who's matter, let us should be mistaken, he tells plainly that if we say we have no sin we deceive ourselves and the truth is not in us; but if we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness; 1 J. 9. Hence to those who continue protesting that they do not sin, that they cannot sin, we urge upon them to speedily make confession before God of their guilt, that they may enjoy pardon.

Finally, and plainly John tells us that if we say we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his Word is not in us.

How can men advocate this modern theory of sanctification in the face of the above plain texts and their numerous parallels?

I have been made to feel sad in noticing that the Brethren are becoming tainted with this modern theory of error. I find recently under a brother's signature, the following statement: "When I found a sin, I was do like I felt when the towel drieth the sin, and wash that they are higher until above his range; let us rise higher and higher the scale of perfection that the longest range of sin could affect us."

To the above we simply say that the scale, our Christian perfection will not in this land as at a point in which the range or position of sin will not affect us; that will all take place across the river.

But our opponents quote 1 John 3: "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin, for his seed remaineth in him and he cannot sin because he is born of God."

It is manifest from that which we have perused, that whosoever is born of God cannot sin; i. e., commit a willful sin, but they do, however, commit sin of weakness.

As we have seen the work of sanctification a progressive work, going on through the last sanctifying observance being the counting the sick (See Mark 6:13, Jn. 5:2) upon which we have the promise of the forgiveness of all our sins, and as such are sanctified.

SECRET SOCIETIES.

THE following words are reported from M. J. Moody on secret orders: "But, says of 'what do you say about these secret temperance orders?' The same thing. Do no evil, if good may come. You never can reform anything by being an ally of evil, yoking yourselves with unholy men. True reformers separate themselves from the world. 'But,' you say, 'you had one of them in your own church.' I did, but when I found out what it was, I left it out like a cage of unclean birds. There is a lot of young men of the church, the name of temperance, and they got up and gave and kept them out until their sin was at night. It was a pralder of their sin that I let them get into the church; but they were cleaned out, and they never came back. The idea of promoting temperance by yoking myself up in that way with naughty men is absurd. The most prominent meeting I attended was a temperance meeting in England, it was full of secret societies, and there was Christianity about it. I felt as though I had got into Sodom, and got out as soon as I could. A man resorted to infernal means by sitting working on Christian principles, sets forth pride, and boasts about reforming him. Such a man is harder to save than a drunkard."

—Signs of the Times.

WICKLIFF, the first translator of the Bible into English, was a sturdy Englishman, and which earned to be a great and a bold wit that flashed like a polished sword. We read that the Bible now here condemned for said, "Ye, distinctly, where it says, 'I do you not.'"

THE Picayune of New Orleans thinks sinners converted under coercion do not do good work in the churches. Often he said that the trouble is not in the soul so much as the foundation.

A RECENT writer said: "any people of this or any name in this regard say they must live it in light as possible, are very careful that it does not mark them."

Home and Family.

Corsets.

CORSETS.

WE thought it proper to say a few words in regard to tight lacing and the wearing of corsets. It is a fact beyond doubt that tight lacing and wearing of corsets are the most fruitful source of a majority of the ills from which women especially suffer. "But I cannot live without a corset," says one, "I need its support; I am old and fall down a heap without it, I feel so weak and helpless without something to brace me up." It may be possible that such do really feel better when encased in a frame-work of whale bone, steel, and cords, than when they depend upon their support; but the reason is they have been encased so long in the corset and depending upon it for support that they have lost their strength and elasticity. It has been said that if a strong man should strap his arm to a board and wear it constantly for a year, he would find it almost useless. The muscles of his arm would be thin, placid and powerless. Hence, the corset has the same effect upon the muscles of the chest, which by nature is designed to support the trunk. Will the muscles to the man's arm become strong by continuing to wear the board? Certainly not. Hence, the only way for that man to recover strength in his arm is to throw away the board and use the weakened member.

Just so with the corset; throw it away, and begin to exercise the weakened muscles, and they will soon recover the same natural strength that they possessed before the corset was worn.

Fair reader, do you not know that when you thus lace yourself up, that it is nothing more or less than suicide. Hence, you are guilty of murder. And the apostle was informed of us that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. 1 John 3: 15. Therefore cease doing this evil, or it is sin in the sight of God. We pray God that every woman will consider carefully the injury which results from this artificial and totally unnatural construction of the waist; remembering that the body is the temple of the Holy Spirit. Hence the apostle says, if any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for who builds of God is holy, whose temple ye are. 1 Cor. 3: 17. M. C. N.

FRETTING AND WORKING.

TWO gardeners who were neighbors had their crops of early peas killed by the frost. One of them came to console with the other on this misfortune. "Ah," cried he, "how unfortunate we have been, neighbor! Do you know I have done nothing but fret ever since. But you seem to have a fine healthy crop coming up already; what are these?"

"These," cried the other gardener; "why, these are what I sowed immediately after my loss."

"What! coming up already?" cried the fretter.

"Yes; while you were fretting, I was working."

"What! don't you fret when you have a loss?"

"Yes; but I always put off until after I have repaired the mischief."

"Why then you have no need to fret at all."

"True," replied the industrious gardener, "and that is the very reason."

TO THE ABSENT MEMBERS OF THE FAMILY.

YOU are not forgotten. The hearts of your parents yearn for your welfare. You are children of many prayers.

Remember you were brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We cherish high expectations. Do not disappoint your friends. Behave and noble in the midst of temptations. We believe that Providence and grace through the prayers of parents and your own efforts will keep you from ruin. Fear God, He is great and terrible as well as gracious and fatherly. Keep his word near you and consult it often. No counselor like the All-Wise. No book on earth so grandly profound and safe as the Bible. If you were at home in the family, not a breakfast would be eaten with the family before reading or hearing a portion of it read. Let not a day pass without getting something from it. It will furnish you the kind of knowledge that can overcome the flesh, the world, and the devil. It is the sword with which you can cut your way through and put Satan to flight. Be faithful to your employers and true to your promises. Do your best in all you attempt. Strive to be models of youthful dignity and sobriety. Study the best rules of etiquette, and be courteous and gentle wherever you are. Let your motto be excelsior in all you undertake that is manly and good. Never set your foot inside of a saloon. Never smoke, chew nor drink. Put your whole soul into the crusade against intemperance. Practice strict economy. Little leaks if let alone would soon sink a ship, loaded with gold, to the bottom of the ocean. Be at company at once from all who turn their faces toward the saloon; God will raise you up safer and truer friends for it. Be neither ashamed nor afraid to say no to everything that would lead you toward any of the gates of Hell. Death may claim you as his victim among strangers without ever again seeing your parents. Remember it is not all of life to live, nor all of death to die. Do not think of the pale horse and his rider as being fifty or sixty years on the road. His very shadow may be on the most robust now. Let your life be a drilling for the impenetrable future. Be ambitious to become first class workmen in Christ's employ. Shoulder the cross daily, bear it willingly and keep the crown in view.

FATHER AND MOTHER.

Veritas, III.

GIVE WHILE YOU HAVE IT.

IT is wonderful how many benevolent men we find who have no money. They feel for the cause of Christ, for the necessities of the poor, for the welfare of the heathen, and a thousand other good objects, but really they cannot give. They have lost so much, and property has depreciated so greatly, that they are crippled, and cannot do as they would. But how was it when they had money? Then they used it for themselves and for their own advantage. When it is gone they are very willing to give it away, but while they had it, neither God nor man could loosen their grasp upon it. They proved themselves unfaithful stewards, and have been put out of their stewardship. They now have the opportunity of being "faithful over a few things," and if they are thus faithful the Lord can make them rulers over many things.

The lesson for us all to learn is to do good; while our hand is on the plow is the time to cut the furrow. To-day we have the opportunity to do something for the Lord. It may be our last opportunity; it may be our only one. Let us do while we can do; let us give while we can give; let us work while we can work. "The night cometh wherein no work can be done." "Withhold not good from them to whom it is in the power of thine hand to do it." (N.)

MAKING HIS MANNERS.

SIXTY or seventy years ago children were trained by their parents, both at home and at school, to be far more mannerly than they are now. No little boy ever thought of going into a house without pulling off his hat, tucking it under his arm, and making a bow. "Making your manners," they called it. Little Calvin had been thus trained, and though only three or four years old, always did when he went anywhere. He had never to church, and as his mother was making a suit of clothes that he might go, a puzzling question came into his little head: Ought he to make his manœuvres when he went to church? He wanted to ask some one, but like many other people, he was ashamed to ask what seemed so simple a question. The Sunday morning came, and still he had not found out what to do. "I'll be on the safe side," he thought to himself. "It can't do any harm." So, when fairly inside the church door, he tucked his hat under his arm, squared up, and made his manners. I dare say there were some to smile at the odd sight; but I think the good Father, to whose worship the church was dedicated, was pleased with this act of politeness in the innocent little boy.

MANY of the waves of trouble, like those of the ocean, will, if we await them calmly, break at our feet and disappear.

Ye hypocrites! well did Esaias prophesy, saying, "This people draw nigh unto you with their mouths and hypocritical smiles; but their heart is far from me." 7-8

Nothing is eternal but that which is for God and others. That which is self-div. Perhaps it is wrong. You say it is pleasure, well, joyous recollection is no pleasure which ends in self is mortal; it goes out of self into God last forever.

WILL HE BE SAVED?

"Suppose a man is sick, and his physician desires it would be worth to take him into the water to baptize him, and he dies without baptism, will he be saved."

J. D. F.

IF a man has delayed turning to God till some hindrance comes so that he cannot attend to what the Lord has ordained, he has certainly delayed until he cannot do the command. If he has deferred obeying, for any reason, he has simply deferred becoming a Christian. At some point in his life he passed the possibility of attending to the "all things" ordained through Christ Jesus. That point is at death. So long as he lives he can be baptized; and he assured God will not let him die in that act of obedience. God never lets Satan tear down his building. The gates of hell cannot prevail against God's work.

Some say, "While the lamp holds out to burn, the vilest sinner may return," but this is not strictly true; for the apostle speaks of some who were as "trees twice dead, plucked up by the roots." Such trees never grow again, no difference how often they are planted. Others are "past feeling," and some are waiting to receive judgment and fiery indignation," and "the blackness of darkness forever"—vile sinners are they indeed whose lamps silt burn, yet they cannot return. And other some are given over to believe a lie and be condemned. Such have no salvation promised them in the Gospel. We know nothing about the salvation of men only learn in the Word of the Lord. "If he believeth and is baptized shall be saved," we know. We also know that he who "saith not shall be damned." Outside of revealed facts we know nothing about those we should give some charitable opinions those who die unrepentant and unbaptized not such cases become more frequent?

In the course of time our charitable opinions will be accepted, not only by those who cannot obey, but by those also who cannot conscientiously, and pretty soon we would have a system of salvation for those who never obey, and away goes the Gospel for our opinions.

If a man will hearken to a physician rather than to God, he must not expect God to take him up to glory and give him a crown and a palm as he would the man who obeyed him from the heart. The proper time to hear and obey is when health and strength and reason are unimpaired, and when the work of being reconciled to God can be entered into with cheerfulness and earnestness of purpose. One promise of God, when we come to die, is worth more than all the opinions of uninspired men fitted and joined together compactly.

THE THREE ELEMENTS

CAREFUL observation teaches that in all organized bodies there are three elements—the fast, medium and slow. It would be difficult to find a body of people, either religious, politic, or military, not possessing these elements. They are also found in all organized movements and even in movements not organized. To deny their existence is to call into question that which is known to every observing mind having experience in public affairs. Any one of ordinary intelligence can easily discover them in the body with which he may be identified. He will find one class always inclined to push forward into matters just as fast as openings appear; while another class leans just to the reverse, always afraid to venture, fearing there is danger ahead. The third class possesses the energy of the former, and the caution of the latter; hence, moves with more prudence than either.

Our country—the land of liberty—has these elements strongly marked. They all contend for, speak and write in defense of "free speech, and free press," yet differ respecting the meaning attached to the term. There is one element that would interpret it so loosely as to allow the uninterrupted circulation of obscene literature. It holds that people should be permitted to write and publish what to them may seem good, regardless of the tendency. Another class would distinctly prescribe the limits, rendering the journalistic field very small and extremely difficult. The third class holds that the freedom of speech and press extends only to that which is right and just, and that all true freedom is limited by a sense of justice arising from a just consideration of the wishes and lawful claims of others.

Of the three elements, the third, or conservative, is not only the strongest, but the most consistent. In either of the other elements are the fanatics and extremists, who have plenty of zeal but no judgment. They do not consider the necessity of a broad platform that takes in all the true wants of a nation, but are for forcing and squeezing things into measures, as a foolish man would force his large foot into a small boot just to train it to that condition. He stops not to consider the wants of the foot, but compels it to suffer just to suit his personal taste. People should not be pressed into measures called for measures. Their needs must be considered and then regulations adopted that will permit them free, undisturbed exercise in that is good, true and noble. Let rules and regulations fit the nation as a garment should fit the body—giving all necessary freedom to regulation and exercise—and instead of complaining there will be a continuous growth of all parts.

All churches have these three elements, and will have them as long as churches continue to exist. If there is a falling off, or shrinking, it comes from one of the extremes. The strongest and powers are found in the middle, or conservative parts of the body. If the fast element takes its course, and can succeed in drawing the body with it, the whole machinery will soon be destroyed by the force of ungoverned motion; the speed will be too great for the different parts of the body. A glance at the history of the past will demonstrate this point clearly. If the slow element governs the speed and workings of the different parts of the church the motion will be found too slow to insure success. The conservative element maintains the condition of that which she has to handle and regulates herself accordingly. Her movements are steady and always aim at consistency, knowing that it is the steady and uniform motion of ponderous machinery that gives it force and safety.

The church is made up of people who must be handled according to their natures, and he who is wise will study the body of people he has to handle as carefully as a physician studies the patient under his care. A body of people, like a body of water, may be handled to advantage if the proper course be taken, but if it is not given the advantage of you, it becomes a most cumbersome. Strong leaders study well the people and their surroundings, that they may know how to handle them, and then select ground they can maintain in the face of opposition, knowing that to accomplish a successful work they cannot effect the needed change all at once, and that it will not do for them to move faster than the people can see to follow. Such men will generally mark their mark, though they be in the wrong. But these nervous persons who fly into pieces at every little thing that occurs may make a noise for a short time, but their work will soon be over and nothing substantial accomplished. They stop not to consider what they are doing, thinking only of their reform, not realizing that it must be reached step by step. This class of persons make the extremists of the age, saying nothing about the excitement sometimes caused in the body.

If reformers are necessary, they are not the ones to lead them—they do more harm than good. They make extremists but not reformers. True reform must come through consent.

attempts that they may be hindered with caution and judgment, otherwise the efforts will prove abortive and the body greatly injured.

These things considered in the light of past history may afford lessons of profit to all of us.

WAY-NOTES

—Some good corn in South west Missouri, and some looks as if no man had been around since it was planted.

—Left Kansas City, July 6th, in company with D. L. Miller and wife, and Abraham Miller, in the Atchison, Topeka & St. Fe road, which, by the way, is a grand route.

—No starving Kansas this year! Her corn and wheat crops are immense. Thousands of acres in tassel and earing.

—There are rich coal fields about Carbondale, Kansas. This is a source of great wealth to the State.

—The finest magnesite stone are found in Marion county. The Brethren are building a meeting-house near Peabody in this county. By the way, Marion and Harvey counties are not only productive, but beautiful in appearance. The wheat stacks and acres of corn will run up into thousands and ten thousands.

—We are informed that a gentleman near Sterling, Kansas, will have from 500 to 1,000 bushels of fine peaches this year.

—At Nickerson, the A. T. & St. F. R. R., strikes the great Arkansas river which comes rolling eastward from the Rocky Mountains.

—As one goes up through Lyon, Marion, Harvey and Reno counties, the air is so refreshing that one feels that he could eat it.

—West of Great Bend there are but few improvements. It is the great stock raising portion of Kansas. All along the river, one may see large herds of cattle and flocks of sheep grazing quietly. Even this is interesting to the tourist.

—As we journeyed from Pueblo to Denver we beheld the majestic mountains, Pike's Peak towering above them all. The scenery is grand, and worth one's time and money to see it.

—We had the pleasure of stopping one night with Bro. Abram Miller, brother of D. L. Miller while in Denver. Bro. Abram is married to a daughter of brother Jacob Sword, of Lonsark, Illinois.

—From Denver we have a fine view of the mountains upon which there is yet a great deal of snow.

—On the afternoon of the 8th inst., we watched a carpenter finish the tower on the new union depot in Denver. The tower is 180 feet high. The men moved about the apex of the tower in a manner which we thought bordered on carelessness. We watched him from a distance by the aid of a glass.

—We shall be off for Logansport tomorrow. If there are any cool breezes there and plenty of fish, we shall gladly find them.

—Bro. Abram Miller, father of D. L. Miller, who is about seventy-two years old, and at this time, a resident of Washington county, Md., is traveling with us. He endures traveling well, and thinks he will be benefitted by the trip. He is quite active for one of his age.

—D. L. Miller and wife will visit a sister of the latter at Las Vegas, New Mexico, before they return to Illinois. M. M. E.

JAPANESE CHRISTIANS.

AN exchange contains the following apt paragraph:

A Scotchman living in Japan went out to buy a screen. The merchant told him to come next day, for, as it was Sunday, he could not sell them, being a Christian. The Scotchman said: "I felt as though I had seen a ghost. I felt so cheap that all I could do was to slip out of his shop and start for home." Another Japanese Christian, about to sell some articles, asked the customer as he was about to pay for them, "Have you noticed this defect, and this?" The purchaser had not observed the defects, and decided not to take the articles. This is the sort of Christians converted Japanese make. We could well afford to exchange a large number of a certain sort of American Christians (P) for Japanese Christians of the kind referred to.

CONSIDERABLE interest is manifested in regard to a singular phenomenon in the recently discovered comet. Astronomers say it has divided into two parts by a line horizontally through the center of the nucleus, the upper half taking all the tail. The lower half is represented as presenting the appearance of a half moon, and the two halves are said to be gradually separating. One similar occurrence is on record, that of Biela's comet, which in 1845 suffered a similar accident, and though having a period of seven years, it never reappeared but once afterward, and is known as the "lost comet."

THE Review number of the North American August is on our table and devotes a liberal share of its space to a polemical duel between Ingersoll, the great exponent of the unbelief of the day, and Judge Jeremiah S. Black, the eminent jurist. Ingersoll is master of some of the most effective parts of the rhetorician and the popular orator. As an assailant of revealed religion he has more chance of success in confirming the skeptical and carrying away the wavering than perhaps any other infidel of modern times. Judge Black is distinguished alike for his steadfast faith in orthodox Christianity and for the power and skill with which he is able to sustain any cause in which his convictions are enlisted. He is, like the challenger, a man of the world in his serious occupations and modes of thought. He is accustomed to contests in the arena of public discussion and to the use of all the weapons of controversy with which men are furnished; he is familiar with the arguments that have been used by the founders of his cause, and he has the nerve and vigor of a born disputant. Ingersoll has made an attack in the Review and sustained it with all his force as an aggressive assailant. Judge Black has taken up the challenge. It is well that the daring infidel should be called out and that he should be met by such an antagonist. It is easy to see that they are both men of rare skill in the use of the English language and know how to use words exactly adapted to their intentions.

HODSCHA AHMET, who was sentenced to imprisonment for life for having translated the Bible into Turkish, and for having circulated it in the State of the Sultan, escaped from the prison at Chio after the earthquake. The prison was thrown down by the violence of the shock, but Hodscha-Ahmet was not hurt. He managed to get on board an English vessel anchored in harbor, and he is now in London.

A GOOD brother, writing to this office, thinks they had no editor's table at Jerusalem when the apostles met to consult in regard to circumcision. He is correct, for they had no editors in those days. Nor do we think there was any table for the Standing Committee. Luke was the reporter. He afterwards wrote from memory what occurred. If not present, it was likely told him by some one who was in attendance. There were but few delegates at that meeting, and they were all from one church—the church of Antioch.

CHRISTIAN women ought to be pleased to learn that in England the Rational Dress Society has prepared a model costume. The object of the Society are to promote the adoption, according to individual taste and convenience, of a style of dress based upon considerations of health, comfort, and beauty, and to depreciate constant changes of fashion, which cannot be recommended on any of these grounds. If worldly people are on this, religious people ought to be equally awake to duty.

THE Nation has passed another feverish week fraught with the most extreme anxiety. The President still lives, with fair prospects of recovery. He improves slowly, but perhaps as fast as could be expected. His room is kept cool by means of a machine constructed for that purpose. He is attended by the best physicians in America, and if care and prayers can save a man, he certainly will be restored to health. We are taught to pray for the rulers of our land. It will probably be months, however, before he will be strong enough to attend to the duties of his office. "The conduct of Mrs. Garfield, from the moment she received the first shocking announcement of the attempt upon her husband's life to the present time, is still exciting the admiration of the country. Of course, Mrs. Garfield is only one of thousands of noble women in the country, but her position as the wife of the Chief Executive makes her case stand out conspicuously."

UNTEACHING FEET-WASHING.

EDITORIAL FLAG: What ought a pastor of a Baptist church do when a small minority of his church practice feet-washing as a church ordinance in connection with the Lord's supper?

A PASTOR.

We think that he ought to teach them, in meekness, the way of the Lord more perfectly. He ought to show them, from the Scriptures, that the feet-washing, by the Savior, occurred two days prior to the Lord's supper, in Bethany, in the house of Simon. He ought to show those brethren that it is as absurd to make a church ordinance out of feet-washing as to make feed for the hungry a church ordinance. If these brethren should still persist in the practice of feet-washing as a church ordinance, the matter should be laid before the church, and their action should be obtained, forbidding the practice of feet-washing as a church ordinance. Let the practice be classed and practiced as a religious act of hospitality, when necessary.—Baptist Flag.

It is a pity Mr. Ray was not present when Christ washed his disciples' feet. He could have told them that they were washing feet at the house of Simon, in Bethany two days prior to the Lord's supper, hence it would not be necessary to practice it in the future, thus avoiding the necessity of the command, "ye ought to wash one another's feet." By the way, we are of the impression that this "small minority" has been reading the "Stein and Ray debate," in addition to a careful study of John 13. It may further be observed that the Flag recommends that these faithful few be forbidden to practice feet-washing as a church ordinance. This is virtually setting up the opinion of man against the direct specific, "thus saith the Lord." J. H. M.

WHY?

IN this issue our readers will find a notice of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad. The reason we insert it is because we are obliged to travel a great deal, and in this way we can earn our fare. We are too poor to pay our railroad fare any other way; and as at this time we needed rest and were advised to seek the Western climate, as a help to our over-worked system, we concluded to pay our way in this manner. Under these circumstances we think our readers will bear with us.

IRREVERENCE.

MANY expressions used by ministers are quite irreverent to many ears. They seem to become so familiar with the persons of the Trinity that all reverence is lost. They not only speak of God and of Christ without proper feeling of humility, but they use terms which should not be employed by Christians. The Jews went to the extreme of not pronouncing the name Jehovah. We speak almost with levity the loftiest names of the Infinite, as well as apply epithets to him which common respect should deter us from using. It were better if the same reserve and reverential tone should characterize our language in this respect which the Apostles manifested. When referring to either person of the Trinity we should do so with all becoming reverence, for great and revered is his name.

THE COVERING.

THE question now arises, if we adopt the New Revised Testament what will we do about the 11th chapter of 1 Corinthians? In regard to the covering it reads as follows: "But every woman praying, with her head uncovered dishonors her head; for it is one and the same thing as if she were shaven. For if a woman is not veiled, let her also be shorn; but if it be a shame to a woman to be shorn or shaven, let her be veiled." That this is a faithful rendering of the Greek text (there is not a vestige of doubt, as from it we do not have a single dissenting voice among classical scholars. No wonder the question is sprung, what will we do about it? In the name of all that is candid, reasonable and Scriptural, let us teach just as it says, and exhort our sisters when they go to prayer, to veil or cover their heads. It is not a sign, but means a veiling or covering of the head, as much as baptism means a covering of the body.

We see no necessity, for any one being alarmed. For years our people have known that the original says veil instead of covering, and yet the practice has been all the same. The original means a covering, and in ancient times the veil was the covering used by all female classes, and for that reason was doubtless recommended. Our sisters would better continue their present plan covering: veils may be out of fashion after awhile, and then they will have to change again. If they would now wear the kind of veils worn in the apostolic age there would be no reason for complaint, but to throw away the present neat covering and adopt the fashionable veil would not be consistent with what we claim. We vote "make no change for the present."

A BROTHER SAYS: "I would rather see my right arm wither than lift it up against a man who lived a more holy life, than myself, and was owned of God in doing a better work than I had ever been able to accomplish."

LAST week a young man from the Southern part of the state, came into the office, and told us that his parents were poor, he was poor but he wanted a good education and was willing to work for it, but did not have money to pay his way. A glance at the young man's hands and form showed that he had been working hard, and his conduct convinced us that he was willing to work his way through if he could find something to do. We told him that the world was getting full of educated men, but if he wanted to work, and could make that his motto, he could get every thing else: that there was plenty of room for him up high. There is always room for educated men who will work, but for idlers the world has no use whatever.

As an instance of denominational activity the following has a little of the old-fashioned ring to it: Twenty-two of the members of the Congregational Church at Mayville, Colorado, six of them ladies, under the lead of the pastor, Rev. H. P. Case, went to the mountains recently and cut logs enough in one day for a large part of the lumber needed for their new meeting-house. The ladies prepared a picnic dinner which was enjoyed on snow banks 10,000 feet above the sea.

The following is an excellent take-off on "clothes makes the man." The celebrated painter and poet, Buchin, walked out one day in very shabby clothes, and became more an object of derision than regard. He was mortified and went home, and arraying himself in his best, again walked out to receive on every hand obsequious attention. His mortification turned to anger, and going home he threw his gold-laced coat on the floor, and stamping on it, exclaimed: "Art thou Buchin or an I?"

Some one has aptly framed the following against the Catholic Church. It sounds ridiculous, nevertheless it fits the actions of that body of people most completely:

'Our Father who art in Vatican; Infallibility be thy name. Thy temporal sovereignty come, thy will be done; in Europe and America, as it is in Ireland. Give us this day our tithes and tithes, and forgive us our trespasses as we give plenary indulgences to those who pay penitently to us; and I lead us not in a Ecumenical Council, but deliver us from thinking; for this is the crossier, and the keys, and the bars. Amen without end, Amen.'

As a true witness the Bible is grievously tormenting many unbelievers who dwell upon the face of the earth. They rejected it with a faint heart and trembling hands, fearing there is more in it than they are willing to acknowledge. It will be terrible for those men at the judgment when they must face the Book they have so long rejected.

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT

WE beg leave to inform our parties interested that the Stein and Ray Debate is now published and ready for delivery. It is a book which should be in every family; in the fact that it is interested in the defense of pure religion. Since its completion we find it to be about 100 pages larger, and contains quite much more expensive than expected when first announced. Hence after Sept. 1st, 1881, the price will be advanced making the cloth $2.00 and the leather $2.50 per copy, instead of $1.50 and $2.00 the present prices.

Therefore all who desire to secure a copy of the cloth at $1.50 or of the leather at $2.00 must send in their order accompanied by cash on or before Sept. 1st, 1881.

Will some one explain Genesis 4:15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark he set on him?

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven. Were these devout men from every nation all Jews, or not?"

LEAST ESTEEMED.

Please explain the latter part of the 4th verse of the 6th chapter 1st Cor.: "Who are those that are least esteemed in the church?"
HARRY GILLAM.

The passage referred to, is to some extent obscure, on account of some difference in the translations.

From the nature of the language used by the Apostle in the introduction of the 6th chapter, we infer that the Corinthians have resorted to the use of the law to settle some temporal matters. The apostle reproves them for so doing. He tells them that the church is more competent to judge than the world, as follows: "Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?" 1 Cor. 6:2. The sense of this language is, that the Corinthians appeal to the wrong body for an adjudication of their claims. They should have presented their matters to the church; for if the church (saints) shall judge the world, are they not competent to properly adjust your claims?

The language contained in the query, "Set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church," reads very different in the German, and to my judgment much clearer. The English reads as if the apostle commanded the Corinthians to "set them to judge who are least esteemed in the church. The German reads that Paul reproved them for having done so, as follows: Ihr aber, wenn ihr ueber seellichen Guetern Sachen habet, so nehmet ihr die, so bei der Gemeine verachtet sind und setzet sie zu Richtern, auch zur Schande muss ich das sagen." 1 Cor. 4th and part of 5th verse; which translation into English would read about as follows: "But ye, when ye have controil over worldly things, ye select those to judge who are but little regarded (verachtet) by the church; to your shame I must say this."

It is easy to discover, that according to the German translation, the apostle's language equals the query a command.

That being the case, the phrase, "least esteemed in the church," means outsiders, worldlings, who, according to the apostle's own confession, are not as competent to judge as the saints.

The original for "least esteemed" is exaltation names defined by Greenfield, "To make light of, set at naught, despise, contemn, treat with contempt and scorn; to neglect, disregard, abject, contemptible, to reject with contempt."

Hence the phrase, "least esteemed," cannot have reference to any class of members in the church, who may, in some sense, be less esteemed than others; but we think has reference to that class of persons who had no connection with the church. That class the Corinthians had appealed to as a redress for their grievances. In all probability they were heathen, and, perhaps enemies to the religion of Christ. For it cannot reasonably be supposed that the religion of Christ had then entered into the statutes of their law, and controlled the minds of their judges, as it does now, to a greater or less extent, even of those who have made no profession of religion.

Doubtless the translators regarded the verse containing the query as elliptical, hence dropped the pronoun "re" at its second occurrence in the same verse. It is found in the original and is retained in the German, and would read plainer in the English thus: "If then ye have judgments of things pertaining to this life, ye set them to judge who are least esteemed (despised, contemned) in the church. I speak to your shame." 4th and beginning of 5th verse.

An objection to the foregoing explanation might be urged because of the preposition "in," that, therefore, they must be in and part of the church. In answer we would say, that the German reads "by the church," instead of "in the church." The original, also, admits of this interpretation.

THE FERTILITY OF PALESTINE.

FROM the quarterly statement of the Palestine exploration fund, we can glean much information, interesting to Bible readers.

The paper which most commends itself to us, is that on the fertility of the Holy Land, written by Lieutenant Claude R. Conder, whose researches have gained for him a well-earned celebrity. His paper enters into an inquiry, concerning what is known historically of the ancient condition of the country, of its water supply, cultivation, etc., and a lengthy account is given of the numerous observations made during the course of his survey as to the decay of cultivation, and the disappearance of forests. By these means he arrives finally at a far generalization as to the change that has occurred in Palestine, and thinks that the change is one of degree only, and not of kind.

The curse of the country is bad government, and were justice and security once established on a firm basis, Mr. Conder is of the opinion, that the Holy Land would "become once more a land of corn, vines, olives, rivaling in fertility and in wealth its ancient condition." Let us examine his analysis of the present and past conditions of this degenerate land.

The climate of modern Palestine is extremely trying; yet the heat in Summer is not very great, seldom ranging above ninety five degrees in the shade, and Mr. Conder shows that in days gone by, the atmosphere of the country was very similar. With respect to rain-falls we cannot do better than quote the author's own words.

"In the present time, rain in an ordinary good year, falls first at the autumnal equinox. During November, frequent thunder storms occur, and about Christmas the weather is generally stormy.

In January the heaviest rains fall, and in February, sometimes, none at all; but the weather is never still until after the vernal equinox and the early April showers are past. From May to September no rain falls, except, generally, one heavy shower in June or July.—E.

A CHINESE LIBRARY.

QUITE voluminous is the great Chinese Encyclopaedia, recently purchased for the British Museum at a cost of $7,500. There are 2,020 volumes all told.

The emperor Kunghe was a great admirer of ancient literature, and was deeply grieved to perceive, that extensive corruptions were everywhere creeping into the texts that were reproduced. To put a stop to this, he determined to gather together in one authoritative work, the entire mass of Chinese literature from the earliest times until his own day.

A learned commission was appointed to collate and verify all Chinese works, and Jesuit ministers were simultaneously employed in casting a vast amount of copper type.

The collection and examination occupied the commission for forty years, and before it was fully completed, the wise old monarch died, leaving the execution of his great design to Yung Chiag, his successor, who signalized his accession by dismissing the missionaries as a dangerous and traitorous set. He seems to have taken up the great literary scheme with keen interest, and it was his hand which wrote the preface to the work, when it was at length published.

The commissioners professed to have taken all works from 1100 B. C. to 1700 A. D., and it is supposed that the whole Chinese literature of any importance, between those dates, is to be found embodied in these 5,020 volumes. The subjects are classified under six headings, under which are arranged writings relating to the heavens, the earth, mankind, inanimate nature, philosophy and political economy.

If an untruth is only a day old, it is called a lie, if it is a year old, it is called a falsehood; but if it is a century old, it is called a legend.

Sir William Jones, who was equally distinguished for his piety and learning, said, "that the Bible, independent of its Divine origin, contains more important history, more true poetry and more sublime thoughts than could be found in all other books, by whatsoever written."

His word is false to present duty breaks the thread in the loom, and will see the defect when the weaving of a life-time is unrolled.

Correspondence.

From Denmark.

Dear Brethren:—

I, indeed, the Lord willing, to start for Shriland June 24th, but received a call from one of our deacons to come and baptize a woman in his neighborhood that day. So I went there and baptized her. This hindered me in getting to Talborg in time for the steamer, and I had to go by railroad, and was thus enabled to reach Shriland in time for my appointment. This, however, made my journey twice as long as it would have been on the water, and to improve my time, I wrapped up some tracts in my boxes, and sitting in the car by an open window, I dropped a package at every crossing to those standing by. I use this method wherever I travel, and it is a consolation to me to see with what eagerness it is picked up. I often think of brother J. H. Moor's words: "Tracts are like bomb-shells; they can be cast in where a living messenger cannot go." I need only recall my own experience, and the benefit I received from reading the scraps of history of the Brethren, to know the importance of using every opportunity to scatter papers and tracts.

In this way people will read and work and speak of it to their friends, while if we handed it to them, they would not care or dare to read it. So in like manner I send all English papers to England, to be scattered by brother J. Nielsen, thus trying to obey the injunction, "Cast thy bread upon the waters and thou shalt find it after many days."

I came to the appointed place June 4th, and found our members and a few friends gathered, and we had a good time. We realized the Lord's blessing. June 5th three meetings were appointed, but at the first one, on account of the rain, only the family and two strangers were present. It looked rather gloomy and it seemed that those who had requested me to come and baptize them were not ready. What could I do but ask God to help and bless? I felt sad and humbled.

In the afternoon we gathered at our brother minister's house, and the rain having ceased, there were about twenty persons present. I gave out a hymn, and was astonished to see all weep while it was sung. This weeping continued all day, and never in my life have I seen anything like it, nor heard such prayers for grace and mercy as were sent up to God that day.

June 6th, we gathered at a friend's house to prepare for baptism, but did not know how many there would be. We engaged in worship, and the tears and prayers were as abundant as the day before. So we went to a beautiful lake and baptized six persons. In the evening we had a Love-feast in a house belonging to one of the brethren, who with his wife had just united with us. Our only sister in that part had her prayers answered, for one of her girls was among those baptized. Her husband, who loves us and always did, could not go along. Our Love-feast was several times interrupted by that poor girl praying for her father and her husband and sisters, and his weeping and groaning became so loud as to force me to secretly beseech God to control it, so that it should not go too far. This broke the father's, sister's, and her brother-in-law's heart. Her brother-in-law used to be a wild man, and his wife, nearly a year ago, went to America because of his meanness. The Love-feast being over, he and the girl alluded to asked to be baptized the next day. The day came, and lo, the old gray-headed father appeared with his child and said: "Well, brother Hop, now I come as I am; do you think God can refuse to hear one of his children's prayers? I cannot refuse to hear my children's prayers." We prepared, and in company with other friends went to the lake, and having no reasonable cause to refuse, we baptized the three. I went home with them and worshipped with them in the afternoon, and tried to teach them how to meet temptation.

Amidst all these blessings, the devil had been permitted, in the night, to tempt some of our young babes in Christ. I tried to show them God's ways, goodness and kindness to his children from Bible facts and our own life, and added our work by another Love-feast in the evening, on account of the new converts. Our three members are now multiplied to twelve persons—all close together in one vicinity, and there are good prospects of more following.

This is the place where, two years ago, the priest and the school teacher made the people drive us away with stones, and where no one dared to hear any one preach. Surely God is good.

And before I close I must also tell you that among those baptized was a little boy thirteen years old. He had been attending meeting for a long time and lived as a grown man. He wept much when he heard about Jesus. He asked his father and mother for permission to follow them in baptism, but was afraid I would not baptize him. His father asked me, and I said, if he believes on Jesus I have no right to hinder him. In the morning he told his mother to be sure to take some clothes along. "Well, my boy," answered the mother, "do you not think you had better wait until you get out of the school? You know they will all be so hard on you if you are baptized." "Oh, mother, that is no matter," said the little hero. "Well, my poor boy, you know your brother got the new shirts when he left home, and I got only the patch-d ones for you," said the mother. "Then I will have to wear that, said the poor child. When I asked those who wanted to be baptized to hold up their hands, he eagerly reached up his little arm, looking me steadily in the face, and the tears rolling down his cheeks. When I told them our church doctrine, and also that this little boy would likely have a hard time with the military institutions, it did not move him. During baptism and communion he acted like an old man, and his conversation exhibited a ripe and grown Christian. How I do wish that my children may be like this one. I feel like using children across the ocean to imitate him as well as pray for him. I must tell you that this little hero has ten brothers and sisters, and he is next to the oldest. It is, indeed, hard for that family to get ahead, yet with little hard-ding and clothing they have in time and plow-

A few pines, dear children, would do that little brother and his small companions a great deal of good. If you feel to give him any, send it brother Quintar, and I shall apply it at once. They have not asked nor do they expect any kind of help, hence have not joined in the church for bread.

We went so far towards organizing a church there that we took a vote for a deacon to assist brother A. Neilson, who is a minister in the first degree. The lot fell on brother S. L. Luugesen. When that little brother came in to vote, I wondered if he had a clear idea of the matter, and I asked, "Well, my little brother, who do you think can fill this office and take care of you as God ordained?" The reply was, "I think brother Luugesen is the best for that."

May God bless that branch of the vine and make it grow to be a strong church.

NUMBER VI.

FAYETTE STA., W. VA., July 8th, '81.

Oh my! but it is hot! Thermometer indicating 98° in the shade, yet we will try and get off a few thoughts or items. Last evening closed our labors and visit in this part of the Lord's vineyard. Having been preaching for the last six days in succession, our voice (as is frequently the case in hot weather) has almost failed us, but a little rest will bring us out all right.

As a result of our labors here would say there have been five additions to the church, with others near the kingdom, and the church seems to be revived. The season was a very busy one, harvest being on hand, yet our meetings were mostly well attended, and the call for preaching in other localities very pressing.

A short history of the church here may be of some interest. I write from memory. I think brother Henry Sanger, Sen., of Pendleton county, West Virginia, was the first to meet into the county with his family. That was nearly thirty years ago. Soon brother John Thomas of Rockingham county, Virginia moved in. He had been put to the ministry a short time before. The doctrine of the Brethren here was, in certain particulars, a strange doctrine. Much opposition and some persecution followed, but the cause prospered. Twenty-four years ago your unworthy writer moved to the county. A year after, with my wife we united with the church. The year following was elected to the ministry. The war came up, and Fayette county became as a dividing line between the contending elements. On the battle-ground was a poor place to contend for non-resistant principles. The safety of myself and family required I should flee to a more safe retreat. We went to Iowa, leaving all our earthly possessions behind at the mercy of devastating armies. Brother Thomas also fled, and a number of the Brethren, to escape the fate of the conscript law. As might be expected, the church was scattered, our church to be destroyed and the dark gloom of war prevailed and the whole nation hid from the clouds of battle had disappeared and peace once more spread her wings over once happy land, the spirit and overruling Providence of God seemed to say, "Go back to that land from whence you came." We went. The members were buried up; a re-organization affected. Some time after, a re-organization affected. Some time after, a re-organization affected. Some time after, a re-organization affected.

of an inch thick. The largest sized hail-stones I saw with my own eyes I am quit sure would have measured twelve inches in circumference the largest way around, which in shape was much like that of a flat turpie. Fortunately the corn and wheat and other crops still small, and to very great damage will result. Of course roads and early gardens, fruit, etc. suffered beyond recovery. Ordinary window shutters were broken into fragments, and windows broken out by thousands.

From Emily R. Stifer.—The brethren and sisters of the Democratic congregation, Blair Co., Pa., held a very joyous Lev-feast on the 4th of June. A large number of friends were present. The rain prohibited the rowdies from getting there—some who are in the habit of annoying the brethren in their devotional exercises.—New Baltimore, Ohio, July 6.

A Terrific Hail-storm.

On the 12th ult., near 1 o'clock P. M. there appeared in the west a very dense and highly electrified cloud, presenting a greenish hue, and in a great state of agitation. In a few moments it swept over this part of the country. I think none of us will soon forget the terror of that storm. The wind blew a fierce gale, and a constant crashing of lightning accompanied the largest hail-storm I ever saw upon record. Some idea can be had of the immense sizes of the stones when we state that within a few miles of here fifty head of hogs were killed, some cattle, one colt, and many horns knocked off of cattle. One hail-stone was weighed at Mr. Snyder's, a neighbor living some five miles south-east of here that weighed twelve pounds. Mr. Snyder is known to be a truthful man. He said one hail-stone broke through the roof and upper floor and lodged in the lower floor. He had to reside the whole west side of his roof. His house was nearly new. Another neighbor said it split nearly every board on the west side of his barn. The boards (pine) are seven-eighths of an inch thick. Ordinary window shutters were broken into fragments, and windows broken out by thousands.

From James M. Neff.—On Sunday evening I had the privilege of attending a Love feast of the Congregational Brethren, which was held in the village of Stockdale near Roman. Thinking it would be of some interest to the readers of the B. A. W., I will give a sketch of the proceedings. I do not wish to cast any reflections, but in reply give an account of the proceedings as I witnessed them, and let the reader draw his own conclusions. Services began at 7:30 P. M., the supper having been prepared before that time. Ministers present were Mr. Summers, Jonathan Swihart, and George Neff. There was but very little preaching done. After their numbers were all seated around the tables, one of the ministers arose and extended an invita-

To the Northern and Southern Districts of Kansas.

As much as the Northern Districts of Kansas, including a territory north of Kansas river has heretofore been represented with Nebraska District at our Annual Meeting, a proposition was made at our late District Meeting, and decided that a committee be appointed to correspond with the Northern Brethren. We understand the committee has done so with favorable results. They are willing to establish a line between Northern and Southern Kansas, and let each district be represented at Annual Meeting, in proportion of the other. On the 19th inst. we had a Lev-feast here in town in our home. About twenty members were present; had some earnest spectators, and ours were received by baptism—two first ones here from town. We expect more to come soon. One came in for admittance into the F. d., but he is a sailor, and is badly ever at home. He sailed from to New Castle, and has the privilege of visiting brother Madison as often as he comes there. tion to all those who felt that they could conscientiously commune with them, saying that a communion indicated a union of sentiment; while at the same time some of their sisters had their hands on, raise their hats, and the majority without other. They were led out by the singing, each brother and sister having a psalm. Immediately after supper they returned to thank for the 'loaf,' after which it was drunk; the sisters breaking it to one another same as the brethren. And likewise also the cup after supper. They then sang a hymn and went out. I suppose there were about forty communicants.—Roman, Ind., July 10th.

From Wm. Fullen.

The old ship Zion moved on slowly. Last Sunday one more was added to the tid by baptism. Our Lev-feast is past; it was a feast indeed. There were five ministers from a distance, viz: Henry Brubaker, John Forbes, Fox, Brett, and Jacob Croft. The brethren preached the Word with power. On the night of the 20th of June a severe wind storm passed through here, and unroofed Henry Hold-bend's barn, and a house was blown down, wounding man and wife. Other property was also injured. Health is good. Crops look well; that is corn and oat; wheat still not amount to much. We have plenty of rum.—Panama City, Neb.

From S. A. Satter.

In accordance with request I will give a report of the Feast held in Abieville District. We had an enjoyable feast, with a good London c. Five precious souls made the great confession and were admitted into the church by baptism; an aged father and mother were among the number. Our admiral-ship in town abroad were brother Shirk from Marion Center, and brother Shomby from Peasb. They both had forth the Word with power, and we felt that many were made to think on their ways of living. Oh that all the good resolutions passed might be carried out, is the wish of your unworthy brother in Christ.—Abieville, Kent, June 19.

"IF IT WAS NOT FOR THE DRINK"

[The wish expressed in the last verse was really overheard from the lips of a poor woman, as she was leading home her drunken husband.]

The fire is burning low,
The fire is burning low,
My eyes are blinded so with tears
I cannot see to sew;

I'm faint and hungry, and I faint
Would eat a crust of bread,
But I must wait till the morn,
The children must be fed,
I sent them early to their bed,
Their hunger to forget,

And stole to see them as they slept,
But still their cheeks were wet,
I little thought, five years ago,
That we to this should sink—
And we might all be happy still,
If it were not for the drink.

We have had rags upon us now,
Our clothes are all in pawn,
And one by one the things I loved
For rent and food are gone.
There's nothing but my shadow now
Across the empty space—

Where our old clock stood, year after year,
With its round and cherry face,
I used to like to hear it tick,
And to see the hour draw on
That brought my Joe again to me
When his day's work was done,
But when I hear his footsteps now
My heart begins to sink;
Yet he would be so kind and good
If it was not for the drink.

I'm thankful that your mother's lot
Can never rest on you,
My Lizzie with the flaxen curls,
And eyes so large and blue—
There seemed no lateness in death,
As I stood beside your grave,
For the Heavenly Shepherd had stooped down,
The weakest lamb to save,
You'll never cry again, my child,
With hunger or with cold,
For the sound of weeping is not heard
In the city all of gold.

Yet still I miss your little face,
And the tears fall as I think
I might have had you with me still,
If there had not been drink.

Oh! sometimes when I'm sitting here
I wish that I were dead,
And resting in the quiet grave
My weary heart and head;
But then again I look around
On Johnnie and on Kate,

And call the wish back as I think
Of what would be their fate,
Without my hands to wash and mend,
Without my hands to strive
To earn a little bit of bread
To keep me just alive.

For it's very, very seldom now,
That I hear Joe's wages chink;
But he would bring them all to me,
If it was not for the drink.

Ah me! It is a bitter grief
To feel one's love and trust
Have leaned upon a broken reed,
And built upon the dust!
This house is sore—but oh! my heart

Is sorer still to know,
And try to hide, whose hand it was
That gave the cruel blow.
For the drink has got that bold on Joe,
That he can't tell wrong from right;
He's dark and sullen in the morn,
But he's worse, far worse, at night.
And wicked words he often says,
That make me start and shrink—
But they would never pass his lips,
If it was not for the drink.

I feel ashamed to go to church,
Though a comfort it would be,
For the folks would think I came to beg,
If they my rags should see.

'Tis very long since I have had
A gown that was not old,
And my bonnet has been soaked with rain,
And my Sunday shawl is sold;
And so I have to stay at home,
And silently to pray

That God would pity my poor Joe,
And take his sin away,
While he sits sleeping heavily,
Without the power to think:
Yet he would think and he would pray,
If it was not for the drink.

It makes me mad to see the man,
Who sells that curse, go by
With his glittering rings and chains of gold,
Holding his head so high,
Till hard to see his wife and girls
In silks and satin shawls.

And to know the money which they spend
Should come of it be mine,
And I'm ready oftentimes to wish
That all the drink could be,
With those that make and those that sell,
Flung down into the sea;
For almost all the country's woe
And crime would with them sink,
And men might have a chance for good,
If it was not for the drink.

—A. L. Worcester.

AM I TEMPERATE?

YES, am I temperate or is it teetotalism? Well no matter but my experience may do others good. I am now thirty-eight, am a member of a family, thirteen in number, not one of whom ever indulged in smoking or chewing tobacco or imbibed the intoxicating bowl. I have yet to smoke my first cigar or pipe, or to chew my first quid of tobacco or to purchase my first drink at the bar, and for the past few years drank no tea or coffee, Adam's ale being substituted. Results, am well, hearty and happy. Have never had toothache, neuralgia or its kindred associates. Try it while young. Throw away your tobacco, etc. Be temperate, be kind to yourself, to others, and be happy.

A MORNING DRIVE.

VARIOUS are the methods suggested for the recuperation of health. One of the most pleasant is that of inhaling the pleasant and bracing morning air. How invigorating and healthful! Here goes the invalid in his carriage. We leave the city limits, out in the country, up and down the hills, we pass the rustic cottages and the good substantial farm houses, the milkmaid is singing her morning song, the farmer in the strength of his manhood is starting out on the duties of the day. The birds are not forgetful of their duty to their Maker and every give rebirth to the worshipful song of the innocent warblers.

The atmosphere abounds with the sweetest aroma from the various flowers, and all nature teems with success and happiness. We pass on inhaling the cool bracing atmosphere of the lovely June morning, our minds are so enraptured by the varied scenery that we forget for a time our ailments—we are almost well. We return to our home much refreshed, eat our meal and then attend to the duties of the day as our strength permits, feeling that our early rising and the morning drive was to our benefit.

Invalids, try it. Get away from your cares, nurse them not, if possible; they will shorten, not lengthen life. For ourself we are no invalid, we are well now. But the companion is in poor health, and we find it pleasant and advantageous to be driven, and reap some of the benefits of pure air. By careful living, eating, laboring, etc., we are on the road to health, which brings in its train happiness, and by this we forget the sorrows of life.

TOBACCO CANCER.

BY DR. A. L. W. BOWERS.

THIS is one of the most terrible kind to which a human race is subject. It generally commences at a small blister in the mouth, tongue, and lip, which gradually ulcerates and becomes intensely painful. I can state, from my own observations, after thirty years of extensive and hard labor in my profession, that I have come to the conclusion the action of tobacco on the heart is depressing. Of all the vices which have gained the mastery over our young men, it may be assumed, without fear of contradiction, that tobacco and masturbation now outrank all others. The habitual use of tobacco, either direct or indirect, has destroyed more human beings than the sword. In a moral and physical point of view, the use of tobacco in any way is a low, dirty, filthy practice. Christian, how can you indulge in a habit which destroys the five senses, debiles the whole body, and pollutes the heart which was designed by God for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit?—Selected by Mrs. A. Wilmore.

"AT MY FATHER'S TABLE."

A POOR drunkard was once asked, "How did you begin such a wretched course of life?" "Ah, sir," was the reply, "my first love for drink was given at my father's table when I was a boy. We often had visitors, and my father was accustomed to drink to the health of his guests. They drank to his health in return. When I joined them, with my little glass in my hand, I was applauded as drinking quite like a man." I was thus early trained in habits of drinking, and before I left home to enter upon my professional life I had learned to love the drink which has been my ruin." (E)

The best cough drop for young ladies is to drop the practice of drinking this when they go out into the night air.

BROWER-MILLER.—At the residence of the bride's parents, June 20, 1881, by Bro. Hiram Berkman, Bro. Adam H. Brower, of Keokuk Co., Iowa, and sister Mollie L. Miller of Monroe Co., Iowa.

LIZZIE M. BROWER.

Fallen Asleep.

Blind as the dead which dwells in the land.—Ecc. 10: 12.

MILLER.—Near Lacooa, Warren Co., Iowa, May 18, 1881, Bro. Nathan Miller, aged 49 years, 3 months and 4 days.

Deceased was born in Maryland, Jan. 14, 1832; when two years old, his parents removed with him to Seneca Co., Ohio, where he lived till 1852, when he moved to Allen Co., Ohio, where he married the widow of Enoch Brower, in the Fall of 1857; shortly after his marriage he united with the Brethren church. In 1858 he removed to Keokuk Co., Iowa, resided there two years; then moved to Warren Co., Iowa, where he resided till his death.

He was elected to the office of deacon, then called to the ministry in the first degree, in 1881. His disease was congestion of the liver and yellow jaundice. Although confined to his bed for five weeks, he was not considered dangerous till 12 hours before his death. Although thus unexpectedly called, we have every reason to believe, he was prepared to go; his daily walk and conversation bore witness that he had been born again.—He passed away without a struggle as quietly as if going to sleep.

Funeral services at his late residence by Bro. Jonathan Beard from Rev. 14: 12-13, to a large audience. He leaves a wife four children and three step-children to mourn their loss, but they do not mourn as those who have no hope.

THOMAS MILLER.

BAKER.—In the Des Moines Valley church, Polk Co., Iowa, June 29th, 1881, Eld. G. R. Baker, aged 63 years, 3 months and 12 days.

Bro. Baker's death will be deeply felt in the church. Funeral discourse by the writer from Rev. 20: 5, 6.

S. M. GOVERNOUR.

TRASTER.—April 17, 1881, Sarah A. Traster, aged 39 years, 2 months and 5 days, (at North Manchester, Ind.)

This was the greatest sufferer of all that die of small pox, suffering both of body and mind, but now she has gone to meet a merciful Judge and High Priest, who can be touched with the feeling of human infirmities. Funeral by W. R. Deester and the writer.

DANIEL SHIVELEY.

HINTSH.—April 24, 1881, sister Mary Hinsh, of Bedford Co., Pa., aged 80 years, 2 months and 28 days.

She had been married seventy years, and was a widow 28 years. She was the mother of ten children and had 54 grandchildren and 26 great-grandchildren. She had long identified herself with the Lutheran church, but eventually changed her church relationship and united with the brotherhood of which she has been a consistent member for 25 years. She adorned her profession with a godly walk. Truly she was gathered home as a shock of corn fully matured. Her whole conversation was in heaven.

She realized that her treasures were in heaven, and was anxiously waiting for the summons. She often expressed the thought that she might go to sleep and waken up in the world of spirits, although her mind was giving away under the pressure of age. She remarked to a minister that called to see her, that her mind was so poor, that she could hardly keep up conversation, but she said there were two things that she had never forgotten, the name of Jesus, and how to pray.

Her disease was paralysis. During her last sickness she lived 33 days without eating. She was tenderly cared for at the home of her son, where everything was done for her, that kind children can do for a mother.

Her funeral sermon was preached by Bro. John Rush, from John 14—27,—she had selected her own text.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Correction.—In our article, "The irrepressible Conflict," Page 378, No. 24, after "straw" at the end of line 34 from the top, there should be a period.—"be next two sentences should be of an interrogatory character, thus, "Who, by divine appointment ever said that God created all things out of nothing? That He first created a confused mass of materials out of nothing and from this chaotic mass He created the earth and the solar system?"

After the query (in same article) "What does the Bible teach on immateriality? Read, "Ecce answers, what?"

J. S. FLOYD.

From John S. Snowberger.—Among the things of the past is the Communion meeting of the Beaver Creek church, Nebraska, which was indeed an enjoyable meeting to all the members present and to the large congregation, convened on the 18th and 19th.

A good ministerial force came to our help, among them Eld. D. Bechtelmeier, lately from Ind., Elders J. J. Hoover and J. P. Moomaw; also Bro. Jesse Heckler and S. Sleatman, from Cass Co., Neb., and J. Irubaker, who all did good service in holding forth the Word of Life to saint and sinner,—saints were made to feel that the season they enjoyed a little while at the feet of Jesus, was a little foretaste of the great Communion of the redeemed, in the climate of eternal glory, and sinners were made to cry out and say, Lord, save or we perish.

Five precious souls came out on the Lord's side, and we added to the faithful and confessed Jesus before the large assembly of spectators who convened at the water-side to see them buried with Christ in baptism, and rise to walk in newness of life. And still the Spirit is striving; today another made the good confession, while we see others are near the kingdom. Hope they will not do like one of old,—say, "Go thy way for this time; at a more convenient season, I will call for thee."

May the Lord still add to the little band of believers here,—those that should be saved. The church saw the need of more help in the ministry and agreed to choose one of their number to labor in word and doctrine. The lot fell on our dear, young brother, (and son of the writer) Andrew C. Snowberger. We never saw more sympathy manifested and more tears shed on occasions of this kind by members and others. Hope with humility of heart and meekness of spirit he may take up the cause of the Master, labor far Zion's good in this part of God's vine-ward and to the honor of the great name of him that was dead and is alive, for evermore. Amen.—York, Neb., June 26.

From H. C. Lucas.—Camp Creek church is slowly growing. We had seven additions, six by baptism and one by letter, at the time of our communion last Fall. Two more were received by baptism yesterday, and more are counting the cost. Our minister, Bro. John L. Meyers, speaks boldly in the name of our Master, and shuns not to declare the whole counsel of God. In this age it requires fearlessness on the part of a minister; for the love of many seems to wax cold, and there are so many things in the world, people love and worship.

In former days the world put to death bodily, those that preached Christ, but now they would kill them by hatred. Servants of Christ, be on your guard. Be awake to your duty, to the interests of the cause of Christ! There is much grain to be got ready for the heavenly garner, which will be wasted if neglected.—Macomb, Ill.

From C. H. Brown.—Our Love-feast, appointed June 25th was heartily enjoyed by the brethren and sisters who attended. Services conducted by Bro. John Shephard to an attentive audience. Many good impressions were made; several seemed to be seriously counting the cost and were almost persuaded to make the good choice; but like Felix of old preferred to wait for a more convenient season. May the Lord enable us all, to have all in our vessels, when the bide-groom comes.—Woodstock, Wis., June 26th.

From E. Miller.—Probably a few items from Middle Indiana may be received with some interest. Weather is now exceedingly hot. Thermometer stand about 90 degrees in the shade; to-day some thundering in the distance. There are indications of rain which is badly needed. Health is pretty good; wheat is about all on shock and is only about half a crop; it was cutshort by the drought and fly. But oats, flax and corn look quite promising. Grass only midding good; fruit plenty. Church news not very flattering; entirely too warm to go to meeting; it will do though to cut wheat or plow corn. This though is not as it should be.—Pierceton, Ind., July 10.

In sinking a well some seven miles west of Foxburg, Pa., a few days since, the remarkable discovery of a vein of natural coal tar was made, at a depth of 270 feet below the surface. The discovery is the first of the kind on record.

How do you like our new paper this week?

FARMERS here are just now in the midst of harvest.

PREMIERE you have read the Microcosm by this time.

THE army woman is doing bad work in some parts of Southern Illinois.

MILK men fell last week--rather much for harvesting and hay-making.

SOME of the Eastern papers are having a lively discussion over the editorial "we."

BRO. Daniel Bright culled a few moments last Wednesday. He was then on his way home.

THE address of D. Province is changed from Columbia, Mo., to Arrow Rock, Saline Co., Mo.

YOU are man, don't whine; there is plenty of room for you as high. Go to work and earn something.

BRO. Cyrus Walker, of Michigan, spent a few days with us last week. We were pleased to have him with us.

WE have just past eight thousand pounds of new paper in our paper room. Hope to remain well supplied with paper after this.

BRO. D. M. Paterbaugh, of Elkhart, Ind., writes that two more were added to the church July 17th, a young man and his wife.

CABLE reports represent a continuance of excessive warm weather throughout Europe. The city of Madrid is "like a fiery furnace."

As the season for lake and river boating and bathing progresses the number of drowning increases. The list is becoming formidable.

THE address of elder John Knabill is changed from West Independence, Hancock Co., Ohio, to Farmer Center, DeWitt County, Ohio.

AT the rate of the emigration to America thus far this year Germany will lose about a quarter of a million of its "most efficient subjects" before the close of 1881.

It now turns out that the band did not play in the Ashland College at their Commencement services; it was an outside affair not approved by the managers of the school.

STEPHEN JOHNSON, Garrison, Iowa, writes "Our Feed is among the things of the past; it was an engenderer. Six previous souls made the good confession and were baptized."

LET none of our young people, especially, fail to read "Over the Hill to the Poor-house," on another page. Read it slowly and then pause to think a moment. Ponder well the two last lines.

DEAN Stanley, of Westminster Abbey, England, died last week. He was sixty-six years of age. In his death the Church of England loses one of her best commentators and ripest scholars. His death will be widely lamented by the reading public.

THE President is still improving slowly, and it is generally believed that he may recover, though he is by no means out of danger.

BRO. J. H. Worst writes that he expects to spend a few weeks on the Atlantic coast in Chesapeake Co., Maryland. After that he is not certain where he will stop.

BRO. J. H. Worst has disposed of his interest in the Gospel Preacher and retired from the editorial, thus leaving the paper entirely under the control of brother Miller.

BRO. R. H. Miller, in the Preacher says the college services did not close with a benediction as was reported, but "with a short paper concluded with the Lord's prayer." That is good news, but how reports do get out!

WE greatly admire true principles of economy, but never did like to hear a man lecture his wife about the expense use of tea and coffee while he has a plug of tobacco in his pocket. If he is wise, this list will be sufficient.

ON the 3rd inst., brother J. W. Beer, of Oakland, Armstrong Co., Pa., was ordained in the Red Bank congregation, and in the same house in which, twenty years ago, he was chosen to the ministry. Elders Lewis Kameel, of Flona Creek, and J. P. Hetrick, of Philadelphia, officiated.

ENGLAND, by the census just taken, numbers within a few thousand of twenty-six millions. This is an enormous number on a piece of territory no larger than the State of Illinois. More than twenty of the twenty-six millions live in cities and towns, and are engaged in manufactures and commerce.

WHILE on the summit of Pike's Peak, July 15th, brother D. L. Miller says: "This cord is being with in 14,176 feet above the level of the sea--a large flat stone for a desk and a small one for a chair. With, brother Eshelman and self are seated around the desk. I wish you were here to enjoy the view; it is grand beyond description."

ONE of the clowns of the Illinois Legislature refused the pay of three dollars a day which was voted to him. He said he hadn't earned the money. He had prayed that the members of the House might have wisdom, honesty of purpose, patience, and grace, but did not think his prayers had availed any thing, and for that reason did not think that he was entitled to any pay.

WHAT think ye of this, ye that are scoffing in an atmosphere which drives the gauge up to 90-100? Sister Kate Gamble writes us from Cedarville, Madoc county, California, July 6th: "I'm cold here: ice every night and we are surrounded by snow." But she is not located there, but on her way to Lodi, in California county, Oregon, which will be her permanent address.--Progressive Christian.

THE village of New Ulm, Minn., was the scene of a terrible calamity on Friday evening, July 16th. A destructive cyclone swept through the town and the vicinity, demolishing all the buildings in its course. From twelve to twenty persons were killed there and in the region round about, and many others were seriously injured. The loss of property is estimated at over $300,000, and other localities as much more. In the most terrific storms of the present season, this was the most destructive. Several hundred buildings were literally torn into fragments, and the wonder is that any of the inhabitants escaped alive.

THE Holy Man of Seazonal, in Tripoli, who is only awaiting his fateful battle-day--which will be next year--to reveal himself as the "Mehedi," or reformer of the Mohammedans, destined to drive the Christians from Northern Africa, is visited by thousands of pilgrims, showing the amount of superstition there is among the people in that country.

THOR. SWIFT, Director of the Warner Observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has just verified the discovery of another comet, in the Constellation of Antares, made July 14th, by Prof. J. M. Schaefer, of Amherst, Mich. This new comet is apparently coming directly toward the earth, and for a telescopic comet, it is very bright; indeed it can readily be seen with a good opera glass. It is quite remarkable that it should be in just the spot where the present large comet was last seen by the naked eye in the latitude, and it shows that the two bodies must have crossed each other's paths. This makes the fourth comet discovered within ten weeks, a circumstance heretofore unknown in history.

SOME of the Brethren at Ashland seem to think that in our articles about the late Annual Meeting we strongly intimated that some of the Brethren have charged for lodging members during the Annual Meeting. Brother R. H. Miller writes that they can find no instance where any thing of the kind was done by any of the members in Ashland. Now we beg leave to state to the Brethren that we did not mean that our articles should be interpreted in that way. While at Ashland we were treated very kindly, and so far as we are concerned, I individually we do not care that the Brethren at Ashland charged for lodging members. They say they did not, and at once we take their word for it. Our object was to correct what we conceived to be a tendency; we were looking to the future and not to the past.

It is astonishing to what degree of perfection, in art and civilization some of the ancient empires and kingdoms attained. By the smothering of Pompeii, Niniveh, Babylon, and many other kindred ruins the world has been surprised at beholding their ruins of temples, grand palaces, magnificent residences, and fine sculptures, many of which, though these are but four thousand years old, excel the fine art works of modern times. Our attention has just been called through these things by a work entitled Museums of Antiquity, a description of ancient life. An hour with this book each evening for a week would astonish most of our readers. The author has grouped, in one handsome volume, a vast amount of information in regard to the people and cities that lived and existed thousands of years ago. It is finely illustrated, and will be found a most entertaining book for both old and young.

MR. GREEN, of Chicago, has finished his fast of forty-five days, during which time he abstained entirely from food of any kind. His stomach seemed to have been in a good condition at the close of the fast, and he was able to partake of only a slice of white-sof food without any inconvenience. On course it took to learn to see a man engage in such an undertaking, yet valuable lessons may be learned by the observing classes. There are times when abstaining from food becomes a necessity. In case of sickness it is often a benefit. Sometimes persons are ill of whom food cannot do good for several days. Examining the facts already named, from fasting persons with ordinary health and good will never exist in a fast condition for ten or twenty days with but little inconvenience. If they are placed where food cannot be obtained for several days they may rest contentedly, knowing that it is possible for them to live through it with but little trouble.

SOWING AND REAPING.

BY GEO. D. ZOLLERS.

The aerial regions are vocal with song,
The bright vernal season is here;
The cold piercing winds of stern Winter are gone,
With its aspect so cheerless and drear.
The farmers are urging the sower and plough
To scatter the grain in the field
Their chances for sowing are valuable now.
Who sows not can look for no yield;
Each husbandman knows he shall reap what he sows,
Be it wheat, oats, barley, or corn,
No doubting and quibbling this fact admit grows,
Twill render its natural return.
'Tis a law in our being decidedly sure,
We shall reap what we sow in this life,
Be they words of affection divinely pure
Or words of division and strife.
The gospel-field is open for us,
And the humble-see-sowing in hand.
The seed is growing in its native soil,
To gladden their harvest years.
The golden season of life is the time
The seeds of truth to sow;
O scatter them freely in prose or rhyme,
Perchance they may quicken and grow.
The wonderful harvest is coming on,
To award us with weal or woe,
When all must convene at the Judgment throne,
And assuredly reap what we sow.

THE BAPTISM OF THE HOLY GHOST NEEDFUL.

BY J. E. SWEELY.

THE work of the Holy Ghost is divine; the Holy Ghost or Spirit is the Comforter of the church. The spirit directs us in our duty, and enables us to approve things that are excellent or distinguish between things that differ. The hearts of the chosen are commonly comforted and enlightened in proportion as they glory in the mystery of godliness, and are filled with the fullness of God. In the Word of God there is a precious treasure, an inexhaustible measure, and we can only be enriched from this in proportion to the measure we are filled with the spirit, and in proportion to the simplicity, humbleness, and perseverance with which we seek it. These treasures cannot be discovered by the proud and unbelieving; they are hid from them. Nor can they be discovered, dear reader, by any one only by diligent study and application; we must study. We need not be discouraged because we are unlearned,—because we have but one talent. It matters not whether we have one or five talents; if we have the aid of the divine spirit we may be trained for heaven, and all unite with the hundred and forty thousand in singing the new song. If we ever sing this song, it will be because we have learned it, and have occupied till the Master comes.

There are inquiries what constitutes a thorough preparation for the ministry. Certainly an important question. We believe that the will of God will furnish the inquiring mind satisfaction on this subject as well as on other Bible subjects to which our attention is called. Nothing has ever been so holy that it was not abused. Nothing has ever been so plain that it has not been misunderstood. There are extremes in nearly everything. There might be such a thing as laying too much stress upon human learning as constituting the principal part of an education for the ministry, and too little stress laid upon the necessity of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. Permit me to ask what qualifies or prepares one for this work? Is it because we are for the most part unlearned or is it simply a collegiate education? We answer, By no means. Although an education is important, it is not by far the principal part of an education or qualification for the ministry in the common acceptance of the term. The apostles were unlearned. They were a useful class of preachers as in all probability will ever be produced. We cannot hold this as an argument, that learning is unimportant, for we believe since the days of the apostles there have been numbers of learned men that have been useful and efficient in the church, and on the other hand there have been many learned preachers,—men who were famed for human learning, never knew what to say and do to promote sanctification in the church, but were in bondage to sin and lust. This proves that the spiritual influence and usefulness of a minister is not so much in his literal attainments, but in a measure he is filled with the fullness of God. Without union and communion with Christ and with the Father through him by the supply of the Spirit, we can do nothing; we must be complete in him.

Then all we want we derive from his fullness. What we need and must have is the "Baptism of the Holy Ghost." If all were Israel that were of Israel, if all were washed or cleansed in the atoning blood who have been immersed in water in symbol of this washing, there would be a fitness for induction into the sacred ministry; all would be members of the commonwealth of Israel, and our entire being imbued with the Spirit of Christ. We have peculiar need to insist on the need of the Holy Ghost at the present day, while many are employed in beguiling men and depreciating revelation. We have need of this baptism, from the fact, "Though we understood all mysteries and all knowledge, and could speak with the tongues of men and angels," and have not the Baptism of the Holy Ghost we are nothing.

We need knowledge, but depend upon it, all boasted knowledge that is in the least opposed to the mysteries of godliness is worldly wisdom—a vain deceit. We want that knowledge that brings with it godliness. We want wisdom that brings us close to peace and righteousness and makes our homes happier. In Christ is hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; all else is foolishness. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Then what good would three scores and ten ministers do us, be they chosen from the college, from the seminary, from the farm, or shop without the Baptism of the Holy Ghost? Without this baptism there would be a sad failure. The greater the number of ministers and lay members that have not received this baptism, the greater the "jangling and party zeal." Bitter looks and hateful animosities, all such are murderers and enemies to God,—are in the way of the mission of Christ and his Word to save the world. Then, dearly beloved, let us wake up to this important truth and insist upon it, in the whole course of our education, be that in the College, in the field, in the shop, or in the pulpit. Then God will be our helper, and our labor will be crowned with success and we may worthily praise and magnify his holy name.

THE SECOND COMING AND MILLENNIAL REIGN OF CHRIST.

BY JAS. EVANS.

WRITERS on prophecy and eschatology are divided into two great classes called pre-millennarians and post-millennarians. By the former we understand those who look for the personal coming of Jesus and the resurrection of all who sleep in him, before the conversion of the world or the establishment of Christ's universal dominion over the earth. By the latter we comprehend those who teach the triumph of Christianity and the conversion of the world before this age closes; before Jesus comes in the clouds of heaven, a thousand years of peace and rest will exist, and that the distinction between world and church will cease, the narrow way will be thronged with travelers and all outward troubles cease. This class of expositors teach the entire destruction of the globe, its complete annihilation and return to nothing. Believing as they do, that God made all things out of nothing, they conclude that the Almighty Creator will remand it back to its original nonentity as though it never was. The first class teaches that God foresees the end from the beginning, and that he made the earth for his pleasure and for the manifestation of his glory and grace. God once smiled on the earth, and at its birth the morning stars sang together and the sons of God shouted for joy. Then came sin and the curse, but this fair earth is to be redeemed, Satan dethroned, and in the palinogenesis or regeneration a more glorious anthem will raise and angels will strike their harps anew, and sweeter strains will be sung than at creation's birth. Thus eternal wisdom sang before mountains were brought forth, "My delights were with the sons of men." The earth is not to be an eternal wreck, stranded on the shores of time, but in a changed form, to be the tabernacle of God when the glories of the descending city shall fill the earth. Such is the bright future that cheers us amid the gloom and shadows of death, which have fallen on our earth. We see creation made subject to vanity, and the mantle of death over the world. But beyond the tide, the storm of life, the troubled sea, we see light beaming from the eternal throne, around which is seen the emerald rainbow heralding creation's deliverance, when the heirs of glory, the sons of God shall be manifested as associate judges with him who is the Restorer of all things, the desire of all nations, to whom every knee shall bow in heaven, in earth, and under the earth. Amen and amen.

The second appearing of Jesus before all nations can be blessed and the glories of the coming age and ages to come was the faith and hope of all the primitive Christians, as we shall show in due time. We can trace this faith to the apostles just as we trace trine immersion. Irenæus, Justin down to Lactantius inculcated it. No voice of dissent was raised to it for 300 years, but when the falling away commenced it was treated as an allegory, then as a doubtful opinion, and at length as a heresy.

When we examine the New Testament we find reference made to the coming of Jesus to judge the living and dead 400 times. Surely this is sufficient to obtain for it a respectful hearing instead of being treated as an untaught question and a useless, dangerous dogma of mere speculation. The mistakes and fanciful interpretations of prophecy are no valid reasons why we should close our ears to the testimony of prophets, Jesus and his apostles. We might just as well repeal the ordinances of the gospel because they have been perverted and abused by men as to refuse to hear and understand the testimony concerning the blessed hope and the issues involved in the coming of Jesus, as earth's rightful King and the Judge of all.

There is no other event for which Jesus teaches us to watch and wait. Nowhere are we told to wait for death as a good angel keeping the pearly gates. No we wait for God's Son from heaven. 1 Thess. 1: 10. Jesus is our forerunner through the veil. He prepares a place for us, but he comes again, takes his bride to himself and brings her into the King's palace. No sweeter promise left on record than this: "I will come again and receive you to myself." What shall be given then? A crown of glory when the chief Shepherd shall appear. Before this crown can be given, Jesus must return. No resurrection of the Lord, no abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom, no destruction of death till Jesus comes. Before he comes our lives are hid with Christ in God. Col. 3:3. But when he shall appear we shall appear with him in glory. The Jasper-walled city is not the home of the soul as poets falsely sing, but the home of body, soul, and spirit, all externally combined never to be separated. No inspired seer ever saw disembodied souls upon the throne or within the pearly gates, but under the altar with white robes waiting the little season. After we leave this tabernacle there is nothing tangible or corporeal till we reach the resurrection shore and our feet stand within the gates of the city, built by God.

Honest men differ as to the state of the soul between death and the resurrection. We feel no concern about it. So long as we know our lives are hid in God and we sleep in Jesus we are contented to let that portion of time be what the Lord makes it. We cannot alter the divine arrangement, and soon the question will be settled with us all. But beyond the dream land, the shadow world, the reign of death, there is a land of pure delight where thrones will be set and we shall live and reign with Christ. We reach terra firma on the resurrection shore. We clasp immortal hands there, and enjoy the perfection of being in that auster world. We enter no list of controversy here. We affirm nothing as to the state of the dead, but we implore our brethren to refrain from clothing the death state with resurrection glory. When we read that a brother has gone to his final reward, we feel sad to see precious promises forgotten. Is there no reward when Jesus comes? Do we wear the crown, bear the palm and reign with Christ as soon as we die? The final reward is at the resurrection of the just. The old-fashioned doctrine of the resurrection is fast fading from the minds of the nominal church. We see the poison of the Hymenean doctrine permeating the church. The resurrection is passing and Jesus will never return again, is becoming the belief of many. But we will wait till Jesus comes. We will stand by the old landmarks and love his appearing. Remember, dear reader, that it is written in the Book that you receive as divinely inspired, that to them who look for him he will appear the second time without sin unto salvation. The faithful bride rejoices in hope of seeing her husband. It is the unfaithful bride who fears to meet the man she has wronged and for whom she has not lived. Do we love to see him to whom we are espoused and to whom we are joined in deathless bonds?

CHRISTIAN PANTHEISM

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Mary C. Norman, of Sharon, Minn.—

SCIENCE has proved it, even while loudly proclaiming that God is a myth of the frightened, perverted, priest tyrannized imagination. Professor Haeckle, of Germany, the boldest, most irreverent, God mocking atheist now living, has shown incontrovertibly a thousand times that there is a God by the very facts and laws he so blindly and flippantly marshals to demonstrate His non-existence. "Know thyself" is to know God as a fact just as we know there is a man by the light he sheds. To know God as we know ourselves, is something higher and deeper, and amounts in some sense to identity. "I yet not I, but Christ in me," is the only knowledge of God that saves. "I am the living bread which came down from heaven; if any man eat of this bread, he shall live forever: and the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life." "For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed" John 6: 51-55. This is still the highest rapture and the most radical fact of the saint and the most intolerable bombast and mysticism to pharisee and sadist. All blood born, man born, and wolf born religionists cry out with their Christ hating prototypes, "this is a hard saying; who can hear it?" So the saint knows God as he knows the bread he eats. He may be utterly ignorant of its chemical constituents, and of the process of digestion, and the law of assimilation, but he eats, is nourished and strengthened, built up and renewed, and thus we know as the most natural, real, essential knowledge. We do not get it by argument, although the very logic of God is in it. We have faith in food which means the ultimates of eating and drinking. Our sense of rejuvenation, and the rivers of living water that flow therefrom, is our faith in its genuine Christian form. Any thing short of this is notion, no matter how much college logic, and polished prayer, and religious punctilio, and vaunting bragadocio, and presumptions of progress are summoned to support it. Ichabod is the superscription on its phylactery. God can be known unto salvation only in one way; namely, as Bread eaten and appropriated, and again reappearing in the form of its original life, God incarnate. The life of every animal, plant, and insect is God. "In Him was life"—all life. Haeckle's Gospel of "Spontaneous Generation" is only the wildest palaver. And just as empty and fatal is the religion of those who imagine that a careful training of our innate religious powers and sentiments, and a faultless ordering of the life on its native moral plane, is Christianity. It is the infidel doctrine of spontaneous generation applied to the higher life. "Ye must be born again"—"born of God." It is no mere a figure of speech than the Incarnation of God in Christ. Any responsible life that is dominated by any thing lower than God in its purpose and expression, is accursed. It tends to hell as inevitably as waters run downward.

These are things not for rhetoric, not for speculative theology, but for experience, for the deepest reality of our personal being. God is always waiting at the door of righteousness to welcome in any soul that may be wholly given to the Divine will as embodied in and exhibited by Emmanuel. Those that seek are sure to find, but they must seek at the right place and in the right way. A few weeks ago, I saw a bench full of so called mourners, praying, screaming, wringing their hands, pounding the bench, praying back and forth, and some on their backs on the floor, kicking and flailing and wringing even to bruises, "with strong crying and tears" imploring the Divine forgiveness, and at the same time their persons were tricked off in the gaudy, fluttering harness of the devil. The preacher walked to and fro in front, clapping his hands, shouting encouragement, and blowing fresh wind fire into those poor deluded petitioners. Would it not be discounting the sufferings of Christ, and snuffing at the cross and turning the whole Incarnation into a farce to answer such prayers? And have we not just such flesh pampering, cross scorning, Christ-mockers in our own fraternity? They are afraid not to have some "form of godliness," but ashamed of "God in the flesh." A Parisian religion suits them better than infested Deity who is to the casual mind "without form or comeliness." To be one with God is simply to let him live the beauty and power and sweetness of His life in us according to our capacity to receive it. Just as certainly as we turn with all the heart, soul, and mind Godward, will we be "filled with all the fullness of God." The life of Jesus flows in as natural and freely as the beams of the sun through a window when the blinds are removed. God put into man what he put into no inferior creature, viz.: His very Self. God has the power of choice between right and wrong no less than we. There is no responsibility without it. In the right by choice is Godlikeness and vice versa is devilish. "Ye generation of vipers" includes all flesh-pleasers. "Ye are of your father the devil" means all who prefer the life in which the Cross is not the centre. The Incarnation is hard on the devil and his adherents. No quarter to the powers of hell. No compromise with the flesh. There is "no name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved," but the "name above every name," which is spelled out of scourge and thorns and spikes and blood and death groans. Philippi 2: 5-11. Note well the whencefore in verse 9. How it works all would be Christians who say "Lord, Lord," and flaunt the insignia of the flesh, and revel in the self-adultery which it heralds. Who is Christ? The Incarnation of God, and the Antetype of all Christians. "What think ye of Christ?" My "Alpha and Omega" responds the God-born soul, "Away with Him," "Crucify Him," "we will not have this man to reign over us," vociferates the fleshly mind. The issue goes for Eternity. The life that dies not with Christ here, reigns not with Him hereafter. God is in sin and hell as well as in holiness and heaven. In the only He is in Judgment and judgment and torment in the flesh. He is the eternal Beatific Presence. "The law of the spirit" "Christ Jesus," is also "the law of sin and death" to those who antagonize the cross. The law of the Lord is the flame of endless horror and agony, no less than endless rapture. I AM is the supreme fact of the universe, and our harmony with Him is Heaven. The power of earth and hell cannot keep the peace and bliss of God out of a soul hid with Christ in the heart of Infinite holiness and Love.

THE ADVERSARY

1 Pet 5: 8

BY W. B. NEFF.

THE apostle in this chapter is teaching the elders how to live and conduct themselves in order to show a proper light to those who are under their control, and in the 8th verse makes use of the following language: "Be sober, be vigilant, because your adversary, the devil, as a roaring lion, walketh about, seeking whom he may devour." Now the apostle in order to more vividly impress the mind in regard to the deceitfulness of Satan, makes use of a figure. He compares him to a roaring lion. In order to more fully understand the figure, it will be necessary to study the nature of this wild, ferocious beast. The lion is dreaded by all, for he is a sneaking, blood-thirsty beast, pouncing down upon his victim from some place of concealment when not looked for. And while prowling about in the forest he sometimes utters a doleful sound that is at times alarming. If we apply the illustration to the enemy of souls we may learn something in regard to the nature of him. We learn that he is a deceitful being, true to nothing but sin, of which he is the author, and stands in direct opposition to God and righteousness. Having the power to appear as an angel of light, (2 Cor. 11: 14), yet in reality he is nothing but a seething mass of darkness. It is the purpose of Satan to plunge the whole human family into wretchedness and woe; he desires to get them so engulphed in sin as to forget their Creator, who is the source of all blessings, both spiritual and temporal, and thus lead them into sin. Though Satan does not personally appear in this soul destroying work, yet he has his means and tributaries of sin, which tend to lead people away from God and into ruin. The principal of these is the dance, ball room, saloon, theatre, and gambling dens of all sorts. In connection with these are a host of all manner of evils, which are mediums of his own mechanism, and some of them, we are sorry to say, are hidden beneath the cloak of religion. Now brethren, it becomes necessary that we shun the places of sin which Satan hath established in the world, always looking unto Jesus as the Author and Finisher of our faith, who is the wisdom and power of God unto you who are faithful.

A PLAN TO AID MISSIONARY WORK

BY J. F. NEHER.

I WILL suggest to the Brotherhood in general for consideration the following plan to aid in missionary work. Let competent brethren be appointed by the Annual Meeting to write out the faith, doctrine and practice of the Brethren, briefly setting forth the main arguments and reasons for our order, practice, etc. The same to be published in pamphlet form for free distribution, and that a brother or sister be appointed in each congregation to solicit contributions to pay expenses of publication.

There are hundreds and perhaps thousands of communities where nothing is known of our people, and even in States and counties where there are organized churches of our Brethren. There are many communities where but a faint idea is had of the Brethren's faith, order and practice. If pamphlets, as above described, were freely distributed in such localities it would, to a great extent, set us in a proper light, and would call forth many to inquire after the primitive faith, order, and practice.

If Brethren going to new fields of labor had a number of such pamphlets previously distributed, they would, in a great measure, prepare the people and save time and preaching in setting forth the doctrine of the church. There are many brethren who are not ministers, and sisters, too, who are anxious and willing to do what they can to extend the borders of church and would take great delight in circulating such pamphlets.

It must be admitted that a great deal of good has been accomplished by the free distribution of tracts, pamphlets, and papers by the Brethren, which has only been on a small scale. Then is it not reasonable to suppose that if such a work was increased a hundredfold that the result would be in proportion. Many other reasons might be given to prove the propriety of such an enterprise; but let the above suffice for the present.

In order to show where our Brethren are located, a list of our ministers with their addresses might be added. I have known circumstances where persons became convinced by reading the Brethren's works, and went a great distance in order to unite with the Brethren, which might have been avoided if such a list had been in their possession. Now what do you say, Brethren?

AN EVIL TO BE CORRECTED.

ONE of the crying sins of the age is irreverence. This is too apt to thoughtlessly creep into the language and actions of those who deal much in sacred themes, especially in their moments of relaxation. In the mention of themes the most sacred and awful, some are forgetful for the time of the import of those themes. The Christian Era has some excellent remarks on this subject. It says: "Our greatest wonder is, how men who profess to believe in the transcendent themes of the Bible, in a heaven of infinite holiness and in an endless retribution, can bring themselves to talk of them in a trifling and jesting way. We involuntarily ask ourselves, do these men really believe in God, in his Word, in eternal retribution? that millions of their fellow-creatures are dropping into endless torment? Do they know what they are talking about? Have they ever considered what these things mean? Do they not see that they are awakening suspicions in the minds of men, that, after all, there is no reality in what the Bible says of a future life, and that thus they are taking away from others the whole Word of God, and turning it into fables? This is to dishonour the Divine Word in a most effectual way."—Sci.

To simply work is nothing; we must do it for Jesus' sake. Many of the busiest people in the world forget to consecrate their labor, and then wonder at the absence of the expected fruit.

THE SIGN OF AUTHORITY.

BY ELD. S. Z. SHARP.

For this cause ought the woman to have a sign of authority on her head because of the angels. I Cor. 11:10.

WE quote the above as found in the "new translation," and will make some comments upon it. It will be observed that the words in italics we not found in King James' version, but according to the rules of the last translator this change was approved by at least two thirds of their number. We give two of their rules:

"That in the above resolutions we do not contemplate any new translation of the Bible or any alteration of the language except where in the judgment of the most competent scholars such change is necessary."

"That the text to be adopted be that for which the evidence is decidedly preponderating, and that when the text so adopted differs from that from which the Authorized Version was made, the alteration be indicated in the margin."

From the above rules it will be seen that the words, "a sign of," were deemed "necessary" by the most competent scholars.

Secondly. This change is sustained by the most "preponderating evidence."

Third. The American translators were in favor of this rendering without any marginal note. (See appendix to N. Testament.)

Fourth. The sense of the context and the spirit of the language demand this change.

Fifth. Many of the most ancient copies of the Vulgate contain these words.

The above overwhelming evidence must decide in favor of receiving these words into the text.

Now a few remarks in reference to that "sign."

Just what it should be, I am not able to say, neither do I think the Scripture does; but it is a plain case, that, whatever is used, it must be something recognized as "a sign of authority."

Men's hats are not signs of authority, since they are not worn nor recognized as such. Neither are fashionable ladies' hats such signs for the same reason, and for the additional reason, "because they are fashionable," not "because of the angels." A sign, or an ensign, always represents an idea, recognized and understood. For an example, a printed word, a symbol in mathematics, a flag, a dress in the army, at court, in a society, or in a church. A fashionable dress represents an idea, so does a plain one, if it be peculiar and so understood. A crown on the head indicates that the wearer has authority over others. The veil (whatever it was) which the primitive sisters wore was a sign showing the wearer to be under authority. A bonnet, if fashionable, is no more a sign of authority than a hat, because it is not worn out of respect to the angels, but out of respect to the fashionable world. Now it may be asked whether a hat could not be employed as a token of authority. I believe that possible. But it would have to be unlike those the men wear, unlike those the worldly ladies wear; it would first have to be established as a sign of authority. A sign cannot have two meanings at the same time.

Some one asks, "How is it that our old sisters could wear hats by the consent of the church?"

Because they never wore a plain hat on their heads unless they also wore a plain cap under it. The cap was worn as a token of authority, according to I Cor. 11:10, and the hat was used as a protection against heat or cold. I have not the least doubt that the church would grant just the same privilege now as ever. If the sisters who want to wear plain hats will always wear plain caps under them and wear their dresses plain, I do not think any one would object, and that would settle the hat question just as it did fifty years ago.

GOSPEL PRINCIPLES.

BY JOHN HARRINGTON.

THERE has been a great deal of fussing about Bible authority for Christian baptism and that Bible principles must be retained; and all admit to that. The Greek Church has ever since the apostolic age practiced trine immersion; and there is no authority to baptize at all, except by the authority of Jesus Christ. Yet when we examine the platform, we find that they are not caring so much for Gospel principles, as many of them pretend to do, from the fact that they are not willing to practice that which they acknowledge and recognize to be Gospel and Scriptural baptism. Most all our modern churches, P. do Baptists as well as Baptists, will receive into their number and fellowship those who have been united by trine immersion with a church who practiced it just as authorized by the Greek Church, and as was handed by Jesus Christ; for it could not be recognized by them if this were not the case; for if otherwise it could not be Scriptural baptism authorized by Christ. Hence, as I stated before, they do not want much Gospel and Gospel principles, as they are all the time opposing the church which they recognize and acknowledge to be Gospel.

Just so with reference to a goodly number in our Brotherhood. With such, there is a great cry about Gospel, and Gospel principles, and Gospel plainness and humility, etc. Some talk about the old order, that of our old sisters wearing the old fashioned hat, etc. I will just say, that if such desire to get nearer to the old order, that I for one will promise to help them, for I am a strong advocate for Gospel plainness and old order, so far as it is reasonable and practical; but we think it a self-evident truth that such do not want much Gospel principles and Gospel plainness which teaches practical humility.

Now let us examine the characteristics of our dear Brotherhood. In it, we find an order, or costume, which is acknowledged by every member to be a plain one, and is neat, and decent, and comfortable, and to the world, peculiar, pointing towards humility. Hence, she is still retaining those principles, the very thing about which there is so much fuss and trouble in the church; consequently it is made clear to every intelligent mind that those who are all the time fussing, and in every conceivable possible manner opposing the church and trying to destroy those principles of Gospel plainness and humility, do not mean what they say when contending for old order and Gospel plainness; when the truth of the matter is, they are all the time opposing it.

I believe, that every member that comes to the church with honest motives, is actuated by principles, and that necessarily must be the principles of the Gospel. This being the case, can it be possible for such to retain the faith once delivered to the saints and yet deny the principles that brought them into the church?

THE MULE THAT WAS ESTABLISHED.

A LITTLE boy was once converted, and he was full of praise. His father was a professed Christian. The boy wondered why he didn't talk about Christ, and didn't go down to the special meetings. One day, as the father was reading the papers, the boy came to him and put his hand on his shoulder, and said, "Why don't you praise God? Why don't you sing about Christ? Why don't you go down to these special meetings that are being held?" The father opened his eyes, and looked at him and said, gruffly, "I am not carried away with any of these doctrines; I am established." A few days after, they were getting out a load of wood. The father and boy got on top the load, and tried to get the mule to go. They used a whip, but the mule wouldn't go. They got off and tried to roll the wagon along, but they could move neither the wagon nor the mule. "I wonder what's the matter," said the father. "He's established," replied the boy. This is the way with a great many Christians.—Selected.

"WHERE am I?" A sea captain in the Bay of Bengal lost his reckoning. The waters where his ship was floating were discoloured, an indication that he was near the mouth of some river, not far from land; but where he could not tell. He dared not go onward. Just then a ship hove in sight; and as it was passing the perplexed captain ran up to the mast head the signal, "Where am I?" And in response he read from the mast head of the passing vessel the signal telling him the latitude and longitude. How many voyagers on the sea of life need to ask the question, "Where am I?" Adrift in the mist and gloom of unbelief they have lost their reckoning. Are they too proud to ask those on board of the old ship Zion, as it passes near them, for information concerning their spiritual latitude and longitude?

"DOCTOR," said a gentleman to his pastor, "how can I best train up my boy in the way he should go?" "By going that way yourself," responded the pastor.

A PUNCTUAL man is very rarely a poor man, and never a man of doubtful credit. His small accounts are frequently settled and he never meets with difficulty in raising money to pay large demands. Small debts neglected ruin credit; and when a man loses that he will find himself of the bottom of a hill he cannot ascend.

BRETHREN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill.

GOD'S TRINITIES.

GOD made nature. We may look into it and study it, and thus learn much about God. He also reveals man's state or condition, and tells him what to do to be made better. He therefore has two systems; one in nature and the other in the Bible. The former relates to material things, the latter to things spiritual.

The essential elements of the Christian system are given to us in the divine Scriptures as a series of trinities. Each series is made up of three constituents.

In nature we find the same interesting and instructive order. There are three kingdoms; the animal, the mineral and vegetable. All matter is shown under three forms, solid, fluid and gaseous. In our own being there is body, soul, and spirit. Looking up to God we see him as a Being with the three attributes—goodness, wisdom and power. He possesses not only goodness, wisdom and power, but He is infinite, immutable and eternal. He presents himself to our understanding as Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

If nature reveals so many of God's Trinities and the higher doctrine concerning God himself, we are prepared to come the same order in the Gospel and its requirements. There are the three offices of Prophet, Priest and King which the Lord our God fills. The combination in himself of these three make him truly the Christ of God. The one Gospel delivered by Christ and the Apostles is composed of three distinct acts, namely:

1. That Christ died for our sins.
2. That he was buried in Joseph's tomb.
3. That he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

Now the simple fact of the existence of the Gospel does not save any man; nor does the mere admittance that the Scriptures are true, bring salvation, present, or future, but they must be appropriated by the individual to himself. We must truly and with the whole heart, believe the Gospel; sincerely repent as required by it; and actually and formally accept it as his rule of conduct.

Faith is the eye which recognizes the Gospel to be true; repentance is the will which deliberately resolves to accept the Gospel; and baptism is the deed appropriating it.

When the individual has thus accepted the order of salvation, God bestows pardon, the Holy Spirit and the one hope of eternal life. The man thus equipped seeks three things—glory, honor and immortality. The glory is made up of wisdom, goodness and truth. Purity, honesty, and sincerity constitute honor. Eternal existence, love and unending bliss constitute immortality.

In this life the Christian is to be developed and characterized by three grand principles, faith, hope and charity. Faith enables us to repose in the sweet conviction that we are not orphans—not fatherless, motherless and brotherless; but are God's own dear children and Christ's brethren. This hope, as a principle of spiritual life, carries us onward and upward with joy and gladness, being a stimulus and safeguard. Of these three, love is the greatest, richest and brightest which God has placed in earthen vessels. It is the beginning and ending of the commandment; the essence of union; and the glory and crown of all the sanctified. Faith looks up, hope reaches up, and love climbs up; so that man rises to the heights and enclosures of the heavenly land.

Baptism comprehends an action into the name of the Father; a similar act into the name of the Son; and a third act of like character into the name of the Holy Ghost. The Father draws the sinner unto himself; the Son dies for the sinner; and the Holy Ghost reproves him of sin, and of righteousness and of judgment to come. The Son purchased us; the Father pardons; and the Holy Ghost sanctifies. The Father sent the Son; the Son brought life and immortality to light; and the Holy Ghost leads into all truth. Being baptized into the name of the Father is the consummating act in recognition of his part in our salvation. Being baptized into the name of the Son is the recognition of his office and power in our behalf. Being baptized into the name of the Holy Ghost is the recognition of his part in our present and future salvation. In short, the three divinely appointed acts constitute the one reception of the terms of salvation.

Looking farther we notice the next trinity, the three ordinances—feet-washing, Lord's Supper and the communion. The first is designed as a test of having part with Christ and a means of happiness. (John 13: 8, 17) The second is designed to point us to the coming of Christ when he will eat the great feast in token of the glorious triumph of truth over error—of freedom from sin and the second death. The third is commemorative of what Christ did for us. Each ordinance has a signification peculiar to itself, yet the three point to eternal happiness as the fruit of obeying them.

The Christian finds comfort in knowing God as his Father, and of knowing the Lord Jesus as his elder brother. He is dependent for this knowledge upon the Holy Spirit who alone reveals the Father and Son to him.

As faith gives expression in obedience, so does love reveal its work in the heart by conforming to the will of God. Love constrains the saints to greet one another with the kiss of charity. All this is simple and beautiful and consistent when the kiss is regarded as a consummating act of a series.

We have thus briefly called attention to some of the trinities of the Christian system; and we beseech the reader not to dismiss it with a passing notice as being a matter of mere curiosity; but to examine it in the light of truth; and endeavor to realize all the facts and blessings so freely placed within the reach of man. Christian life is a total failure without love and obedience.

THE POWER OF THE ANNUAL MEETING.

IF properly considered, there is but little ground for a misunderstanding in regard to the power of the Annual Meeting. A meeting of that kind becomes a necessity because the condition of our minds requires consultations that we may arrive at the same conclusions.

Neither the A. M., nor any other ecclesiastical body has power to make laws that are in any way essential to salvation. All law-making power belongs exclusively to God. His laws are perfect as all laws pertaining to our religion should be. He commands and we are to obey. His laws are made and placed on record within our reach. It is in our place to obey them. It is the duty of the church to see that these are faithfully taught to the people and obeyed by those who have embraced the principles therein enjoined.

In Annual Conferences we can meet to consult in regard to what the written law teaches. If it is decided that the written law forbids the wearing of gold then the wearing of gold should be made a test of fellowship, not because the A. M. says so, but because it is forbidden by the written law of God. We also decide that war is contrary to the plain principle of the Gospel. According to the same rule we should regard it as a test of fellowship and always refer to the written word for proof. Thus we might proceed showing how the A. M. may point out the "thus sayeth the Lord" for everything that is necessary as a condition of either salvation or membership in the church.

We think it is the duty of the meeting to decide what is law and what is not. Then it is the duty of the church to see that these divinely written laws are properly carried out. If in our A. M. these things were kept constantly in view there would be but little ground for disagreement.

Is there never any clouds we could not enjoy the sunshine.

THE GOVERNOR

OF late circumstances have called our attention a good deal to machinery. We have been spending much time in the press-room looking after the new boiler and engine just put in place. We made up our mind that the boiler is first class; is made of good material, well put together and strong enough for all the demands we will likely ever want to make on it. But it takes fuel to run it; and then it requires considerable water and the proper amount of care.

The engine also seems good—made of good material and put up in a workman-like manner. The connections between the boiler and engine are all right. As we behold the outfit we concluded that it ought to work admirably. A good boiler to produce the steam, and an engine to apply it certainly ought to do good work. But we learned that there was some thing else of importance to be considered.

Every engine is supplied with a governor—a delicately constructed machine to regulate the steam in its work. The speed and steady motion of the machinery are governed solely by the governor. Seemingly there is no power in the governor, but it regulates the power furnished by the boiler.

Our mind then turned to another grand piece of workmanship—the body and the mind—having all needed connections. The body may be in the most healthy condition, the mind sound; yet there is something lacking. The mind leads off—goes crashing through the world, making everything around jingle. At other times it is too slow for any practical use. When it does go, it moves in jerks, causing everybody to dread it. There is no dependence to be put in it. If it is put to work there is danger of its jerking everything to pieces. It lacks a governor to regulate its power—a very little thing—yet without it the whole affair is useless to the world or anything else.

I know of nothing more in demand among the people than a set of governors—an apparatus to regulate the mind and body. Persons supplied with these, properly used, would be able to accomplish an astonishing amount of good. Their conduct would be so uniform and reliable that they could be trusted by every body. May God help us govern ourselves.

COMMITTEE WORK.

THE following from the pen of R. H. Miller, in the Preacher, is so well adapted to the occasion that we cheerfully give it to our readers:

There is one source of trouble in our church that is so unreasonable that it should be stopped. That is, the way committee work is attacked through the papers. It has frequently been the duty of committees to decide cases that are of a public character, and as would be expected, some are not satisfied with the decision, and they have written articles in opposition to it, giving their views without investigating the case. In that way they are almost sure to give only one side of the question. A very partial statement is generally made, to create more bad feelings and prejudice when there is already too much. Now we would not screen any committee from responsibility, but there is a legal and proper way to hold them to account for their work; one of which they cannot complain. That is to bring the matter before the next Annual Meeting, and investigate their work. Some articles have been written against the work of committees sent by Annual Meeting and the case never referred to, are called up at the next meeting. This course will do harm. It is unfair, and never settles the business it attempts to disturb. Then the writer of such articles is never held to account for what he writes. To contradict his statements is only to continue the course he has already pursued too far. It would not be an investigation of the case if continued a whole year in that way. The only proper way is to bring the matter up in Annual Meeting for re-investigation. If any parties are not willing to take the responsibility of that, they had better let it alone.

LAST Spring the Peabody church, Kansas, concluded to build a meeting-house. One of the brethren sent us an article for publication calling for help. In the article it was stated that printed blanks would be sent to the house-keepers. After carefully reading the article, we concluded that it was not written in a way calculated to influence members to give very freely, so we concluded to wait till one of the blanks came then we would call editorial attention to it and urge the Brethren to take up collections. But the blanks never came, hence we thought it was all right. But lately a long article appeared in the Progressive severely censuring the BROTHERS AT WORK for refusing to publish the article referred to. We did not think it was treating us just in the right way, for we are always anxious to do all we can to assist needy churches in getting houses of worship. We thought this explanation due the public since the appearance of that article in the Progressive. The church here has already raised over $24 00 to assist building the meeting house at Peabody, Kansas, so that it seems that instead of opposing them at this point we are actually helping them to build their meeting-house, and hope to, some day, worship with them beneath its roof.

LOSING confidence in others may sometimes be caused by our own lack of judgment. Occasionally we form too favorable an opinion of persons, and when they, after a more extended acquaintance, fail to come up to our expectations we begin to lose confidence and sometimes censure them. Now the fault may be entirely on our side. If you find a piece of metal, and think it is gold you will prize it very highly until you learn that it is copper, then you are disappointed. Of course it would not be the metal's fault, but your own. Just so it may be with the estimation we place on those around us. Persons who have but two talents are not to blame when you think they have five, but you are to blame for not knowing any better.

AMONG THE ROCKIES

FOR years we have had a desire to visit the Rocky Mountains and behold God's handiwork in that part of his footstool; hence, as time rolled on and we grew older, the desire was stimulated until opportunity was given to realize the wish. On the 5th of July, D. L. Miller and wife, and Abram Miller of Hugstonsville, Md., left Mr. Morris for a journey to the Rockies also, while we took our departure from Las-arak. We met in Kansas City on the 6th and the same day started westward over the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad. This great thoroughfare extends through a fine portion of Kansas, and for hundreds of miles our vision was greeted with thousands of acres of corn which would have made the hearts of our eastern farmers heave with gladness were they the owners. And there were his hundreds and thousands of wheat stacks indicating a bountiful supply of the staff of life. Surely Kansas will not go a-begging this year; but is able to supply many of the needy ones West and East.

The distance from Kansas City to Pueblo over the A. T. & S. F. R. R., is 634 miles. We were pleased to notice the kindness of the conductors and the excellent management of the road all along the route. And we were doubly joyful in the absence of any dust on the way, thus rendering the trip pleasant and enjoyable.

From Dodge City West, or about half of the State, the country is adapted to stock raising along the Arkansas River. Thousands, yea tens of thousands of cattle and sheep graze on the hills and in the valleys, and as the train speeds onward on one side of the river, the immense herds and flocks on the other side present a scene enrapturing to the tourist. On reaching Pueblo, Colorado, we find ourselves 4713 feet above the level of the sea. To give the reader an idea of the altitude of many points in Colorado, we state that M. Morris, our starting point, is about 700 feet above the sea level, and Kansas City not quite 800 feet.

Pueblo is situated in the eastern part of Colorado on the Arkansas river, at the point where the river emerges from the mountains and passes off into the great plains of Kansas. The A. T. & S. F. road ends here, while at La Junta another line begins and extends South-west into New Mexico, and is fast reaching towards California. The Denver and Rio Grand, extending from Denver South to Espanola, N. M., also passes through Pueblo. The union depot at this place presents a busy scene, as thousands come this way to the mines in the direction of Leadville, Gunnison, Silver Cliff and other noted points. There are smelting works, steel works, iron works and many other manufactures here which give employment to thousands of men. Churches, schools, newspapers and business trades are prevalent. It contains a population of 8,000 and is rapidly increasing. Pueblo may be justly termed the gateway of a great commerce between the grain-growing and stock-raising regions of Kansas and the mines of Colorado and New Mexico.

From Pueblo we take a pleasant run North 120 miles to Denver. We pass Pike's Peak, Colorado Springs, Castle Rock, Divide, Little Buttes and other nobd places on the way. Of some of these places we shall say more in a future letter.

As you enter Denver, a pleasing sight meets your view. Its bright new buildings, broad streets, and the business bustle and commotion compel you to believe that you have arrived in a great inland metropolis. It is the commercial center of the State. In eighteen months the population increased nearly 18,000 (thousand). It is the railroad centre, and from it diverge the various broad and narrow-gauge systems of railroads in the State; These roads branch out through the farming and mining portions of the country, reaching many places not only of commercial value, but of great interest to the tourist. The peaks, canyons, gulches and foot-hills of Colorado are objects of wonder and admiration to travelers.

Denver is called the "Queen City of the Plains." It has a population of nearly 50,000, and predictions are made that it will reach 100,000, the next ten years. It is 5,197 feet above the level of the sea. The Rocky Mountains are twelve miles distant. The range may be seen for more than two hundred miles, forming a magnificent scene just about sunrise of a clear morning. To the North and East are plains for hundreds of miles, and upon these are some excellent farms, good crops being raised by means of irrigation. These plains are not level, but gently undulating, presenting a great variety of change and beauty.

The Platte river rises in the Rocky mountains, and comes flowing swiftly by Denver and then spreads out eastward through Nebraska, and finally empties into the Missouri. The Boston and Colorado Smelting company's works are at Argo, in the suburbs of Denver. They shipped $2,730,500 worth of gold and silver in 1880. To produce this, there are thirty kilns for roasting and desulphurizing the ore; ten ore calciners or roasting furnaces; eight furnaces for refining and five melting furnaces. Each furnace has a smoke-stack 100 feet high. One hundred tons of coal are consumed each day.

The Union depot, used by the Denver and Rio Grand and the Union Pacific lines is 503 feet long and 63 feet wide, French roof and tower 165 feet high. Besides this, the platform or covered depot for trains, is 645 feet long and 141 wide, and contains six tracks. The depot proper is the finest in America in point of outside architecture, and as convenient as could be desired. It is a marvel of beauty as well as a wonder to the stranger. We mention these things that the reader may know that energy and intelligence are not confined to the East, but they have reached across the continent and are being felt in all parts of this beautiful country. We might name many other great business enterprises of Denver, but think this quite sufficient for this letter. Our next from the mountains.

SUNDAY.

BY A. W. VANIMAN.

IN contemplating the purposes for which Sunday was established, the thought comes to me, do we truly realize the importance of the day?

Our day, which we call Sunday, was anciently dedicated to the sun, hence the name.

God worked six days and rested from his labors on the seventh. In this he laid a pattern for his people to follow. The law says "Remember the Sabbath-day to keep it holy." What is meant by this? Does it mean that we shall put on a long face and look solemn all day? Surely not; if there is one day in the week we should be joyful and happy it is on Sunday.

The mind should rest as well as the body, and no mind can get a good rest without it is in a joyful mood. There is no better medicine for the mind than a few hours of pleasant association and cheerfulness. No other should Sunday be a day for foolishness by any means. The Jews made the Sabbath a day of worship.

Christ arose on our Sunday which has ever since been observed instead of the Jewish Sabbath. It has become by custom and nearly universal consent, a day of worship.

There are good reasons for this. First. In commemoration of Christ's resurrection.

Second. It is a day when all business and worldly cares should be laid aside. Hence the mind is in a good condition to thank God for his goodness during the week. But how often is it merely formal. Who cannot remember the different times when they went to church just because they were ashamed to stay at home for fear, people might think they were not very much interested in religion? On account of this feeling of shame they will go to church and take a quiet nap, or sit up straight and nod which is worse. Now would it not be better if one cannot possibly stay awake to stay at home and sleep? A large audience has a tendency to give good sermons and a minister can preach better where he sees that the congregation is interested, than one sleep; will do more to embarrass a speaker than the absence of two others; for he naturally gets the idea that he is not interesting the congregation. We should not be absent nor being present go to sleep.

We should not work so hard and lose so much sleep in our worldly affairs that we must make up the time on Sunday.

There is another class who make their religion only a Sunday matter. They forget when they get into business. Very often the man who sits next you in church while the minister preaches, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you," giving his hearty approbation by a significant nod, will cheat you the next morning before breakfast if he gets a chance.

Again, as before noticed, this is a day of rest; but alas for our poor American women! If they live near the church they are likely to get quite a lot of company. Then what? Two or three hours in the hottest part of the day are spent in cooking and preparing to entertain their company in order that they may go to the table and gorge themselves with cookies, pies, etc., as to be nearly sick for a day or two. The father and brothers rest and entertain the company while the mothers and sisters are toiling and sweating in the kitchen by the hot stove. Why all this? Custom is the fault of it. I do not mean to say that we should not have plenty of good food to eat on Sunday as well as any other day; but it would certainly be much more pleasant for the women if they could be satisfied to have a common meal on Sunday. Why not have the food prepared beforehand, and set it on the table without all this trouble and work. Some may want something warm to drink; very well, that will not take long or make much work. Should not mothers and daughters have a chance to be with the company and entertain and be entertained as well as anyone else? A great many of our women who see this, are afraid to make a start in this direction. Some have already made the start and others in the same neighborhood have followed. By our present custom, instead of Sunday being a day of rest for our mothers and sisters it is the most tiresome of the week. This should not be so, and all that is needed to get a great many to change this custom, is a little encouragement and especially from the other side of the house.

To another class Sunday is more a day of torment than a day of rest. How many go to church and are unable to get any good from the sermon because their boots or shoes hurt their feet. Many a person has spent the Sunday in misery just because he tried to force a large foot into a boot or shoe one or more numbers too small. Why all this nonsense and self-inflicted misery? They have an idea that it looks so much more graceful to have little feet; but if God made us with big feet, why be ashamed of them? It only shows a good foundation upon which to stand. Then why not wear boots and shoes large enough to be comfortable, so that our minds may go up to God in thankfulness instead of down to our feet.

The same may be said of those who compress other parts of the body to such an extent as to be miserable the whole day when they should be the most happy. Is this the way to keep the "Sabbath day holy?" God never designed that we should make ourselves miserable in order to worship him. Instead of giving reverence to God by such practices, we in the very act of worship are violating some of his fixed laws, for which he will hold us accountable and require us to pay the penalty.

We should certainly be consistent on Sunday as on any other day of the week.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

This week Bro. Evans commenced a series of articles on the second coming of Christ. We hope they will prove interesting.

J. S. MOHLEN,

EDITOR.

All communications for this department, such as queries and answers, should be addressed to J. S. Mohlen, Ludue, Henry Co., Mo.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 41. W. M. LONO.

Please explain the latter part of the 4th verse of the 6th chapter 1st Cor. "Who are those that are least esteemed in the church?"

HARRY GILLAN.

Will some one explain Genesis 4: 10—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Does Gen. 4 infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living. If so, who was his wife? MARY C. NEWMAN.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were those "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CROOK.

THE DOCTRINE OF BAPTISM.

Please explain Heb. 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number. In the German the reading is different: "Von der Taufe, von der Lebe." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLER.

M. M. EISELMAN:—

My Dear Brother:—

Your commentary on the above query attracts my attention, and if I understand you correctly, I must beg leave to differ with you, and this privilege, I feel sure, you will cheerfully award to me.

While it is unpleasant to differ from some persons, with others it is rather pleasant than otherwise, and I am persuaded that it will be so with you and myself.

I am aware, that upon this subject there is a difference of opinion, with others as well as between us.

The question to be settled is, whether the principles of the doctrine of Christ here spoken of, has reference to anything belonging to the Jewish dispensation, i. e., either the various legal washings, whether by immersion, ablution or sprinkling, John's baptism or the traditional baptisms of the Pharisees, or whether it is peculiar to the Christian dispensation.—You appear to incline to the former, while I am inclined to believe that the latter is the correct solution of the text for the following reasons:

First, because, while those to whom he addressed this epistle, were Jews, they had been converted to the Christian religion,—had been initiated into the Christian family by having attended to the elementary principles, and ought to have become teachers of others instead of remaining babes and still in need of milk; hence this reproof for their small proficiency in principles of their adoption.

Second, because the apostles exhorted them to press on from these principles, or as expressed by the Revised Version, "Let us cease to speak of the first principles of Christ, and press on unto perfection; not laying again a foundation of those elementary doctrines of repentance, faith and of the teachings of baptisms and of laying on of hands." These certainly are part and parcel of the Christian covenant, and do not belong to former dispensations.

If Baptismos, the plural form, be urged as an objection, as compared with the German Taufe, and the "one baptism" of Eph. 4: 6, permit me to say, that I once labored under the same difficulty, and not being able to place these first principles with its "baptismos" under former dispensations, I concluded that the translation must be wrong and ought to be baptism to harmonize with the baptism of Eph. 4: 6, and the German Taufe, but ultimately the American Bible Union translation came out, sustaining the doctrine of baptism, and now the Revised Version is before me, with its "teachings of baptisms," therefore the conclusion overwhelms us that the English translations are right, that the German is wrong, and that Eph. 4: 6, and Heb. 6: 2, must be harmonized.

Thirdly, we will try to harmonize them. We will notice that the apostle in his address to Ephesians, intended to impress their minds with the beautiful and essential doctrine of Christian union; that they should give all diligence to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, because there is but one recognized body or church, and only one true Spirit, one Lord, (Law-giver) one genuine faith, comprehending the triune God, and the doctrine of the Bible as set forth in part in these first principles, among which is the one ordinance of baptism to be administered as set forth in the Apostolical commission, and when thus performed, we have the doctrine of baptisms of the epistle to the Hebrews exemplified, and Chrysostom is understood when he says that our Lord in the commission gave us one baptism by three immersions of the body; and we can see the propriety of Carson's Philosophy, wherein he accounts for the apparent discrepancy between Paul to the Ephesians and Paul to the Hebrews. His Philosophy accounts for the difference in this way. When Paul wrote to the Ephesians, he had before his mind the ordinance of baptism, and in his letter to the Hebrews he had before his mind the mode of performing the ordinance.

Submitting our peculiar views to the arbitration of the readers of the B. AT W.,

I am as ever,

Affectionately Your Brother,

THE SEVEN BIBLES OF THE WORLD.

THEY are the Koran of the Muhammedans, the Eddas of the Scandinavians, the Tri Pitikes of the Buddhists, the Five Kings of the Chinese, the three Vedas of the Hindoos, the Zendavesta and the Scriptures of the Christians.

The Koran is the most recent of these seven Bibles, and not older than the seventh century of our era. It is a compound of quotations from the Old and New Testaments, the Talmud and the Gospel of St. Barnabas.

The Eddas of the Scandinavians were first published in the fourteenth century.

The Pitikes of the Buddhists contain sublime morals and pure aspirations, but their author lived and died in the sixth century before Christ.

The sacred writings of the Chinese are called the Five Kings, king meaning web of cloth, or the warp that keeps the threads in their place. They contain the best sayings of the best sages on the ethico-political duties of life. These sayings cannot be traced to a period higher than the eleventh century B. C.

The three Vedas are the most ancient books of the Hindoos, and it is the opinion of Max Muller, Wilson, Johnson and our own Whitney, that they are not older than eleven centuries B. C.

The Zendavesta of the Persians is the grandest of all the sacred books next to our Bible.—Zoroaster whose sayings it contains, was born in Bactria in the twelfth century B. C.

Moses lived and wrote his Pentateuch, fifteen centuries B. C., and therefore has a clear margin of three hundred years older than the most ancient of the other sacred writings.—Sol.

THE JEWISH TABERNACLE.

What became of the Tabernacle which Moses and Aaron made in the wilderness when the temple was destroyed at Jerusalem? MRS. R. A. D.

EMINENT Biblical scholars say that there is undoubted mention in the Old Testament of two sacred tabernacles, the one erected in the wilderness, and the other, that in which David put the ark, and where it remained until the completion of the Temple.

The old tabernacle was in the mesquite at Gibeon. It is uncertain whether Solomon removed it or the Davidic tabernacle into the temple, most likely the latter. When the journeyings of the Israelites were ended, and they entered Canaan, the tabernacle was erected at Gilgal, where it remained until the country was subdued, and then it was removed to Shiloh, where it stood between 300 and 400 years.

It was thence removed to Noh, where it was at the commencement of Solomon's reign, and when the temple was completed, it is the opinion of some, that it was removed into it. The Temple of Solomon stood, altogether, 424 years, but it was plundered by Shishak king of Egypt, during the reign of Rehoboam, and after that was frequently profaned and pillaged and at last broken down and destroyed by the King of Babylon, and the nation itself, carried into captivity.

TRAVELING BY COMPASS.—A story is told of an old hunter in Michigan, who got lost in the woods several times. He was told to buy a pocket compass, which he did, and a friend explained to him its use. He soon got lost and lay out as usual. When found, he said, he wanted to go North, and "the trick had to make it point North, but it would strike hard right around and point South-east every time." A great many people miss the right direction in life, just because they neglect the Bible.

SGB About the Father's Business.

Ever Beloved Bro. Eshelman:—

I am profound and painfully sorry that you must again lay aside the editorial function, and submit to clinic. But nature is inexorable, and makes no exceptions, not even of prophets and apostles. "Order is Heaven's first law," said Linn; and earth's is less. God is a life-giving organism, or insect, or atom, out of the sovereignty of law. We forget this, live and act in violation of the Divine arrangements, and sooner or later the penalty is felt, and by us succumb, albeit the retributive protest of God was enunciated all the time, only we were dull of hearing, and went on in the way of transgression until the School-master brought down the rod with a twinge, or prolonged smart. Were it not for the capacity to suffer, "no flesh would be saved." Could man go on sinning, moral or physical, without the necessary result of wrong relation to God, we could know neither the exceeding sinfulness of sin, nor the sanctity of law, nor the preciousness of redemption.

Such an enthusiastic soul as yours needs constant "looking unto Jesus" for the wisdom and restraint essential to a Divinely-led, Divine y moulded life. Your great tendency is to burn your candle at both ends. Your body is too fragile for the ceaseless and ardent activity of its flaming tenant. The spiritual consumes the material, the mental robs and impoverishes the physical. I am loth to give you up even for a few months, but complete mental idleness is an absolute necessity for a while. I hope and pray you will find the very helm of Heaven in the mountains of Colorado, and be able to resume with renewed vigor the sublime work in which you have embarked. My whole heart is in the triumph of the cross over the odious yet popular forms of infidelity which audaciously thrusts its fists under our very nose in denial of God and His Christ. God, brother, in the faith and fear of God, and for the time being let getting well be your religion. Bother neither about past or future, but simply glide along, living in God as by the simplicity of natural law, as the stream runs between its banks, obeying gravitation as its most unfettered freedom.

If you know what law means, as the expression of Divine immanence, you will know that drugging is not therapeutics of God. Learn, if you have not, the great truth that health and the getting of health is neither more nor less than harmony with the Divine mind in nature and man. Neither earth nor Heaven, nor all the universe besides, has any pill or potion, or plaster, or power, or tincture, or alternative that will cure in contravention of the laws of our being and environments. The rich pharmacopoeia of God is not in bottles and boxes and packages, labeled so and so, and in right living. When God and law are on one side, all the doctors and apothecarians on the earth cannot avail on the other. It is a radical, universal conversion of regimen, reaching from core to cuticle of body, soul, and spirit that opens the door from the harem into hygiene. The divorce from chimeras and ill-karma and futilities and excesses, is bitter and terrible, but the requirement is absolute. The only alternative in every case this world over, is this, or death. A most follower, all but impossible return to the organic laws, is the only chance for the invalid.

Let these great, God-pronounced truths guide you in your rambles and rests, and be the vouchers of Heaven for restful health on all you do to that end in God's way. Forget not the law and the means of the equalization of the vital force, as it is one of the leading facts on which rest the recuperation of your brain and lungs and spinal cord and entire nervous system.

May Isaac's blessing on the fugitive Jacob be upon you, and bring you back enriched a hundredfold.

Brethren and sisters in Christ, let your income go up to the mercy seat in dense clouds for Bro. Eshelman. And if he needs any thing more substantial than income, let it not be withheld. "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."
C. H. BALSBAUGH.

From Martin Neher.—Health seems to be good. Weather warm, with a constant cool breeze from the South-west. Harvest is past. Wheat a fair crop; oats and flax were good—all in stocks now. Corn is in ears now, and promises to be a good crop. The season was very good. So far, vegetables are doing well. Land now in raise. Markets are good. Hope we all feel to bless God for his goodness towards us.—Monmouth, Kansas.

From Emily R. Stifler.—To-day, July 3rd, we attended divine services at the East Ninth-street church, Stark county, Ohio, about six miles from here. Thirteen years ago I last attended church there. After singing and prayer, the 11 chapter of 1 Cor. was read by brother John Kartz, of Ashland boarding hall. Was much surprised on meeting him there. Sermon by J. J. Hoover on the ordinances, followed in German by brother Carver, of Mogadore. I do not understand the German language well enough to get the full meaning out of it, still I enjoyed the sermon extremely well. Am sorry to say that the Brethren here do not have any Sunday-schools. Quite a lot of little folks however were at church. "Train up a child in the way he should go."

Dear brethren and sisters, let us all engage in the Sunday-school work, and see that there is a school organized in every church in the land. After meeting were happy to meet brother Hoover and from the acquaintance of his wife. Had not seen brother H. for about thirteen years. Went in the graveyard to visit my departed cousin's grave, of whom I spoke in my continued visit. Had to realize that she is gone. Returning we drove around so that we had a partial view of Congress Lake, of which I will say more in the future. It is a great Summer resort. Sorry to say that the Sabbath is partly forgotten here, as we saw some farmers in the evening rake up and haul in hay. Our little boy who had never seen such a thing remarked, "Why this is Sunday, and they are raking hay!" Reader, if you gave a man six dollars, would you like if he stole a seventh one from you? The Lord gave us six days to labor and do all our work. Is it right that any one should steal the seventh day from him? Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy; six days shalt thou labor and do all thy work," etc., is a positive command. Reader, do not fail to observe it, or God will hold you accountable for its violation.

Expect to remain here yet some time and visit friends, when I shall return home. My friends will address me here.—New Baltimore, Stark County, Ohio, in care of Ephraim Brownbough

From Dr. J. Sturgis.—Two more have been added to our number by baptism since our commencement. One was an old man seventy-eight years of age, and a life long member of the Methodist Church. He is the third one in our village who has been compelled to renounce Methodism on account of the vain and worldly character of that church and seek one that will maintain the simplicity of the gospel.—Waraka, Ind.

From Mary C. Norman.—Our Love-feast is past, and long to be remembered by the brethren and sisters here. It was truly a joyful season to be seated around the Lord's table, and there have sweet communion with God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, and with our neighbor. Such seasons of joy strengthen our hope in anticipation of the time when we shall be seated around the Lord's table and eat bread in the Kingdom of God, where Jesus will give himself and serve. Jos. Osgood and Samuel Ohlinger, were the home ministers present. D. M. Miller, from Northern Illinois, was with us also. Bro. Miller did some good preaching; he did not seem to declare all the words of this life. The attendance and attention were good, for which the people have our sincere thanks. After our Love-feast, one precious soul was added to the church by baptism; others are counting the cost. We hope they too will soon be ready to take upon them the yoke of Jesus. Dear brethren and sisters, ever pray that we may be faithful to our calling. May the blessing of God rest upon us and all the children of God, is my prayer.—Sharon, Minn.

From A. H. Baltimore.—On the 24th of June our elders—Brower and Bashor—came to us from the Salem church and preached five discourses, which seemed to revive every brother and sister that was present with new life in the good cause, and had a good impression up at those that are outside the fold. The first lesson delivered to us was love—"Let love be without dissimulation." No wonder the poet has said:

"Love is the fountain whence All true obedience flows."

Albany, Oregon.

From M. Ennis.—In our isolated condition our minds wander back to the dear loved one in the North, where we spent many seasons of rejoicing, and where we could hear the Word preached in its primitive purity. But although different with us here. We have preaching nearly every Sunday by different denominations, and as we are persuaded, truth mixed with error, so that we go home feeling that we were not benefited. When our eyes behind the letters in the B. A. V. we were glad to find that the same ranks are going over through the administration of God's terrors, and the holy army of true believers are still gaining new territory. Would to God that the glad news could be proclaimed throughout the land,—yes, that angels might wait the glad tidings home to heaven, that A. Kansas has heard and believed that form of doctrine once delivered unto the saints. We are dear brother and sister Gish were with us. Very few of them had any meetings, but the weather was so bad that few came out. Good attention and seemingly good interest were manifested. On Sunday before our brother and sister Gish were called on to preach at the Baptist church. Five of their ministers were present. They enjoyed the occasion from these words: "I speak as unto wise men, as unto what I see." He gave them the outline of our doctrine, and shining truth as the whole of our work, and dwelt particularly on love. We could plainly see that it was not strange well on the "both sides" there. The Brethren had good reason to be happy that we have such noble defenders of the truth. Would to God we had hundreds of able ministers in the field today. The harvest is plentiful, but the laborers are few. O brethren, pray the Lord of Sabbath that he will call them into his vineyard. Would be glad to see brethren move into our county, especially ministering brethren. We have fine land and comparatively good health; some chills and fevers occasionally. Brother Gish was not favorably impressed with the country when he first came down here, but before he left would have bought land, but the aster did not like it so well. Brethren passing over the Indian Mountain R. R. stop at Texas, stop off at Corning, Arkansas, and if giving us ten days more we will meet and convey them to our home. There has been an Emigration Society organized at this place, which is having pamphlets printed to send North and East. Any brethren wanting further information in regard to the country, by sending me their address, I will send one to them. A cordial invitation is extended to ministering brethren to stop with us and preach to the people. Who will volunteer to go?—Cherokee Bay, Ark.

From John Murray—All washed away here. Once in a while we realized that we are not poor, short as life is being. Wife and I, our own much respected sister Come Lona, of Illinois, had agreed to meet at 10 on the 11th inst. at Cedar Rapids, and intended to visit in Linn and Cedar counties till the 28th. Cert. only we anticipated a good time. On the 9th it commenced raining and rained all night. The 10th was Sunday, a nice day; but before night it rained, and rained all night. On Monday morning, the 11th, the Iowa river was very high; in places it was two miles over. At 5 o'clock in the evening it was seven feet high—still in the morning. It was about seven feet higher than it had been for twenty-four years. On the 11th the post along the river had to be cut away in many places, and some of the bridges at some places, bridges, and some of the cattle floating down the stream;

the cattle howling in a very pitiful manner. Such a sight I had not seen in seventy-three years, nor do I ever wish to witness the like again. The drought in Marshall county is immense.—Query, Marshall Co., Ia., July 12, '81.

From S. W. Lindover—Having resigned the S. C. S. in the Home Mission of North-eastern Ohio, and I R. S. S. of Dunkirk, O., being appointed my successor, I hope that the business belonging to that department will be sent to him instead of being sent to me.—Carey, Ohio

From John Frits—The members at this place are trying the best they know how to work up an interest in meeting here; it is getting pretty good. We have meeting every Sunday, and about half of the time twice, here in town. I would say to brethren coming West, come and see our country and judge for yourselves. I think we live a country hard to beat. I will write again soon.—Diller, Jefferson Co., Neb.

From C. G. Lint—Our Love-fest in the Meyersdale congregation took place on the 17th day of June. Brethren James Quinter, John Blough, D. P. Walker, George Shrock, Josiah B. Riley, Adam Sander, and Jonathan Kelley, all ordained but one, were all from other districts, and took part with us in the evening services. The preaching was very fitting the occasion. The meeting was a pleasant one, as much so as any we ever attended. Many were the expressions of gratitude from the members because of the happy season we once more had together. "Once more peace and harmony," was frequently repeated by members. May God grant that the feeling of union may continue among us. The labors of the Brethren were greatly appreciated by the members, and especially those of our esteemed brother Quinter. May the Lord bless and reward them for their earnest labors among us here. Permit us to say that the Meyersdale church is not torn to pieces, neither are the one-half gone over to Progression, nor rightly, as in some places reported. Our present number is about 250. On our annual visit in the first week of June, 240 members were visited; the remainder were not at home, etc., and not a single charge was brought up to the meeting, excepting those that were left over from former meetings, and those were all satisfactorily disposed of. Our council, which had a session of two hours and a half, opened, continued, and closed in perfect harmony. During council and Love-fest there were three reclaimed and three baptized. And as to the attendance at our regular meetings we think it good, at least they compare favorably with those around us, either the Brethren or others. At least the Brethren that come among us are favorably impressed with the congregations in our district. We simply say to all that have heard reports relative to our attendance, "Come and see." The Sunday-school is working well. A sturmer among us who had heard it was about dead, said, "It is well attended; the attendance is larger than I had thought it was from the reports I have heard." We wish it distinctly understood that the Brethren church and Sunday-school at Meyersdale are enjoying peace, and are working harmoniously together. It is necessary to say that while yet so many of us are firm in the faith and practice of the fathers, the progressive part about thirty-four in number, the larger portion of which were obtained by a petition, being carried around among some of our members (by disowned members), securing their withdrawal by having their sign said petition. The church accepted the request of said petitioners, and notified them that they were dis-fellowshipped. These have rented a hall in town and are having their regular school meetings, as well as their Sunday school, and call themselves the old brethren. But are having a salaried minister, musical instrument to assist in worship, and have no use for Annual Meeting. For the benefit of those that come among us we would say, the members of the Meyersdale church still worship where some of them have for more than a century, and purpose to do so, God permitting; and are always ready to welcome to our meetings such that are ready and willing to work with the general order of the Brethrenhood as we have been taught by our old fathers, based upon the principles and spirit contained in the Gospel. We have had enough Progression; we have learned to know its workings and its spirit. We want more of the kind of service we had by the Brethren during our meetings at our Past. Come over and help us. The Progressive part are building a meeting-house at this place this summer.—Meyersdale, Pa.

From S. T. Besserman—On last Saturday we met with the saints of Engl. Creek in council. The most important part of the business was, brother Wm. Bradford was advanced to the second degree of the ministry, and brother Jacob Whitmore was ordained to the eldership. He and family soon will move to Centerville, Johnson Co., Mo., to make that their future home. Our beloved elder J. P. Ebersole presided at our meeting.—Dunkirk, O.

From J. Madsen—I am very much obliged to you for the weekly messenger, who is paying his regular visits to me. He is a true friend of mine, and keeps no secret for himself, but tells me all he knows about the Brethren in the far West as well as those in the far East. Though I am no good Englishman yet I can understand him properly, and he never gets tired of my company. May God bless this dear messenger that he may always bring good news. We have had nice weather here for a considerable length of time, and grass and grain are very tall around. It is quite a pleasure to take a trip into the fields occasionally during this beautiful season. There are no brethren here, and none are coming except God will be pleased to raise them up on the very spot. I often wonder at it, as there are thousands of English-speaking brethren.—New Castle, Eng.

HOW LONG SHOULD WE SLEEP?

THE vital processes of man, like those of all his fellow creatures, are partly controlled by automatic tendencies. Some functions of our internal economy are too important to be trusted to the caprices of human volition; breathing, eating, drinking, and even love, are only semi-voluntary actions; and during a period varying from one-fourth to two-fifths of each solar day the conscious activity of the senses undergoes a complete suspension: the cerebral workshop is closed for repairs, and the abused or exhausted body commits its organism into the healing hands of Nature. Under favorable conditions eight hours of undisturbed sleep would almost suffice to counteract the physiological mischief of the sixteen waking hours. During sleep, the organ of consciousness is at rest, and the energies of the system seem to be concentrated on the function of nutrition and the renewal of the vital energy in general; sleep promotes digestion, repairs the waste of the muscular tissue, favors the process of curaneous excretion, and renews the vigor of the mental faculties.

The amount of sleep required by man is generally proportionate to the waste of vital strength, whether by muscular exertion, mental activity (or emotion), or by the process of rapid assimilation, as during the first years of growth and during the recovery from an exhausting disease. The weight of a new-born child increases more rapidly than that of an adult, enjoying a liberal diet after a period of starvation, and, though an infant is capable of forming abstract ideas, we need not doubt that the variety of new and bewildering impressions must overtax its little sensorium in a few hours. Nurslings should therefore be permitted to sleep to their full satisfaction; weakly babies, especially, need sleep more than food, and it is the safest plan never to disturb a child's slumber while the regularity of his breathing indicates the healthfulness of his repose; there is little danger of his "oversleeping" himself in a moderately warmed, well-ventilated room. Never mind about meal-times; hunger will awaken him at the right moment, or teach him to make up for lost time. Three or four nursings in the twenty-four hours are enough. Dr. C. E. Page, who has made the problem of infant diet his special study, believes that fifty per cent. of the enormous number of children dying under two years of age are killed by being coaxed to guzzle till they are hopelessly diseased with fatty degeneration.—Dr. F. L. L. Oswald, in Popular Science Monthly for July.

A PERNICIOUS HABIT.

[Reprinted from Vigilance.]

A PERNICIOUS habit of cigarette smoking cannot be too strongly condemned. Only a Sunday or two ago we counted eight lads from seven to twelve years of age, standing in front of a fashionable church door, fresh from their Sunday school teachers, each and every one smoking cigarettes. It was a spectacle not calculated to impress one favorably with the virtues of either the present or the future generation. Boys eight or ten years of age, who are carelessly allowed by their parents and teachers to go on dress parades every Sunday morning, and in the presence of a multitude of ladies and gentlemen, go through a regular drill with all the sang froid of veteran smokers, should not be censured if, in after years their vital forces become snapped, and their personal habits become objectionable to the better elements of society. Says the Utica Herald: "One of the poorest recommendations that a man can carry with him on the streets, is a cigarette held in his mouth. Nine out of every ten business men in the country would say 'we don't want you,' to a young man who would apply for a situation with a paper tobacco ornament of this kind between his lips and his fingers smeared with yellow from the tobacco. In addition to the objection of appearance, there are physical objections to the use of tobacco in that form. The loose particles of the poor tobacco almost invariably used are inhaled to coat and poison the stomach, and the almost universal use of narcotics in cigarette smoking tends to an appetite for liquor, opium, laudanum, paregoric, and morphine. This last statement has been verified in a practical way near home. James Johnston was found in a deadly stupor from the effects of laudanum poison in Syracuse, Saturday. The prompt arrival of a doctor with a stomach pump saved his life. When he regained his senses he declared that he was compelled to use laudanum to steady his nerves after excessive cigarette smoking. He took a half an ounce of laudanum. He admitted that the use of laudanum was commenced in New York, where he had been a cigarette manufacturer. In the making of this form of smoking material, he said the tobacco is adulterated by the use of opium, and working with it for years he was compelled to use laudanum to taper off after he had smoked several cigarettes. The opium is far more dangerous, treacherous, and insinuating than the liquor habit. An opium eater will lie and steal without a blush, and to obtain that drug, laudanum or paregoric as substitutes, will sell his shirt from his back. Cigarette smoking is bad enough; the other habits that are encouraged by this indulgence are deadly and degrading.—Selected by B. F. Mosman.

ANOTHER FEAT AT FASTING

JOHN Griscom is testing his power to live without food, under the surveillance of physicians, in Chicago. The following from a daily paper explains somewhat of his case:

GRISCOM AFTER FASTING NINETEEN DAYS.

CHICAGO, June 16.—At noon to-day John Griscom weighed 171 pounds, being a loss of three-quarters of a pound in the last twenty-four hours, during which he drank thirty-two ounces of water. His weight to-day shows a loss of only half a pound in the last forty-eight hours, making a total loss of twenty-six pounds in the nineteen days of his fast, and to-day. His appearance to day was remarkably bright, the examination by the physicians disclosing no marked change in his condition. His pulse showed strong and at 66; his respiration was full and deep at 13, and his temperature was 98.2-5.

June the 17th, the day following, Griscom's conditions are not by any means alarming. He is able to lift with ease a dead weight of 500 pounds, and is as active and lively as any man in health.

With these facts frequently brought before the people, we should suppose that they would become convinced that man does not live by bread alone, and that he is not so utterly dependent upon either food or stimulants as the majority of people suppose. It is strange to what extent the belief is common that abstinence from a single meal is very destructive to health, and that to go without food for two or three days is to put the faster in danger of death. There never was anything more absurd or ridiculous to suppose that fasting for a day or two materially decreases a man's strength. Griscom can lift 500 pounds after a fast of twenty days, and any good healthy man may fast for a day or two, at any rate, and put forth just as much strength as previously. The actual fact is that a man has more vital vigor at his command after an abstinence from a meal than he has after eating the meal, provided, indeed, he is not addicted to the use of stimulants, and hence cannot bring his power into action except under the influence of a stimulant.

We are not, by any means, of the opinion that man can live without eating, or that starving is a virtue; but we do say that the popular idea that man is immediately and utterly dependent upon food which has to be supplied every few hours is erroneous. We say also that gluttony is very apt to follow the belief that a man's strength depends upon what he eats. Everybody is seeking to increase his power, and if he believes that this is to be done through eating increased quantities, any logical thinker can perceive that excessive eating must be the result. Let it be known that it is not what a man eats that makes him strong, but what he digests and appropriates, and a great change for the better will take place in the people's habits. Let it not be forgotten also that excess of food is one of the grandest means of preventing good digestion and appropriation.—Dr. Walter's Health Journal.

Gov. St. John, of Kansas, has made an available record on the temperance question. One of the best things reported of him is his answer to a committee which asked him to sign a bill to reimburse the liquor sellers for their loss caused by prohibition. His reply was to investigate and determine how many paupers, maniacs, orphans, widows, and tramps they have made; also the number of homes ruined, and then concluded by saying: "If, in balancing the account, you find that the State owes the traffic anything, it shall be paid to the last cent." The project was abandoned.

The German newspapers state that the government has prohibited the use of tobacco by boys under sixteen years of age. When the boys are saved from tobacco, and the men from beer, a great deal of present misery will end.

Brethren's Almanac and Annual Register for 1881.

The attention of the Brotherhood is called to the above work. Brief biographical and historical sketches are solicited. An agent is wanted in every church to give information and to sell the work when completed. Those willing to act, will please write by postal and blanks and circulars will be sent to them. Address: H. J. KURTZ, Covington, Miami Co., O.

We have before us a copy of the Missionary Review, edited by R. G. Wilder, of Princeton, N. J. It contains 84 octavo pages; is published bi-monthly and neatly bound in paper.—Price $1.50 per annum. For further information address the editor, R. G. Wilder, Princeton, N. J. We believe our Brethren interested in missionary work, should patronize this journal; for from it they can get a better idea of the religious condition of the world, than in any other way for the same trouble and expense.

Vol. IV, No. 4 contains the following notice of the Brethren: This church is an uncompromising advocate of primitive Christianity in its pristine purity. It receives the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and the vicarious sufferings and meritorious works of Christ as the only price of redemption. Planted in this country a full century ago, it has been little known to the world, or even to other branches of the church; and yet, by those who have observed them most carefully, it is well said, that "they have led singularly pure lives, following the commands of the New Testament literally, making no conformity a foundation principle. They constantly bear in mind and emphasize the text: "Whoever, therefore, will be the friend of the world, is the enemy of God." S. J. H.

From E. A. Orr — I am now taking eight papers and I am sometimes perplexed to know how I am to read them, and keep up my other reading, and yet I am unwilling to let the MICROCOSM go on without enjoying some of the rich things that we can measurably hope for from one who has done so much for God, truth and science as Wilford Hall.

No human production gave me more real joy than his "Problem of Human Life." I have read the writings of all the most learned skeptics, and for some time taken the "Princeton Review," and hence I was all the better prepared to enjoy the book.—Plattsburg, Mo.

The Mountain Meadows Massacre.

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE CRIME AND ITS PUNISHMENT.

John D. Lee, a "bishop" of the Mormon Church, was shot at Mountain Meadows March 23, 1877, for the part he took in the wholesale and cold-blooded murder perpetrated there by white "saints" and red sinners twenty years before.

The man Lee left a confession, which was widely printed after his execution, and which contained in detail the substantial facts of the massacre.

Early in September, 1857, a party of immigrants, known as the "Arkansas Company," arrived in Utah from the East, on their way to California. One of the Mormons, named Lancy, then living in Utah, had given some food to two of the immigrants, and this came to the ears of certain leading "saints." It appears that Lancy had some time previous been a Mormon missionary and had labored in the interests of his sect in Tennessee, where he was assailed by a mob

He was rescued by two men, father and son, named Aden, and found his way back to Utah.—The two men to whom he had given some food, were the Adens, father and son, who were the recipients of Lancy's hospitality, extended to them out of gratitude.

For this act Lancy was murdered by an "angel of death" at the instigation of a Mormon bishop. While the immigrant company were on their way West, the Mormon leaders, among whom were "Bishop" Dams (who instigated, as Lee claimed, the murder of Lancy), George A. Smith, (then First Counselor in the church and Brigham Young's right-hand man) and another Mormon dignitary, named Haight, as well as Lee, conspired to massacre the entire outfit. The "saints" claimed that immigrants who had passed through Utah en route to California, had, on several occasions treated them and their people with indignities, had stole or destroyed their property, and had given the Mormons just cause of complaint. The followers of Young and his bishops and head men had won over to their interests the Indians residing near and among them, and had sent out Mormon runners, who gathered in the Indians to the number of several hundred to aid them in the butchery.

Under the lead of the Mormons, the Indians attacked the immigrants, killing some and wounding many more. Then there was a jail in the fight.

The immigrants had defended themselves behind their wagons and in pits thrown hastily up in their camp. Then it was urged among the Mormon leaders, who held a council of war, that the immigrants be starved out, but the majority were for carrying out orders which were said to have been dictated by Brigham Young himself.

It was arranged that there be a flag of truce, the Indians to be kept quiet until this was accomplished.

The pilgrims responded to this, and were advised by the Mormons to put away their arms in their wagons and move to another point. This they did. The road they were to take was marked out, and the Mormons and Indians were scouted along the trail behind rocks and within easy range of the passing wagons.

When the unsuspecting company were driving past, they were halted by their Mormon guides, the Indians and the rest of the Mormons rushed in upon them, and dispatched them, man, woman and child. Only a few of the latter escaped.

The wagons of the unfortunates were emptied, the bodies of the slain were stripped and left nude for the time, and later were thrown into shallow graves in a ravine near by. The remains were soon scented by the wolves and were unceremoniously made a horrid repast. When the military found the bones, they gave them a decent burial, and some one carved on a rude stone raised over the graves, the words, "Vengeance is Mine! I will repay, saith the Lord."

It was claimed by John D. Lee that Brigham Young knew of and permitted the massacre. It is highly probable that such was the case.

THE TWO GLASSES.

There sat two glasses filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim;
One was ruddy and red as blood,
And one was clear as the crystal flood.
Said the glass of wine to the paler brother:
"Let us tell the tale of the past to each other;
I can tell of banquet, revel and mirth,
And the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch as though struck by blight,
Where I was king, for I ruled in might.
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the height of fame I have hurled men down.

I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame.
I have tempted the youth with a sip, a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.
Far greater than king am I,
Or an army beneath the sky.
I have made the arm of the driver fail,
And sent the train from the iron rail.
I have made ships go down at sea.

And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me;
For they said, "Behold how great you be!
Fame, strength, wealth, genius before you fall,
And your power and might are over all."
He! Ho! pale brother," laughed the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"
Said the water glass, "I cannot boast
Of a king dethroned or a murdered host;
But I can tell of a heart once sad,
By my crystal drops made light and glad;
Of thirst I've quenched and souls I've saved;
Of hands I've cooled and souls I've saved.
I have leaped through the valley and dashed down the mountains,

Flowed in the river and played in the fountain.
Slipped in the sun-bine and dropped from the sky,
And everywhere gladdened the landscape and eye

I have eased the hot forehead of fever and pain.
I have made the parched meadow grow fertile with grain.

I can tell of the powerful wheel of the mill,
That ground out the flour and turned at my will
I can tell of manhood debased by you,
That I have lifted and crowned anew.
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid,
I gladden the heart of man and maid.
I set the chafed wine-captive free,
And all are better for knowing me."
These are the tales they told to each other—
The glass of wine and the paler brother—
As they sat together, filled to the brim
On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

A FEW THOUGHTS ON DIFFERENT SUBJECTS.

BY LIZZIE HILARY.

AS this is the 4th of July, I thought I would write a few lines for your worthy paper. To-day is a great day for most people. We can hear the canoes roaring in all directions, and people are going to and fro, reaching the place of greatest amusement. What a vast amount of money has been spent this day only for amusement for one day! If it had been put to a wise purpose, what a great amount of good could have been done; but in place of that, much wickedness has been done and many lives lost. This recalls in my mind a sad accident which happened here in our neighborhood Sunday morning. A young man went out into the woods to shoot instead of attending Sunday-school right at his door; but he preferred shooting, so he thought he would clean out his revolver that he might have a good shoot on the Fourth. But alas! while so doing it went off and shot him. Poor fellow. He was a wicked boy; it is said he was a hard-swearing boy. This should be a warning to others. If this boy had went to Sunday-school, his life would have been spared. This was hard for his mother to bear; and she had buried her husband a short time ago.

I was much pleased with the piece written on dress in the last number. I say Amen to the same. I hope more of our sisters will write on this important subject, for I think many of our brethren and sisters have much to lay aside before they can be called a plain people, and more especially on the part of our sisters. When I look over our dear sisters I am made to feel very sorry—to think of the promise they all have made when they were baptized—who would dare to break that solemn promise? Look at our church fifteen years ago and then cast a glance at it now, and see what a change. If the sisters of those days were to come in our church to-day, they certainly would think they had gotten into the wrong place. You did not see them wear laces and a yard of wide ribbon on their caps, and a ribbon bow on their breast almost covering the heart that had vowed never to wear such things. Neither did you see on those sisters ruffled bonnets and bonnets with embroidery. They made their dresses plain, and all they wore was plain. When they went to meeting they always wore their cap and took off their bonnets. I see it is getting to be a common thing with many of our sisters only to wear their caps on Love-feast occasions; and those sisters fifteen years ago dressed their children plainly; now look at our sisters' children. It makes our hearts swell with emotion to see their little bodies arrayed in such style. They are so good they know not what it is to sin. "Train up a child the way he should go," is language of the Scriptures. If it is trained in pride how do you expect them to reach heaven? Oh the responsibility that is resting on parents! I believe we sit all have to answer for our children. If we are willing to train our children right, and feel our weakness, God is ever willing to help us, as his love for us is so great. Now dear sisters, do not think hard of me, for what I have written has been written through love for all. Let us all be faithful, for our time is short; we have no time to make unnecessary things. May God add his blessing and save us all, is my prayer.

THE SECOND COMING AND MILLENNIAL REIGN OF CHRIST.

BY JAR EVANS.

SUMMER II.

ALMOST every creed, ancient or modern, recognizes the personal appearing of our Lord and Savior at the end of this dispensation. Jesus and the apostles referred to it so frequently that it could scarcely be otherwise. True, fragments of creeds and bodies of divinity have not always connected his personal appearing with the millennial reign. The real purpose of the coming of the Son of Man in the clouds of heaven, was, in a measure, lost sight of in the fourth century. The philosophical expounders of the Christian faith of the theological school of Alexandria, who blended Platonism with the Gospel, had little or no use for a millennial reign; hence after the times of Ammonius Saccas and Origen, it began to disappear from the faith of the nominal church. But the fact of Christ's return always retained a place in creeds and works on theology. But with the disappearance of the millennial reign, the glory and attractiveness of the event was in a measure lost sight of. Several reasons may be assigned

1. The union of the church did much to bring the union into disrepute. Prior the church and the world stood apart—were two separate organizations. No real Christians then voted for Roman rulers or served in the armies. A follower of Jesus then looked for kingdom to come, for the overthrow of all human rule and the kingdoms of this world to become the kingdom of God and his anointed. But when the church was ruled by a Roman Emperor, she lost her interest in the coming of Jesus. The Bride watched for the return of the Bridegroom until she began to play the harlot. Then she ceased to love his appearing and only thought of Him as the Judge severe. She no longer watched and waited for him as the faithful bride, but she feared his presence and sought by superstitious rites to deprecate his vengeance. Read the hymn, "Dies irae" of the middle ages and we fail to find the longing desire to see Jesus, but fearful forebodings of divine wrath.

2. The leaving off to celebrate the supper of the Lord had something to do with this changed relation of mind towards the coming of Jesus. As instituted by Jesus the supper pointed to a sitting down in the kingdom of God. There was a marriage of the whole church to Christ at his second coming. There were guests invited, white linen given as a bridal robe in the day of her espousals. The disciple of Jesus looked forward to this marriage supper as the period when he would begin to reign with Christ. But when the council of Laodicea abolished the feast pointing forward to it, the interest in it began to wane.

3. The coming of Jesus has been for centuries arrayed in terror and gloom, associated with the dissolution of expiring nature, the wreck of matter and the crush of worlds. Preachers and poets have vied with each other in painting the horrors of the judgment day. The arch angel's voice louder than ten thousand thunders' roar; the tearing up of graves, the vast assembly convened before the burning throne, the stern and dreadful aspect of the Judge in which no mercy is mingled; the inexorable sentence of eternal despair; the exultation of the good who shout "Amen" to every wail of the lost; the universe wrapt in flames, the sun in eternal darkness and not a star in nature left behind. This judgment cooled all fervor for the event. Who desired a day fraught with so many and awful calamities to the universe? Who could look forward to the awful consummation without feeling his soul congealed with terror.

True there are solemn issues connected with the coming of the Redeemer, but he comes to deliver the creation from the bondage of corruption at the manifestation of his sons. Rom. 8: 18-24. It is the day of retribution for God's enemies, the day of vengeance, in which Jesus will be revealed in flaming fire to try every man's work of what sort it is. But is mercy clean gone? Has it ceased to endure forever?

GOD'S THUNDER

To C. H. Batsbaugh:—

DEAR brother:—I have just finished reading your noble defense of the Truth in No. 26, B. AT W. Would to God that all the brethren would abide so stringently by the plain commandment of humility.

Can it be possible that brother Bashoff is the author of that tract entitled "The Voice of Seven Thunders?" Can it be? But the same number tells us on first page that he requests it to be announced that he wrote it.

Five years ago he conducted a series of meetings here, and I never heard such heart-shivering denunciations against pride and worldly amusements and the dominion of fashion. Now he pleads for the license of the flesh. "How are the mighty fallen." I was very gay and fashionable, but he preached all the vanities of dress off my person from head to foot. I could not even retain what he now thinks a mark of Christian liberality. Cuff and collar and ruffle and hat and flounce—all had to go. So brother Bashoff's sermons uncompromisingly demanded in their import, and so Jesus and my conscience responded. My flesh pleaded for the liberty claimed in "Seven Thunders," but the "still small voice," and the voice of Sinai and Calvary pronounced the reverse.

Be not afraid to write the whole truth. You will have your reward.

A SISTER OF CENTRAL PA

REPLY.

Your astonishment cannot be greater than mine at the announcement that brother Bashoff is the author of "Seven Thunders." The biggest and most startling thing about it is the caption. I love brother Bashoff, and have profound respect for his superior talents, and his unsurpassed capabilities as a preacher.

But he has perpetrated a grave blunder from the effects of which he will not soon recover unless he makes a frank and humble confession of error, which I pray God he may do. Let the whole church pray that so great a soul and efficient a worker be not spoiled by either vain philosophy or popularity. Some of us know a little from experience what a dangerous stimulant flattery is, and how quickly it intoxicates unless it is neutralized by full potions of the blood of the cross.

You have acted as all real Christians do in relation to dress. The revelation of God in Christ is pre-eminently for the heart. The cold abstractions of logic turn it into foolishness. Reason is involved in religion and yet it is not the product of reason. The reason of the Calvinist has demonstrated God a tyrant; and the Unitarian has emptied Christ of his Divinity, and the pelobaptist pronounces baptism non-essential and feet-washing a vulgarity; and nearly all Christendom have consented to give the flesh and the devil all they ask in the matter of dress. The Holy Ghost will not omit his function where so much is at stake. Dress is too closely related to sin and holiness to be overlooked as an expression of character. We need no ecclesiastical enforcements to bring out the necessary exhibition of the indwelling Christ. The life of the body shapes the body, individual and corporate. Every principle brings out its opposite. Those who walk after the flesh must be held back by bit and rein. God has given a self-regulative energy to all life, and when He takes possession of us there is no danger that he will drop out in our life after the fashion of lawyers and dandies and flirts. These manifestations are no more due to the Divine incarnation than theft, adultery, and murder. We all err in many ways. Pride and self-seeking and passion take many forms, and may have a momentary eruption in the best. But the person who defends these evils in any form, and ever makes a religion of them, is "blinded to the god of this world." No matter whether such person wears a grey, coarse shawl belly, or the latest Parisian cut. The dress question is not settled by making laws about certain costumes, or passing prohibitions relative to certain misdemeanors in apparel. This may all be necessary, but touches not the bottom of the trouble. Fellowship with God, a true apprehension of Jesus in the Spirit, not only in the matter of rule, but in the fact of life, is the only infallible remedy. To live by rule, even a Divine rule, is not religion: but to live the life of which the rule is the shadow or symbol. Christianity is the life of God in Christ embodied and expressed in the individual. There is nothing that settles itself more easily without ecclesiastical interference, than dress. The reason is obvious. In no form does sin crop out more naturally than in display. The love of beauty, and the desire to be in it and of it, is God-implanted. Sin has perverted it. No sooner does the Holy Ghost make "sin exceeding sinful" than ~~it~~ ^{it} ~~is~~ ^{is} ~~in~~ ⁱⁿ ~~dress~~ ^{is} among the first to fall under self-condemnation. The Christian will inevitably settle the question on the side of the cross. He cannot help it. The voice of God never gives an uncertain pronouncement. Bashor's "Seven Thunders" are not God's Thunders. He has my fraternal regard notwithstanding his defection, my deep sorrow for his truce with the flesh, and my sincere prayer for his speedy illumination, conviction, repentance, and return to the Cross. There is light and peace and power.

Look unto Jesus. He is God and man, and his life is comprehensible to a child. He is not of the world. Not born of the flesh, though through it. Keep your heart warm with the pulsations of His. This is impossible under the flutter of fashion. His love will enrich you beyond gold and silver and rubies. His indwelling will yield you all the fulness of satisfaction and bliss of a rapturous wedlock. The cross is the medium through which all this comes. To coddle the flesh is to be lost. It has its claims and must have its honors, but the cross prescribes the mode and the limit.

THAT INQUIRY.

BY G. A. SHAMBERGER.

WHAT is Christianity? How often must brother Balsbaugh rise and show the principle upon which order bottoms? Oh it was wonderful to see the feathers fly when he got hold of the owl of seven hoots. There is, in warped minds, a nameless something which says, "give me light," when in the full blaze of the noonday sun. Everything after its kind, properly sought out, is worth volumes from the ablest pen. I remember one case not after its kind. This must afford much comfort to the anti-orderist—"wolf in sheep's clothing." In presenting Christ crucified, Bro: B. is most happy to stand at the side and not in front. Praise God that he is spared unto us.

ON THE DEATH OF SHARON BOSSERMAN.

BY MRS. Z. M. WOODS

[Lines inscribed to Mr. and Mrs. S. T. Bosserman on the 10th of June, 1881.]

Our Father and our God in heaven,
We pray that we may be forgiven,
If in our hearts great sorrows dwell
Since we have bid our child, farewell.

Father, we know he was only lent,
But to give him back, could we consent?
When to us he was so very dear,
We hoped to keep him longer here.

But he has gone, our darling's gone,
And we are left on earth to mourn.
We know this jewel was thine own;
Help us, Lord, to say "Thy will be done."

It seems so hard to let him go,
For we had learned to love him so.
How can we bear to think he's gone,
Never again to us return.

So suddenly our precious one
Was hurried quickly from our house,
To dwell with Christ, yes, Lord with thee.
Who said, Let the children come to me.

Heaven seems dearer to us now,
Since one we loved will surely bow
Before the great Eternal One,
Who taught us to say, "Thy will be done."

Farewell, Sharon, we may say, Farewell,
Until we are called with thee to dwell;
You'll come to us as that bright one,
Where death can never part us more.

Your brother, and your sister, too,
Will rejoice so much to meet with you,
In the bright realms of endless day,
Where God will wipe all tears away.

We all shall be so happy, then,
When free from sorrow, death and pain
We'll hail each other in that land
Where we'll take no more the parting hand.

THE DESIGN OF BAPTISM.

BY JOHN HANSEBARGER.

"So then faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God."—Rom. 10: 17.

THE Word of God is the Gospel. Then it is impossible to have Gospel faith without a knowledge of the Word of God, and we cannot exercise true faith without repentance, and we cannot have repentance without conversion, and we cannot have Gospel faith, repentance, and conversion without Gospel obedience, and we cannot have Gospel obedience without baptism; hence we learn the design of baptism when we learn the design of the Gospel. Faith, repentance, conversion, are inseparably connected, and it is accorded to by most all persons except those who are ignorant of the plain reading of the New Testament; such who make religion the effect of feeling. Then religion is not based upon the Gospel or actual principle, but alone upon these feelings, consequently they have no Gospel faith, repentance, or conversion, and hence no Gospel baptism.

Repentance and baptism, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, has the promise of the gift of the Holy Ghost. But if not done in the name of Jesus Christ it is to no purpose, and amounts to nothing. The name of Jesus Christ, when defined, is termed "the Word of God," and that is the Gospel. The teachings of the Gospel harmonize from the preaching of John to Pentecost, and also the teachings of the apostles afterwards. "John did baptize in the wilderness and preached the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." John 1: 4. As John was the character prophesied—the forerunner to prepare the hearts of the people—we believe he practiced just what he preached:—"The baptism of repentance for the remission of sins." That is, baptism the effects of repentance, and for the remission of sins.

We do not believe that John was like many of our modern teachers—preach one thing and practice another—but he practiced just as he preached it: baptism for the remission of sins. "And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." Luke 2: 47. It was written in the Old Scriptures that this repentance and remission of sins should not only be preached, but also practiced in his name.

Next we turn to Pentecost, where these conditions were for the preached to all the world, to all well as to the Jews. We find tending to this solemn duty, his preaching began to per-hearts of the people, and a godly sorrow began its work, they made inquiry to know what to do; they exclaimed, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Then Peter said unto them, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Thus we find the preaching of Peter strictly corresponding with that of John, and that which was written that it was to be done in the name of Jesus Christ. Now let us examine the command given by Peter. He told the people to repent and be baptized. We find these two, the compound command, repentance and baptism, and it is to be done in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins.

Suppose I meet a friend, who has a very sore hand, it has almost become gangrened, and I say to him, My friend, it is important that you go to work and secure a remedy; there is great danger of your losing your hand, and also your life. Having confidence in me, as a friend, he would of course begin to realize his condition and exclaim, "My dear sir, what must I do?" I would say to him, Wash and anoint for the restoring of your hand; here is the liquid and the salve. Dress the wound, wash with the liquid then apply the salve, and your hand shall be healed. No one could make him believe that to wash alone would save his hand, neither that an application of the salve alone would do; no never, so long as he would have faith in my instructions. The design of one would be the design of the other—for the healing of the hand.

Now let us again turn to Pentecost. From what Peter preached to those people, many of them began to realize their condition, and as many as gladly received the Word were baptized the same day. We also believe Peter to have been a man who practiced what he preached. Then all those that repented, in the name of Jesus Christ, and became converted were also baptized in the name of Jesus Christ, and both for the remission of sins, and they then had the promise of receiving the Holy Ghost. The same doctrine preached to-day will produce the same effect; that is, it will cause persons to realize their condition, lead them to repentance and baptism in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and will entitle them to the same promise of receiving the Holy Ghost. I will just here remark that outside of these conditions there is no promise anywhere in the New Testament of any one receiving the Holy Ghost. God has only promised to give us this precious gift upon the condition that we obey him, and this is a positive command: "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

We frequently hear it said that the house of Cornelius received the Holy Ghost before baptism. That is nevertheless true, yet it does not change the conditions upon which it is promised to us. We will examine the narrative. In the first place we all agree that the Gentiles were excluded—were not participants with those of the Jews; yet many of them were as good as Jews, and perhaps better, than the Jews, Cornelius being one of them, and no doubt was anxious, waiting for the time when he also might be a partaker of the promise given, although a Gentile. He feared God and gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God continually. So when the time had come that the Gentiles should also receive remission of sins, in the name of Jesus Christ, his prayer was also heard, though not answered directly, but indirectly. We learn from the narrative that Cornelius did not pray for the Holy Ghost or Holy Spirit that people talk so much about at the present day. The evidence is clear that he prayed for wisdom, or to know what to do, from the fact that God, through the angel, told him to send for Peter, and he would tell him what he ought to do. (Just as in the conversion of Saul of Tarsus, when he asked what to do; it was said that in Damascus it would be told him what he must do.) So Peter was sent for, and while they waited for him, Cornelius called together his kinsmen and near friends, anxiously waiting to know what the Lord, through Peter, would command them to do. When Peter and his company arrived, Cornelius remarked, "Now therefore are we all here present before God, to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." Acts 10: 33. Then after Peter preached a short sermon, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word, though not as an evidence of their having already complied with the conditions of salvation, for it was not yet given, but it fell on them rather as a miracle to convince those of the circumcision that had come with Peter. Notwithstanding, the Holy Ghost fell on Cornelius and those of his house, had they not been baptized the Holy Ghost would not have come upon them by any other means. He commanded them to be baptized—and that was what they ought to do, as the angel said would be told them by Peter when he would come.

A GLEAM ACROSS THE WAVE.

PENECER Compton, the earnest evangelical minister at Boulogne, France, relates the following incident: "During my voyage to India a dark evening in my cabin, feeling thoroughly unwell, as the sea was rising fast, and I was but a poor sailor. Suddenly the cry of 'Man overboard!' made me spring to my feet. I heard a trampling overhead, but resolved not to go on deck, lest I should interfere with the crew in their efforts to save the poor man. 'What can I do?' I asked myself, and instantly unhooking my lamp, I held it near the top of my cabin and close to my bull's eye window, that its light might shine on the sea, and as soon as the ship was possible. In half a minute's time I heard the joyful cry, 'It's all right, he's safe,' upon which I put my lamp in its place.

The next day, however, I was told that my little lamp was the sole means of saving the man's life; it was only by the timely light which shone upon him that the knotted rope could be thrown so as to reach him."

Christian worker, never despond, or think there is nothing for you to do even in the dark and weary days. Looking unto Jesus, lift up your light; let it shine that men may see; and in the resurrection morning, what joy to hear the "Well done!" and to know "that you have unwares saved some soul from death!"—Christian Herald.

If all men were to bring their misfortunes together in one place, most would be glad to take their own home again rather than take a portion out of the common stock.

WATKIN'S GLEN.

BY FLORA E. TEAGUE

A FEW years ago I saw a general rather young man who called the grand ravine called Watkin's Glen. This charming place is in the summit of Watkin's, a very handsome little town on the edge of the lake, in the state of New York.

We were very much interested in the view: the mountains of the Adirondack's grand and vast range, the Cape May Co., but with the view we better pleased than with this obscure little glen.

The glen is about two miles long, and is in the hands of proprietors who have made it very easy access by placing railing and bridges where needed and clearing and having out the road some two of fifty cents is charged for each car. We are at liberty to view the glen as we choose.

The glen is a beautiful little falls. The Glen is a very beautiful view, but after a while the nature's beauty of our work in this place (the Alpha) becomes insignificant. From hence we wandered to see, at each spot being more and more appreciated.

A Swiss Chalet is built at the opening of the large portion of the glen in which refreshments, interesting relics, stereoscopic views of the glen, &c., are for sale. A short distance beyond the ravine and opposite the Chalet is Glen Mountain House, a beautiful hotel for weary travelers. Just before we arrived at Rainbow Falls, we were requested by a gentleman, who was proprietor of a small room in which articles of vertu were kept, to borrow waterproof garments at the rate of fifty cents apiece, to pass through the stream at the falls. We politely refused, saying we were not averse to a shower, and we were to descend through traveling coats, and that the sun would soon remove the dampness. But we were scarcely prepared for the reception after all that we met. The Falls is best described by saying that a mountain stream comes down over the top of the mountain in which a beautiful rainbow is seen in clear and sunny weather, and through which we were obliged to pass before we could further pursue our journey. I will simply say that we received such a deluge that our ardor was considerably dampened! But we were a merry party and soon laughed off the evil, and trudged on to climb the Long Stairs. This consists of three sets of stairs which lead from the depth of the glen to the top. The longest of these sets consists of fifty steps. I stopped in the center to take a view of the depth below; but finding myself becoming dizzy, I sat down and rested awhile. The distance down seemed so fearful, and the protection from falling not being very ample we were glad to move on.

Other spots of interest were the Artist's Dream, Neptune's Pool, Glen of the Pools, &c. These were all magnificent in their grandeur. The little stream was very rapid in its descent over some of these places and came down in sheets of dazzling whiteness, and shimmering as diamonds in the sun. The depth of water in these places was ten feet or more, and so clear that every pebble in the bottom could be seen. Very often the steep rocky walls were so near together that we could touch each side with our outstretched hands.

The last place we visited was the Cathedral. This is almost at the end of the glen, and the last place of beauty or interest. It is a large round inclosure, the outside edge of the bottom being considerably elevated and descending toward the center so as to form ridges resembling seats.

Now those of you who are interested only in the description and not the comparison need read no farther.

Very often since my visit there and since my blessed experience in the religion of Jesus, has this little glen suggested to me beautiful comparisons. For can we not see our Creator in all He has created?

Glen Alpha, or the beginning, is our entrance into the church of believers, at which time we first experience great joys; but as we go on and on, we still find greater ones as did we in the glen.

And as we must be chastened, and need some dear one suggests the many future trials as did the glen. The glen, with his waterproof garments, as we refuse their suggestion, and the end become almost overwhelmed, and we not been stout and strong, we cannot have endured the trial. Hence the importance of hearkening unto the wise counsel of old and experienced veterans.

All our faith must be further tried. We often have the long and difficult ascent of the Long Stairs to make. Probably we begin the ascent, feeling as if we were able to do so very easily. But, ah! we soon find ourselves so exhausted to proceed further, and rather than risk a higher ascent where all would then be easy, and where we would be very near the desired end, we do as many others have done before us, descend, and wait to grow stronger. Despairful thought! we will never be more able to ascend than we are now. For while halting, we dread more and more to make another beginning and generally give up in despair, or if we do summon up courage to go on, we find we have lost our former interests, as our friends have long passed by and we find ourselves strangers in a strange land; but our successful party have now reached the end, in which they are resting and receiving the reward of their labors. They are enjoying the beauties of the grand Cathedral, so typical of the one above, where the weary have ever found sweet rest.

Let us, dear reader, belong to the successful party that never stopped for naught, but gallantly fought its way through, enjoying each new and shifting scene more and more, as does the true Christian who finds new joys in his loved pathway.

'CLOTHES DO NOT MAKE A CHRISTIAN.'

BY L. J. ROSENBERGER.

THE above is, we hold, a thoughtless remark thrust out by the world and unfortunately sometimes by those in the church.

I remember of a Presbyterian minister banding me the above, when in conversation with him on the train, and as I did not like it, I gently proceeded to hand it back.

I inquired: "Elder, do you conceive that there is religion in prayer?"

"Certainly," responds the Elder.

"Why?" I inquired.

"Because it is taught in the Scriptures," replies the Elder.

"Very good. Do you consider that there is religion in baptism?"

"I do," says the Elder.

"For the same reason you would consider that there is religion in the symbols of Christ's body and blood, would you not?"

"I would," says the Elder.

"Very well. Now Elder, for the very same reason that you claim religion in prayer, baptism, &c., I claim that there is religion in dress; for the Scriptures not only teach us what we shall wear, but also, what we shall not wear—gold, pearls, &c.—but says we shall wear 'modest apparel.' Can we then, Elder, with consistency say that 'there is no religion in dress,' when thus plainly taught in the Scriptures?"

I inquired of the reader, What does make the Christian?

To which I hear the answer: 1. Faith. (See Heb. 11: 6.)

2. Repentance (See Acts 3: 19.)

3. Baptism. (See Mark 16: 16 &c.)

In short, they the Gospel from the heart; which, as we have seen, includes dress. Hence then we see that faith makes the Christian, because we cannot be a Christian without faith. Likewise repentance makes the Christian because we cannot be a Christian without repentance, so also with baptism, and every other duty enjoined in the Gospel which as we have seen includes dress. Hence then, while faith, repentance, baptism, &c., make the Christian, so likewise, we remark, in contradiction to the motto, heading our article, that clothes do make the Christian.

LEARN A TRADE.

DR. Holland advises every boy to learn a trade. He says, in the prisons, the number of criminals who never learned a trade compared to the skilled workmen, is as six to one. A New York clergyman recently declared from his pulpit that he intended every boy he had should learn to do something useful in mechanics. Rich and poor alike should be taught how to work, says Dr. Holland, for it is quite as likely that the rich will become poor as that some of the poor will become rich. To learn to work with the hands must become a part of common education.

Do not think of knocking out another man's brains because he differs in opinion from you. It would be as rational to knock yourself on the head because you differ from yourself ten years ago.—Horace Mann.

A REMARKABLE community is that of North Falmouth, a village on Cape Cod. There is but a single church in the village and that is of the Congregational order. Every family in the place attends church, and, of course, all worship with that church.

SAVING MOTHER.

The farmer sat in his easy chair
Between the fire and the lamp-light's glare;
His face was ruddy and full and fair,
His three small boys in the chimney nook
Comed the lines of a picture book.
His wife the pride of his home and heart,
Laid the bread and made the tart,
Laid the table and steamed the tea,
Dutifully, sweetly, silently:
Tired and weary and weak and faint,
She bore her trials without complaint,
Like many another household saint—
Content, all selfish bliss above,
In the patient ministry of love.
At last between the clouds of smoke
That wreathed his lip the husband spoke:
"There's taxes to raise, an' interest to pay—
And if there should come a rainy day"
"I would be mighty handy, I'm bound to say,
T' have sumptin' put by. For folks must die,—
And there's funeral bills, and gravestones to buy
Enough to swamp a man, party s'igh,
Besides there's Edward and Dick and Joe
To be provided for when we go.
So, if I was you, I'll tell ye what I'd do:
I'd be savin' of wood as ever I could—
Extra fire don't do us any good—
I'd be savin' of soap, and savin' of oil,
And run up some candles once in a while;
I'd be rather savin' of coffee an' tea,
For sugar's high,
And all to buy.

"And cider's good enough drink for me;
I'd be kind o' careful about my clo's
I'd look out sharp how the money goes—
Groggins is useless, nater knows,

Extra trimmin'
'S the name of women.
I'll sell off the best of the cheese and honey,
And eggs is as good, s'igh about, 's the money;
And as to the carpet you wanted new—
I guess we can make the old one do,
And as for the washer, an' sewin' machine,
Them smoothe-tongued agent's a posky mean,
You'd better get rid of 'em s'ick and clean.
What do they know about woman's work?
Do they calculate women was born to sink?"

Dick and Edward and little Joe
Sat in the corner in a row.
They saw the patient mother go
On ceaseless errands to and fro,
They saw that her form was bent and thin,
Her temples gray, her cheeks sunk in.
They saw the quiver of lip and chin—
And then with a wrack he could not mother,
Outspoke the youngest, faintest brother—

"You talk of savin' wood and oil,
An' tea, and sugar, all the while,
But you never talk of savin' mother!"

A GOOD FARMER.

YOU will always see a prudent farmer have good fences, the fence-corners kept clear from his hands, everything systematically arranged around his barn and elsewhere on the farm. You will also see a good farm-house, good orchards, and generally, children enough to gather the fruit. If he has a prudent wife, you will see orderly children with clean faces and hands, always ready to go and do at the mother's or father's command, they will never stop to ask the reason why they should do this or that, but they will obey without a murmur; because they love father and mother. You will also see a clean kitchen, a neat and loving wife in it, a clean cupboard, a clean dairy, and a clean conscience. There will be a place for everything, and everything in its place. Thus there will be many a step saved, and is very sure to lead to good tools and to keep them in order.

RICHES.

THERE was a certain rich man which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared voluptuously every day. And there was a certain beggar named Lazarus which was laid at his gate, full of sores, and desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table, moreover the dogs came and licked his sores s. (Luke 16: 19-21.) We have two characters here introduced, the one a rich man, splendidly arrayed, and luxuriously fed. It seems that he enjoyed all that heart could wish for in this present world; he was comforted with all the good things which earth affords. Hence it seems his time was taken up in feasting in his company and feasting with them. It does not learn that this rich man ever did any good work or defrauded the widow, or did some good works. Thus we see that he did not care for the poor beggar who came and begged for alms from his table, and the crumbs that fell therefrom. In this present there is nothing said of righteousness or wickedness, but a contrast is made between poverty and wealth. Nevertheless it serves as a lesson to us all.

We find that the conduct of the rich man toward the poor beggar brought the displeasure of God upon him. He was therefore cast down to hell, tormented in the flames; but the poor beggar finds refuge in Abraham's bosom.

We should not allow the suffering poor and sick to lie helpless around us and not minister to their wants; if we do, it will be said to us by our Lord at the great judgment day: "I was sick and in prison and ye visited me not." We will then answer him, "When, Lord, did we see thee sick and in prison and visited thee not?" He will answer, "Inasmuch as ye did it not unto one of the least of these, ye did it not unto me."

O, ye rich! beware of the deceitfulness of riches which choke the Word of God. It is said that "it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of heaven."

Tremble O ye rich! who dress in fine array.

Hearken and obey the Savior's call,

Rise your damnation hastens on.

And hell gaps wide to meet your fall.

M. C. N.

HOME HAPPINESS.

PROBABLY nineteen-twentieths of the happiness you will ever have, you will get at home. The independence that comes to a man when his work is over, and he feels he has run out of the storm into the quiet harbor of home where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house or whether you have one little room in that house, you can make that little room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn it to it with such sweet fascies, that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against the home none of you should ever transgress. You should always treat each other with courtesy and kindness, not so difficult to love a person as it is to be courteous to them. Courtesy is of greater value and a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will but be courteous to each other, you will soon learn to love each other, and you will, profoundly, not to say lastingly, but you ever did before.

THE TWO GOATS.

AT Plymouth, England, the ruins of an old castle are still to be seen. It was built upon a very high rock, the narrow ledge of which runs out beyond the water. Two goats used to feed upon the grass and weeds that grew among the ruins, and the one that went upon the ledge, which was not wide enough for the feet of a goat to walk upon, was sent on the same to a shore, and the other then returned to turn back again. At that place there were two great cliffs, and that place there was a narrow path to pass each other, or to meet. The one that did so most fall and seemed to graze on the rocks below. The goats left the danger, and made loud cries of distress. Many people heard them and came to see what was the matter. None could give them help. The goats stood face to face for a long time. At last one was seen to kneel and crouch down so close as it could lie upon the ledge, and the other walked over him. The goat that had laid down, got up again and went on to the place where his friend had fallen, and both were saved.

TOO POOR TO TAKE A PAPER.

MOORE of the Rural New Yorker, was sitting in his office one afternoon when a friend of his came in.

"Mr. Moore, I like your paper, but the times are so hard I cannot pay for it."

"In that so, friend Jones? I'm very sorry to learn that you are so poor. If you are so hard gun, I will give you the paper."

"Oh no! I can't take it as a gift."

"Well then, let me see how to fit it. You raise chickens, I believe?"

"Yes, a few; but they don't bring anything hardly."

"Don't they? Neither does my paper cost anything hardly. Now, I have a proposition to make to you. I will continue your paper, and when you go home you may select from your lot one chicken and call her mine. Take good care of her and bring me the proceeds, whether in eggs or in chickens, and I will call it all square."

"All right, Brother Moore," and the fellow chuckled as he went out, at what he thought a clever bargain. He kept the contract strictly, and at the end of the year found that he had paid about four prices for his paper. He often tells the joke on himself, and says that he has never had the cheek to say that he was too poor to take a paper since.

sword that cuts whenever evil raises its head or spreads its deceptive tentacles.

Man can form no plan for his Maker. Zeal and self-sacrifice must not be mistaken for true knowledge of God. The methods adopted by the church for practicing divine principles must not be mistaken for the divine principles themselves. To illustrate: The baking of the bread for the communion, must never be regarded as equal to the breaking of the bread. The baking and carrying to the church are only the preparatory acts; while breaking and eating the bread are the things commended to be done by the Lord Jesus. Now to refuse to break bread and eat it, may be made a bar to fellowship; but to refuse to bake the bread, or to refuse to carry it to the assembly of the saints, cannot be made tests of fellowship and communion.

Again, the Oracles of God require the disciples of Christ to pray, but refusing to pray at designated hours and places and in a certain manner cannot be made a test of fellowship. The men in the church refuse to pray, but to pray that they may be heard is the privilege and ordinance of the church. They may pray openly or in secret. This is the option of the individual.

We observe as another source of divine reward and approbation that the children of God must adorn themselves in modest apparel. This may be made a test of fellowship, or no one who refuses to adorn his body in modest apparel, should seek the privileges and measures of God's house, and the "house" has a right to exclude all who persistently refuse the command to dress in modest apparel. "Well," says some one, "it is an individual requirement, and each one has a right to determine for himself, what constitutes modest apparel." In answer we admit that it is an individual work—the work of each heart. So is baptism, feet-washing, the Lord's Supper and communion individual work, yet all are the work of a congregation—the work of the whole church. But a difference of opinion arises as to what is modest apparel, and as no form is prescribed, the disputants agree to go before the representatives of the whole Brotherhood and there discuss it, and then submit to the church there assembled for decision. This being done, fidelity, wisdom, and Christian integrity demand that all submit to the settlement and all work in harmony. If there be any who feel aggrieved, the question may arise, why? Is it because the church assembled, decided in favor of a form that is immodest? If so, let it be shown at the next assembly wherein it is immodest, and the evil be removed. If the fashion recommended be not immodest then opposition to it should cease, and the thought and mind and strength spent in opposing should be used in nobler work.

There is a shade of difference between what the eye may constantly behold, and what the ear occasionally hears. If prayers were material—a something which we could see and handle, no doubt there would questions arise as to its form; but being an act of the mind and heart, such a question cannot arise. Not so however in things which we see, and which have an influence over the heart through the eyes. Who can measure the depth of the lust of the eye? The fruit in Eden's garden was good to look upon, and pleasant to the taste, O these terrible eyes! And yet how useful!

"But can the apparel declared to be modest by the general church, be made a test of fellowship?" Good and wise men differ on this. The usage of the church, we believe, has been to allow considerable latitude, and not debar any member from Christian Communion who is adorned in apparel differing somewhat in form from that recommended by the general assembly. We believe the wiser course is to advise the members to refrain from the follies and vanities of the worldly-minded, and adopt the fashion of the pious and steadfast among God's people. We believe this to be the most prudent course—the better way. Of course if any one adorns himself immodestly, and refuses to hear the Gospel on this point, then he may be informed that the privileges of God's house will be withheld from him until he reforms himself. And this would not be making any human suggestion a test of fellowship, but the law of the Lord asserts its claims and rights for the good of the individual and the whole church. The safe policy is to keep within the circle of God's revealed will, and let Him speak in terms that none can misunderstand. Let every man plant his feet upon the Rock and these issues will settle themselves.

THE EXTRA A. M. SESSION.

WHAT to do with the unfinished business left over by the late Annual Meeting is giving rise to different opinions. Some are in favor of holding an extra session next Fall, for the purpose of finishing the business, thinking that if it is left over till next Spring it will require the A. M., two weeks to complete her work.

We think it would be difficult to find a place to hold the extra session on account of the expense attending such a meeting. It would also require an extra draw on the time and means of those who are in the habit of attending these meetings, especially the delegates. To make the necessary arrangements would also require considerable time—more than there is between this and cold weather.

In order to make as little business as possible at the next Annual Meeting, we suggest that each district, for once, labor to bring nothing but love and good will. A little effort on the part of each member will enable this to be accomplished. We might live harmoniously for a number of years without any more decisions than these that are now on the Minutes. In fact, we have decisions enough to make of us a harmonious, religious body if we will only obey them in the spirit of consistency.

Some of the matter left over might be withdrawn by the church; that set it, and in this way greatly diminish the work of the next A. M. Let us all labor to burden the Annual Meeting less, and rely more on the decisions already made, not in the sense of law, for they are only interpretations of the Law, and as such express the mind of the general Brotherhood, being the only authorized expression of that mind in existence. J. H. M.

Bro. Holsinger has published that when at the Love-feast at West Branch, Ill., June 16th, he was "not invited to preach because" he "had not the regulation suit on," and because he does not part his hair "in the middle" of his head. Now before giving the exact facts in this case, we wish it understood that no man is prevented from preaching in Northern Illinois because he does not part his hair in the middle and wear a certain form of coat. Any brother of good standing—any one who is in full fellowship with his church at home, and is duly authorized by the church to preach can come to Northern Illinois and preach the Gospel and will be listened to with pleasure and receive the love of God's dear children. But the District, like any other District, "invites into" her churches to preach, those whom she thinks will be the most profitable in building up and maintaining true and holy principles. This is a right, we believe, claimed by each congregation. Let it be known, in justice to Bro. Edmund Forney that he did not apply any "iron-clad rule," nor present said minister from saying "a word for Christ and his cause." Said minister was invited to sit with the ministers by a fellow-laborer, but refused. He wanted an ordained elder to ask him to sit behind the table. Has it come to this that a man who is sent by the Lord to preach the Gospel will not preach until somebody else asks him? The fact is, brother H., was at that time involved in a grave difficulty with one of his adjoining congregations and the general Brotherhood, and a committee had been sent to wait on him. Bro. Forney knew this, hence thought it not best to insist on him to take part in the exercises, but if he would have taken his seat with the ministers, as he was invited to do, he could have enjoyed the same liberty usually extended to others. It has ever been regarded here among us as best for a minister, who is under a charge of misconduct, not to take part in the preaching exercises at Love-feasts until his case has been settled, yet neither the elders or the church will prevent him doing so. Neither will they invite him nor urge him. Brother Forney treated that minister just as he would have treated any other minister under like circumstances. And more. Brother H., was told why brother Forney did not invite him and was repeatedly assured that hair and clothes had nothing to do with it; but his own troubles with the Brotherhood and those near his home were the cause. Whether Bro. Forney did right or wrong, is another question, and one for each person to decide for himself; but what is to be thought of one who gives as a reason for not being invited by Bro. Forney, that which he has been assured is not the reason? Truth must prevail. No wonder schisms and difficulties and strife and bitterness arise when men deliberately publish what they know is erroneous. We regret this very much. We feel that so long as misrepresentations are sent forth, and a disregard for the truth evinced, there can be no union and peace. We still maintain that there are no "iron rules" in the church. If there be one rule that prevents any one from praising and worshipping God in the beauty of holiness, or from walking humbly before him, of doing justly and loving mercy, we would be pleased to have it pointed out, and we promise to labor for its removal. We do not want to see any man prevented from entering into eternal glory, for what we wish for ourselves we wish for others.

A queer thing happened in the congregational church at Elmira, N. Y. Pastor Thomas K. Beecher, on arising to deliver a sermon last Sunday, found that he had put in his manuscript in his pocket. He was an old one to him, and he was so busy that he was a poor one, or getting so busy that he told the organist to occupy the time while he went to his study, and, returning with the sermon he had intended to preach, proceeded to deliver it.

Bro. Hylton, of Virginia, wishes to know what has become of the "Dunard Church of Indians?" All we know about them is what was written by Bro. Bashor last Summer while on his visit to California. He then mentioned that there was, far up in the mountains, a body of Indians that belonged to the Brethren, one of their number having been baptized by the Brethren years before, and after returning to his tribe, commenced preaching, that he learned while with the Brethren. He succeeded in convincing quite a number of his comrades and then baptized them. Perhaps some of the members in California can give the necessary information.

It is pleasant to come home from some wonderful achievement in art or in science, and open the Bible, and read a description of it, written thousands of years ago. When we received from across the ocean the first transatlantic telegram, "Glory to God in the highest, Peace on earth and good will to men," the prediction seems to be fulfilled, "there shall be no more sea." But now a telephone is used with which persons converse between Calais and Dover, across the straits of Dover, a distance of twenty-one miles. There is good reason to believe that words spoken in Europe can be fixed on their arrival here and heard, as though the speaker were present.

GIVE expression to every noble and generous thought. They will vibrate down through the centuries when we are dust and ashes.

AMONG THE ROCKIES.

OUR DIARY.

July 11th. At 8 A. M., we left Denver for Idaho Springs, 33 miles west of the metropolis of Colorado. Twelve miles of a breezy ride over a rich farming country, made so by irrigating, and we arrived at the foot of the mountains; then four miles through the Pass and we are introduced to Golden, a beautiful city; situated on Clear Creek and just at the entrance to the great canyon. We sped, now this way then that, up, up, while on either side the great mountains rise thousands of feet, some perpendicular while others are less steep, but just as high. The sight is grand beyond description. On one side is Clear Creek which rushes down over the rocks forming here, then rushing hurriedly onward until it strikes another rock which has fallen from some lofty peak, and then gathers strength for another sweep. We have seen tall trees among the Alleghenies and seen the seemingly mad torrents sweep down the mountains but Clear Creek and its canyon—its perpendicular walls and immense falls, far exceed those of the Blue Ridge and Alleghenian heights, grandeur and sublimity. We are told that the Grand Canyon of the "Arkansas" is still grander and the mountains much higher. We expect to see that shortly.

On arriving at Idaho Springs, we straightway sought the mineral spring; for we had brought our dinner along and we desired water to complete the meal. We soon found them. There is an iron spring and a soda spring near each other. The soda is very hot—so much so that an egg may be boiled in it. The iron water is tepid, rather pleasant to taste and as clear as crystal.

Mountains all around. To the North, high up the side of the mountain we could see the mines and we regretted very much that time did not permit us to visit them. Near the spring was a mountain, and Bro. D. L. Miller and I concluded we would go to the top, so leaving sister Miller and brother Abram Miller to guard the camp, we began the ascent, and, after much hard work, we had the pleasure of sitting on the summit and viewing the great mountains, covered with snow, to the west about twenty miles away. Think of snow in July! Yes plenty of it among the Rocky Mountains.

Some enterprising person had been prospecting on this hill, so we got down into the hole and looked after specimens. We gathered a few, then began the descent, and on arriving in camp found our guards still doing duty. The top of the mountain upon which we sat and viewed the great works of God is about 8,000 feet above the level of the sea. At 5 P. M., we gathered up our baskets, went to the depot and started for Denver. The day was pleasant, we saw much, enjoyed the works of God, and returned refreshed in mind and body.

July 12th. Spent the day with the family of Bro. A. Miller, and in looking at the city of Denver. It is astonishing how many buildings are being erected here—and good substantial ones they are.

July 13th. Left Denver at 8 A. M., on the Denver and Rio Grand Railway for Manitou, 75 miles South, arriving about noon. The first point of interest along the way was Castle Rock. It seems as if a mound had been created covering several acres, and then a huge rock placed on the top of the mound. The sides of the rock are perpendicular and rise about one hundred feet. Pass along rapidly we see the mountains to the west and plains eastward, the spell had broken occasionally by queer and curiously contrived monuments as if they grew right up out of the earth. One near Colorado Springs look like a peat with an anvil set on the top of it.

Now we are in Manitou. It is situated in a narrow valley at the foot of Pikes Peak, at an elevation of 6297 feet. Near it to the westward is Ute Pass which cuts through the zinc chain of the Rocky Mountains. The summit of Pike's Peak is 14,000 feet above this beautiful valley. Fountain Creek dashes down the west side of the valley, leaving its rise in the mountains as it reaches the town through Ute Pass. There are six mineral springs here. The temperature varies from 43° to 56° F., and they are all filled with carbonic acid. As you come to the valley, the first spring is the Siphonone, built up from under a wooden caisson in the middle of the principal road in the town. A little further on towards the west on the highway is Fountain Creek is the Navajo Spring, containing carbonates of soda, lime and magnesia. We next cross the stream by a pretty rustic bridge and pass around a huge boulder and take a seat in an ornamental summer-house. Just a few feet from the door is the Manitou Spring. Its taste resembles that of the Navajo. Going up the right bank of the stream nearly a quarter of a mile, we reach, near the road, the Ute Soda. This is very much like the Navajo and Manitou Springs, though not quite so strong chemically. Coming back a short distance, we cross the stream and go up Ruxton's creek nearly a half mile, and arrive at a summer-house near the creek, in which is the Iron Ute. The water is very effervescent, and notwithstanding the strong chalybeate taste is quite agreeable. Continuing on a few hundred yards we reach the Little Chief which is strongly impregnated with sulphate of soda, and contains also considerable iron.

These springs were regarded as healing waters among the Indians, and the white man very regards them as the same, for he comes from all parts of the country—even from Europe. Suitable buildings have been erected for the seekers of health, and the town is rapidly improving, neat cottages and dwellings dot the valley and hillsides, making it a delightful place to live. Professor Llew says these springs resemble those of Ems and excel those of Spa—two of the most celebrated groups in Europe.

From here excursions are made to the summit of Pike's Peak—13 miles up the mountain; to Crystal Park; to Seven Lakes; Manitou Canons, Cheyenne Canons, seven miles; to Ute Pass, Rainbow Falls and the Garden of the Gods.

At five P. M., in company with D. L. Miller and wife we started on foot for Manitou Heights to the south. We passed up through a glee about a mile gradually rising until we were about 500 feet above the valley. The distance around to the south side of the height being too great and the time too short, we concluded to scale the heights from the west side, so up we went the editor leading, the manager of Mt. Morris College in the rear and his wife between, a few feet at a time and then we would rest. We take hold of the bushes above us, hand the end of our case to sister Miller and we grasp the other with our hand and make another stride upward, brother Miller staying behind his wife prepared against any emergency to go down. Finally we reached the summit, 8000 feet above the sea. To describe the scenic splendor utterly fails our pen. Colorado Springs, five miles eastward, looked like a little hamlet, though it had a population of 15,000. Beyond it, the plains stretch out for a few hours about 100 miles. North of the mountains of the Gods and the mountains of the Garden of the Gods, rising up in the distance, stood grand old Pike's Peak, while beyond were mountains which looked like little children beside great Pike. At 7.30 P. M., we returned to our place of lodging, thankful for what we saw and enjoyed. These waters, and travel up the mountains do me good.

Next for the top of Pike's Peak on horse-back.

THE NIAGARA RIVER THE PLACE OF HIS DEATH, AND NOT GENESSEE COUNTY.

THE following statement was made, as the date shows, nearly six years ago, but was not published at the time it was made, and had slipped out of mind and remained unthought of until now. The gentleman by whom it was made—the Rev. Mr. Van Doren—is a clergyman who lived for many years in this city, and who subsequently moved to Indiana. He was born and brought up in New York, and in that way came in contact with the persons to whom he refers. He affirms it as follows:

"In the Fall of 1839 I boarded with a Mrs. Graham, in East Brooklyn, L. I., the widow of the celebrated lawyer known as the attorney for those four men tried for murdering Morgan, who who had published the "Myster of Freemasonry." During the six months, Mrs. G., with her family told me the following facts. They demonstrate the actual murder of Morgan as near as human evidence can do it. In my last interview with Bishop Whitehouse, we had quite a lengthy talk of Mrs. G. and her husband, and Mrs. G. was a member of his church in the city of Rochester, N. Y.

"One evening, on returning home, he told his wife that he had received a retention fee of $10,000 to defend the men charged with the murder of Morgan. Her surprise was so great that she could not believe it. But he persisted in the statement that, in case he cleared them, he was pledged $10,000 more. She felt stunned, as if struck by a bolt of lightning. She began expostulating with him as to the awful crime, and the thought that her husband, a professed Christian, and whose talent, eloquence, learning, and fame she was justly proud, should shield miserable murderers, overcame her. She could neither eat nor drink. Then gathering her strength, she flung herself at his feet and begged him, for her sake, for their children's sake, for his eternal well being, under no circumstances to incur their guilt and stain himself with the blood on their heads, hearts, and hands. He was inexorable. 'I must have the splendid fee,' he said. 'I must have the fame their clearing will surely obtain.' She wept and was crushed under inconsolable grief. She refused to retire, and spent the entire, living night, alternately on her knees, pacing the floor, and weeping, as though it would prove the death of the body and soul of her honored and beloved husband.

"In the morning she came, as for a funeral, to the table and refused a crumb. She had no heart for any thing, but sank down in sad forebodings that the wrath of God and vengeance due the crime of the four, would blast her then happy household. Mr. Graham did plead their case, cleared the murderers, and won the $10,000. The cause of his wife's grief I omitted to mention. She asked him if he thought they were guilty. He replied that they had confessed to him that they murdered him on the Niagara river. He knew he could trust her with the dread secret. He received the balance of the $20,000, believed to be the largest fee that had been paid in the land for a criminal suit brought to a successful issue. Mr. G. had a score of offers for partnership in the principal cities. He selected New York city. Business flowed in. For three years he rode the highest wave of legal fame and income. Then his wife's fears were realized in a terrible manner. His reason tottered. His mind failed. He went to Philadelphia and bought $2,000,000 worth of real estate. He sent for his wife. She came and brought him home, and with her once noble but then ruined husband, drove to the door of the Insane Asylum. She saw the large door close upon her idol blasted. From that dreadful dwelling of madmen and deranged, he never departed. After lingering some years he died, and the funeral of his body was but a sad and solemn mockery of the funeral of his noble reason, prostituted for gain. That splendid advocate was a sermon and sacrifice to the thousands of aspiring jurists who were tempted to prefer gold to God.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 4th.

Please explain the latter part of the 4th verse of the 6th chapter 1st Cor. "Who are those that are least esteemed in the church?"

HARRY GILLAM.

Will some one explain Genesis 4:10—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him?

ROBERT T. CROOK.

Does Gen. 4, infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living? If so, who was his wife?

MARY C. NEUMAN.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not?

ROBERT T. CROOK.

I TOLD YOU SO.

THE above phrase is frequently used, after a disputed subject has developed itself, if husband and wife conjecture as to the probability of rain, the wife saying, she thinks it will rain; the husband thinks it will not;—if the rain comes, she instantly informs her husband, "I told you so."

If the wife pampers the child with sweetmeats, delicacies, etc., against the presentations of her husband, and sickness ensues, he promptly informs her, "I told you so."

If the character of a certain person is assailed and parties take sides as to the truthfulness or fealty of the report, (which they most always do) the party happening to be in the right asserts his or her superior wisdom by telling the other party, "I told you so." The phrase is simply an offshoot of egotism. The party happening to be in the right, was about as ignorant, as to the final development of the disputed point, as the others, and it is only after the matter has developed itself, that the phrase is used.

But there is a moral connected with the phrase, that we would do well to give heed to.

God "has told us" a great many things in His Word, that affect our eternal destiny in the world to come, either for weal or woe; and the time is coming, when it will be ascertained, how well we have observed the things "God has told us."

Swearer—if you are finally rejected for your profanity, remember, "God told you so," beforehand.

Drunkard—if you are rejected for your intemperance, remember, that "God has told you so."

Blasphemer, if you are cast away, don't forget that "God told you so."

Proud, vain man or woman,—if God refuses to accept you finally, think now, that "God told you so."

Let us, if for your untimeliness God's word cast you away, the stinging truth will come home to your heart, that "God told you so."

Sinner—you need not wait for eternity to develop this matter, but you can know the certainty of your destiny now. God has revealed this beforehand in His Word.

Christian,—if you are tempted, God has told you so. Do not be discouraged. He will make your escape possible.

If you meet with trials and afflictions on the way, be comforted in the thought, that "God told you so." It is with much tribulation that we enter the kingdom, and our troubles here, will only make us richer there.

If the prison or filthy dungeon should be your lot, do not be discouraged, for, "God told you so."

If the flame should consume your mortal body, in defence of truth as it is in Jesus, be not discouraged, for "God told you so." "And if you lose your life for my sake and the Gospel, ye shall find it again," says Christ.

If in the final day, you will abide like unto in the kingdom of your Father, and your joys be unpeakable and of glory, and your reward so great, that no mortal mind could conceive them, and your happiness be forever complete, know now, that "God has told you so."

LET US HAVE LIGHT!

Gen. 1: 3, "What was that Light, seeing the sun and moon were only made the fourth day? Some one please explain."

LIZZIE B. MYERS.

IN No. 23, B. at W., we have a reply to the above query. As editor Moore says, "we are apt to get into deep water." But, perhaps, we can draw out some ideas by this article.

Light, according to the "dynamic" theory is a mode of force, originating in molecular motion, as are heat, electricity and chemical affinity. And further, each of these forces is convertible into each of the others,—may produce the rest and be produced by them.

Light, for instance, is accompanied by heat, and a high degree of heat by light. And by chemical action we may produce heat, light and electricity.

Now the days spoken of in Genesis undoubtedly refer to long periods of time.

The science of geology has done much to enlighten us on what transpired during these periods. It is a point beyond dispute, that this globe was once in a liquid or molten state, perhaps an undistinguishable mass, together with all of the innumerable worlds that revolve around us, and the sun.

But there came a time when the chaos began to assume definite forms; when the earth began to gradually cool off, to revolve around a common center and upon its own axis.

Now, as force of any kind will produce heat, and heat will produce light, we see how this light might have been produced, &c., by the light thrown out from its own surface. Doubtless there was a time when the surface of our earth was as hot and luminous as the surface of the sun and stars are now. And experiments, already made, go to show that the center of the earth is now in a molten state.

Doubtless Mr Myers misinterprets 2 Peter 3: 6, 7. The apostle certainly referred to the destruction of the world by the flood in the time of Noah, which reference is made plain by reading the remainder of seventh verse.

The "Chaotic Period," would undoubtedly come after the light, when the gradual cooling of the earth, would envelope it in darkness and clouds. Then the necessity arose for a "Great Luminary," and the sun, moon and stars appeared. Out of the "Chaotic Period," there burst from the creative power of the great Creator a world of light.

Hence we remark: First, the fiat, "Let there be light," refers to the light from the red hot surface of the earth.

Second, that after the general cooling off of the earth, came a period of "darkness," of clouds, by evaporation, which enshrouded the earth in darkness. The Chaotic period occurred, which is the second day.

Third, the sun and lesser lights appeared during this period, and that was the beginning of the third day.

I do not find fault with what has been written on this subject in previous issues, but the science will throw more light yet, upon not only this, but many other, not fully understood subjects in the Bible. While I do not say any claim to this scientific principles, it may, I think, draw out a full explanation from some one else.

Wishing for the Light,

I Am Yours,
W. P. M.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL workers will long remember the late Stephen Paxson, the great Sunday-school missionary of the West. He was filled with his work. The following incident is a key to his whole character:

"He was offered at one time, on account of his extensive acquaintance with the West and his integrity of character, a partnership in the purchase of western lands. The offer was declined, because it would divert him from the Sabbath-school work. In after-years, the gentleman who had made him the offer, showed him a memorandum that the lands had produced a revenue of $50,000; but Father Paxson, drawing his note book from his pocket, pointed to the record of 50 000 children gathered by him into the Sabbath-schools, and triumphantly exclaimed, 'I would not alter the record, nor change the investment.'"

"I ONCE heard a conversation between a church member and an infidel. After arguments were urged at some length on both sides, the infidel observed to his friend that they might as well drop the subject of conversion; for said he, I do not believe a single word you say, and more than this, I am satisfied that you do not really believe it yourself; for, to my certain knowledge you have not given as much for the spread of Christianity,—such of the buildings of churches, foreign and domestic missions,—as your last Durham coat cost. Why, sir, if I believed the one-half of what you say you believe, I would make it my rule to give to the church, and let my farm be the exception."

NUMBER VII.

FARRAGUT, IOWA, July 23rd, '81.

My last was written from West Virginia while awaiting the train and sweltering under the heat of a blazing sun. The train was behind time. I must have been off up the rugged, cliffed, rocky valley or rather gorge of New river, a spot of interest called to remembrance by circumstances that transpired years ago. "See that log cabin just across the river." There is where I tried to preach my first sermon. The text I shall never forget. There, too, is the spot, by the shelving rock, where at different times precious souls were led into the liquid stream and confessed Christ as their Savior. Farther up, another spot is plain to view where, I, a number of times, administered the ordinance of baptism. Some of the willing subjects have come over to the other shore, and others linger here just waiting. We speak and pray at the foot of the side of the river, and look on the opposite shore at the river we take time to look at the Fayette county and think of the descent we have behind. Tunnel after tunnel passes, and one takes us beneath the main range of the Allegheny mountains. We had a hope of a view by moonlight of the famous White Sulphur Springs, but as we pass it, my eye was a victim to the influence of the sweet restorer." Wife says the numerous neat white cottages, large and magnificent hotels and beautiful surroundings looked indeed inviting this hot weather.

Early in the morning we arrived at Staunton, Va., where we tarried until 10 A. M. During the time we took a stroll around town. Familiar old-time marks put us in mind of our boyhood days, as it was near this place we were "raised." There is the old stone jail from which, as one of the guards, we helped conduct a murderer to the gallows. Then we belonged to the military, and tried to be obedient to the law and our captain; now we are trying to conduct condemned sinners to the place of pardon that they may live in obedience to gospel law and follow our Heavenly Captain.

The Deaf and Dumb Asylum and Asylum for the Insane are extensive buildings located here.

Now we are aboard the beautiful cars of the B. & O. R. R. At Weyers' Cave Station we are met by brother F. Cline and taken to his pleasant home near by.

Afternoon meeting at the Valley meeting-house. Met with many brethren and sisters and old time associates. Next day, at 10 A. M., meeting at the Brick church, near New Hope, at 3:30 P. M. at Mount View Chapel, and at night across South river, near brother Daniel Yount's. The weather was extremely hot, and we thought three engagements with the enemy in one day rather a severe description; but by the grace of God we hope some good may result.

Next evening at night meeting at Harren Ridge meeting-house. On the following day, by the kindness of brother Yount, accompanied by sister Yount, we went to visit the world-renowned Weyers' Cave. Mr. Mouser, our guide, led us from chamber to chamber, and was very attentive in showing us the marvellous beauties and astonishing wonders of this immense cavern. It would be a useless task to undertake to describe the cave so that one could have a true conception of its real beauties and singular formations, all the work of nature's delicate finger. Indeed may we say, "Marvelous art thy works, oh Lord!" The change from the cool temperature of the cave to that on the outside was remarkable, and caused exclamations of surprise. After partaking of our lunch, we were off for the depot, and soon were at Mt. Crawford, from whence brother John Flory took us to his desirable home.

On the evening of the 14th, meeting in the Bridgewater church-house. Next day at Dayton, and the following day, (Sunday), attended the Brethren's Harvest or Thanksgiving meeting in the Bridgewater church. In the evening was taken by brother David Long, to Argos county, near Congersville. Meeting next day, 10 A. M. in the Brethren's new church, at 2:30 P. M. at Beaver creek, and next night at Spring Creek, in the Normal school building. In the way, we think the Lord's blessing will make a success of it, and we are very anxious as principal and under management of the Brethren, and governed by right principles, we cannot see other than a bright future for the school. The surrounding community itself can support a large school, and already it is being patronized by parents from a distance.

Monday evening Dayton again. Read our reports to the Annual Millico company. They are, to all appearances, doing a thriving business, and dealing out "music" in almost every style to suit the musical world. They have their own printing-press, book-binding, etc., etc.

At night preaching at Bowman's school house. This was our last appointment in the valley. Though our visit was short, we had the pleasure of visiting hosts of dear members, relatives and old friends, and the large audience that greeted us at all appointments, mostly members of the church, gave evidence of the numerical strength of the Brotherhood in the valley, and the evident fruits of genuine religion as expressed in the lives of the brethren and sisters, evidenced the fact they were strong in the faith once delivered to the saints. Gospel discipline in the order that will always separate from the world and bring about a unity of sentiment and love in the church. Let the flesh-pleasing, world-loving, fashion monger, hat-levotee go to the churches of the valley of Virginia, and learn the lesson of a practical application of the principles of the Gospel to the lives of men and women, and then go home and lay his mouth so low in the dust that the voice of seven times seven thunders can never awake him to speak again for Satan through a false-labeled trumpet.

So many showed their kindness to us all, that we cannot give mention of all by name. Suffice it to say that we shall never, no never forget them and their kindness and good wishes, and of course God will bless them. The parting hand and starting tear are only a prelude to those happy meetings in the "sweet by and by."

Tuesday noon we were off down the valley for Harper's Ferry, where we had to lay over until 11 o'clock at night, when we were off for Cumberland, where we changed cars, getting aboard the fast train for Pittsburg. What a rough road, and how fast the train did run! Awakening in the morning and seeing day-light peeping in, the brakeman says, "Meyersdale." Yes, we want to peep at the town. Looks somewhat familiar. Here we attended the Annual Meeting some years ago. Oh we go, thence down the river around the crazy points. Yes, it is a rough country. Pittsburg is reached. After a short delay we were off again over the P. F. W. & C. E. R. R. on through Ohio. "Smithville." Yes, over there is brother Hoovers', the place of Annual Meeting years ago. Beyond is the old church where the elders met. We think of those times and then how time flies. Prophets have died and gone, and still the church lives. God is good! He can save the church. Wooster and Mansfield passed. We think of friends, then night closes in and we lay our head upon the pillow and go away into the land of dreams. Time and again we awake. The storm is raging, rain falling in torrents, and the lightnings are vivid thunders roll, but on we go. Day dawns forty miles from Chicago. Morning wet and foggy. Before we get to Chicago it begins to rain; no difference, we run into the sheds adjoining the depot and soon are within its capacious walls. After breakfast we saw sister Susan Thomas of Iowa sail aboard the omnibus for the Rock Island depot. She had been on a visit to Virginia to see her parents, and had accompanied us thus far, and then with umbrella in hand we sallied forth through the crowded thoroughfare of this great city for a walk of about a mile to see the General Agent of the C. B. & Q. road. Returned just in time to take the 10:20 A. M. train, and off again across the State of Illinois. About sunset crossed the Great Father of Waters at Burlington, Iowa, thence on across the State of Iowa to Red Oak, where we arrived next morning and changed cars for this place. At the depot were met by brother B. F. Flory, (brother in the flesh also) and soon were resting at his home from a continuous run of three days and three nights. Through it all, the Lord has blessed us, and we praise his name.

From John A. Studebaker.—Our quarterly concert came off the 3rd inst. We do not fully decide to hold a Live-fest this Fall yet. If we do, we will send a notice to B. & W. for publication. May God bless all the dear brethren and sisters who so liberally responded to the call from Denmark to build them a meeting-house. They are not only laying up treasures here on earth, but also in heaven. "For where your treasure is there will your heart be also." Matt. 6:21. Our heart, dear brethren, is in the work, but our means being limited, we cannot do what we would like to. But those of us who are blessed with this world's goods and to spare, cannot certainly put their money to a better use than for the spread of the Gospel in Denmark, as well as elsewhere. In reading the decision of late A. M. I, also see that the church is still united in the wearing of plain apparel. May God help us all to be a separate people from the world in dress as well as in our daily walk and conversation. When we are received into the church, we all promise to forsake the world, its fashions, and vain amusements. But how many of us soon forget the vow we make to God in baptism! Then if we have broken our covenant with God, let us renew it and go on unto perfection, live faithfully unto death and finally in the resurrection receive a just recompense of reward for the debt done in the body, etc.—Grenola, Elk Co., Kan.

From J. R. Spacht.—To all who are interested in the Home Mission of the Northwestern District of Ohio, and indeed all who love Jesus, and are concerned for the welfare of their fellow-man:

The commission, "Go ye into all the world, and preach my Gospel to every creature, in a command binding upon the ministry, the laity by no means excluded. The Scripture asks the questions: "How shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach except they be sent?" While it is the ministers' duty to go and make disciples of all nations, the laity should be deeply interested in the work, and as we are members one of another, we should be co-workers, and all labor together for the furtherance of the Gospel of Christ. Our ministers have their homes to feed and clothe, and families to maintain as well as the laity, and for these to be called away from their labor to preach and at the same time be at an expense and the laity at home enjoying the comforts of their families and adding to their wealth, and not give anything for the spread of the Gospel, is not at all reasonable, and does by no means show the spirit of a true disciple of Christ, nor a concern for the salvation of poor sinners. What a glorious project it could be if some of our wealthy persons would say, "Dear brother evangelist, you are over yonder and preach to those people; they are anxious to hear the Word. Go and give them the bread of life and I will furnish the necessary means."

Would it not be much better, dear brethren, for it is to spend some of our means in any way than to hoard up all for our children? We have not the assurance that the wealth we hoard for them will be a curse or blessing. Often it proves otherwise, even a curse. Let us, therefore, use at least a part of our wealth in fulfilling one of our Saviors' last commands: "Go ye into all the world and preach my Gospel to every creature." We have the foreign mission, and the home mission. Brethren, we ought to have many more. Jesus said, "I will build my church, and it will stand; and the gates of hell will not prevail against it." If our hearts are to value the whole world, it is our duty to carry out the work of the souls of the world through the agency of His people.

Dear brethren, be encouraged. You may not have much sorrow and many crosses to endure, but remember Jesus will never forsake you for all. If you are here on earth, you are multiplying for the wants of the heathen and for our fellow-lodgers, these are also those in our midst who are calling for the Gospel to be preached to them.

Our blessed Jesus who once lived upon this earth, and went about, himself preaching, to the people and working miracles, that they would believe on him, after his crucifixion said, "Preach my Gospel to every creature." I hope, then, that none of our beloved brethren will say that it is wrong for the laity to help the ministry to go to places where there is no organized church and but few members living, or some anxious seekers after Him truth. Then if it is not wrong it is right for them to help to preach the Gospel to every creature, and it was so considered by our District Meeting of 1879 that in order to reach such isolated places, the laity should be called upon to contribute something toward carrying on the work. This meeting then appointed a board of five, whose duty it was to appoint solicitors in each congregation, who were to call to the different members to donate something towards the object. To the solicitor: Your work of soliciting funds will perhaps seem a task to you at times; when you call on a member that does not feel to give anything, don't let this discourage you. You need not exert for money; if any should not give cheerfully, their offering would not be acceptable unto God, and the District Meeting advised that there should be no coaxing done. The best way to proceed, if your elder is willing, is to get the names of all the members on a slip of paper, and then divide them to each solicitor, and when you ardently solicit or have a sufficient amount to send, send it by registered letter or postal money order, to Joseph R. Throck, Dankirk, Huron Co., Ohio, Treasurer of Home Mission, and name the amount sent, on a postal card and send it to J. R. Spacht, Secretary, (same address). Please attend to this as soon as you can conveniently, as the Board should know how much means there will be to carry on the work. Those who wish to make a call for preaching, first consult your elder in regard to making a call, then get a place in which to hold the meeting, and send your call to the Secretary or any member of the Board.

To the contributors: How should we should such as give? Every man accord as he purpoeth in his heart so let him give. How should he give? Not grudgingly or of necessity. Why? Because God loveth a cheerful giver. 2 Cor. 9:7. Dear brethren, if we would all obey the command that Paul gave to the Corinthian church, (1 Cor. 16: 2) there would be no lack of means to carry on the work of the Lord. Our Danish Mission would be well supplied, and there would be many more missions sent to carry the glad tidings of salvation to poor sinners who are in darkness. It is necessary for the Danish church to have the command, is not just as necessary for the church here at home? Read it positively when you have in store as God has prospered you. Dankirk, Ohio.

There have been played a few weeks. A pressure of work on our part caused it to be overlooked.—[E.]

From J. M. English.—Many months ago, I was solicited to subscribe for this paper, but thought it would be of little benefit to me. Finally I subscribed and subscribed for the paper. I have received my third paper and am impatiently awaiting for the fourth, to hear the glad tidings from my Brethren from far and near. It gives me great encouragement to hear that the work of the Lord is increasing the world over. Our Sunday school is under good progressive. The average attendance is about one hundred. We hope that the Lord will bless the work that the result may be beneficial to all. Brother Jacob Appelman left our church July 14th, to pay a visit to the Brethren in Kansas, where he expects to make his home if the brethren will prove satisfactory to him. We feel sad to hear of his departure, as he is a laborer in the cause of Christ, but we trust our loss will be soon good brethren and sisters' great gain.—Union Church, Plymouth, Ind.

From Josiah Barnhart.—Please announce through your columns that the brethren of the Appenose church, Franklin county, Kansas, contemplate holding their Communion meeting Sept. 10th-12th, at the residence of James T. Kinsey, four and one-half miles north of Centropolis, and three and one-half miles south of the Marie postoffice. The meeting to commence at 3 o'clock P. M. A general invitation is extended to brethren and friends, and especially to ministering brethren. We say that there will be arrangements for conveyance from Ottawa to place of meeting on Friday the 9th. Trains arrive at about 1 o'clock. Brethren on friends traveling by rail will please respond with the writer and give notice in due time, by writing him at Appenose, Franklin county, Kansas.

HOW I KEEP WELL.

SICKNESS a result arising from disobedience to the law governing the mind and body, either from ignorance or of willful transgression. Man is therefore well in proportion to his obedience to law.

Individuals live differently, and may not all be governed by the same law. All may not suffer from the same transgression, but in the many ways in which humanity may transgress, none are free, and their ailments may all be traced to some violation of law governing their being.

Individuals have habits, ways, fashions, methods, and modes of life on earth, each in their sphere moving toward in health or sickness. I had my ways of life and so differently were they to the true philosophy of health that I became sick. The first step was to learn the law of my own being. Having become acquainted with disobedience to the law governing my being had to be brought it to requisition. Here arose a warfare between self-love and indulgence, the spiritual and the carnal, the precious and the holy, a picture of my inner feelings and between ignorance and a better knowledge of life. I conquered foes and conquerors yet and in proportion to my victory I am well. At the early age of sixteen I discovered my soul was diseased, was sinking. For three long years I sought a remedial agent. The flesh warred against the spirit, and after a hard struggle obtained a victory through Christ, and by the all-healing potency of his blood, I was cured. I felt strong, yet I made no grand mistake. I had not yet learned the true meaning of the text, "Glorify God in the body and in the spirit."

It was too such a culture of the spirit to the neglect of the body. I lived then like too many Christians now live—with bodies unsundered, not having true ideas of bodily holiness. Years passed on, and aged here of them will be with. Though I aspired to greater holiness I made but little progress, knowing that such work in body causes the mind to be depressed and it is the condition of the body greatly influenced my intellectual conceptions. Of later years new light has sprung up in my soul. To my happy pleasure I find to be a true Christian I must live above the disturbance of the life. And to have the ascendancy, I had to change my manner of living. I did change. I no longer ate of mice you know how I get well. I received well by obeying law. I endeavor to honor Christ in the body as well as in the spirit. I regard my Savior as the all-healing physician of body and soul. I keep myself loyal to Christ and lovingly submissive to the will of my beloved Jesus. By this holy consecration, my passions, affections, and emotions are changed, all in a line submissive to the will of Christ.

By becoming thoroughly imbued with this spirit, I partake of his vitality and can live as he lives. This then brought all my labors to perfect a stem. I honor "with mine own hands" sufficient to supply my family, dress habitually, eat plain foods and at regular intervals, eat no food of any kind between meals, rise and retire at regular hours, giving sufficient rest to the body, breathe plenty of fresh air, rely upon God and subsist upon the bounty of heaven. Am a firm believer in the higher forces which the Savior holds as a curse to all who may apply. I recognize its potency. I abstain from all alcoholic stimulants. Drink nothing but pure water. Tea and coffee are discarded. Tobacco in all its forms has never defiled my lips or breath. In short, endeavor to be "temperate in all things," and by the guidance of the Holy Spirit, whom Jesus has sent, guiding me into obedience to all truth, I remain well.

SHAVING THE BEARD.

THE custom of shaving the beard was enforced by Alexander of Macedon, not for fashion, but for a practical end. He knew that the soldiers of India, when they encountered their foes, had a habit of grasping them by the beard, and so he ordered his soldiers to shave. Afterward shaving was practiced in the Macedonian army, and then among Greek citizens. The Romans imitated the Greeks in the practice, so they did in many other things and spread it to the different European nations yet barbarous. In the middle ages, at the time of the Renaissance, shaving was introduced, and the habit was retained, though discussion gave place to romanticism, and that, in its turn, was replaced by realism. The beard was a source of trouble to Ruler the Great, who, simultaneously with the introduction of his great reforms in Russia, tried to induce his people to imitate the shaving nations. This innovation was resisted by his subjects with the utmost resistance, and they preferred to pay heavy penalties rather than to suffer any disfigurement, as they believed, of the image of God. To the Russian of olden times the beard was a symbol of liberty. In several countries of Western Europe and in the United States the beard was restored to honor only about twenty years ago, but even yet the majority of men respect the custom introduced by Alexander the Great. A TRUE INCIDENT.

WHEN the Boston train came steaming into the depot, the crowd rushed to the platform. As a band of recruits mounted the platform, they shouted back to their friends who had accompanied them to the train, the various slang phrases they could command, interspersed with an oath now and then. As the train moved off they pushed each other into the car, where many ladies were seated, including a Mrs. B—— and her two boys. Then the snatches came out thick and fast, such one evidently trying to outdo the others with profanity. Mrs. B—— shuddered for herself and her boys, for she could not bear to have their young minds contaminated by such language. If the train had not been so crowded she would have looked for seats elsewhere, but under the circumstances she was compelled to remain where she was.

Finally, after this coarse jostling had continued for nearly an hour, a little girl, who, with her mother, sat in front of the party, stepped out timidly from her seat, and going up to the ring-leader of the group—a young man whose countenance indicated considerable intelligence—she presented him with a small Bible. She was a little delicate-looking creature, only seven or eight years old, and as she laid the book in his hands she raised her soft eyes appealingly to his, but without saying a word went back to her seat.

The party could not have been more completely hushed if an angel had silenced them. Not another oath was heard, and scarcely a word was spoken by any of them during the remainder of the journey. The young man who had received the book seemed particularly impressed. He got out of the car at the next station and purchased a paper of candy for his little friend, which she presented to her. He then stooped down and kissed her, and said that he would always keep the little Bible for her sake.

The little girl's mother afterward told Mrs. B—— that her child had been so troubled by the wickedness of these young men, that she could not rest until she had given her little Bible, which she valued so highly herself.—

THE DANGER OF WINE.

THE late Prof. Goodrich, of Yale College, testified as follows to the danger of wine: "I had a widow's son committed to my care. He was heir to a great estate. He went through the different stages of college, and finally left with a good moral character and bright prospects. But during the course of his education he had heard the sentiment advanced, which I then supposed correct, that the use of wines was not only admissible, but a real auxiliary to the temperance cause. After he had left college he continued respectful to me. At length he became reserved. One night he rushed unceremoniously into my room, and his presence told the dreadful secret. He said he came to talk with me. He had been told during his senior year that it was safe to drink wine, and by that idea he had been ruined. I asked him if his mother knew this. He said no, he had carefully concealed it from her. I asked him if he was such a slave that he could not abandon the habit. 'Talk unto me of slavery,' he said; 'I am ruined, and before I go to bed I shall quarrel with the bar-keeper of the Tontine for brandy or gin to sat my burning thirst.' In one month this young man was in his grave. It went to my heart. Wine is the cause of ruin to a great proportion of the young men of our country. (B)

RANKEE had malignant and revengeful thoughts. A spirit of revenge is a spirit of the devil, than which nothing makes a man more like him, and nothing can be more opposite to the temper which Christianity designs to promote. If your revenge be not satisfied, it will give you torment now; if it be, it will give you greater hereafter.

Correspondence.

FROM DENMARK.

FRI AUGUST 28, 1881.

Dear Bro. Ekshel.

Your two letters are received, containing account of A. I also of your proposed visit to Denmark. Thank you, dear brother for both. I am made glad of the abundant gift bestowed to the churches in Denmark, which will help a great deal to strengthen the cause.

I have, at present, no more news to write, but will nevertheless write you about several things. We did not find in yours nor Bro. Eby's letter, a word as an answer, when we should be allowed to embark for home, whence we would have to stay which we will if God will that we shall.

We shall soon move to Copenhagen for Mary's sake, and will likely make that our home as long as we shall stay in Denmark, if the Lord's will is as mine, which time will show.

One meeting-house will do well here in the north, if rightly located. I have transcribed yours and Bro. Eby's letter and sent them to the churches to act on when they feel like it. I will only stand in that matter as a helper, and, lest I shall be blameful and do harm.

The rest of the money I advise to put on interest until time shows, where another house is needed, unless you, by coming over, learn more about our affairs and help to decide.

If we shall be compelled to stay in Europe I would like to look around for a situation where we can be most useful, and where we can have it comfortable and take hold on a large scale on my best work in Summer time. It goes well with our trial and I like it well.

But we have one trouble always and that is, we must have hired help in the house; and we can never get a good girl, for we have our opposers all around, securing every orderly girl from going to work at such a place.

In Copenhagen I hope to be free from that trouble, as one neighbor generally does not know the other, and as people there only hire by the month while in other places it is by the half year or longer. Then too, may be, my wife will be restored to health. Sister Magnhild Saxild, has left for Huntington, Pa., but had no money to go further. We have not heard from her yet.

Bro. J. Madsen, in New Castle will be home in the Fall, to stay.

Several more speak of coming to the church here in town; the priest keeps quiet now,—he got enough of it. The Methodists built a meeting-house, but it is feared they killed the work by beggar money.

Bro. Eby, many thanks for your kind advice and fatherly care for us all. Hope, if we shall not come to America soon, that we may see you once more over here. We long to see Bro. Stein, but fear that he will pass by, as he is not here yet.

If we could succeed as far as to get entrance into Copenhagen to get a church there, (one of our speakers who has been there, says, it is just the place, where we can expect converts with intellectual power, to take our place in the church) then it would be wise to live in the one end of the meeting-house, and I will gladly do so.

But in this all I only propose and do not have any will of my own. I will be careful, slow and try to manage as it seems best, and as the Lord directs.

In regard to the money donated, I would say, that houses here are built in such a manner, that they, any time, may be sold profitably, if they are needed more in other places; and also that the churches here never get any more hold on the property than the money shall forever be used as a fund for such a purpose, and intended by the donor, and such churches shall have the right to use them where it is most profitable. I will look out, if God spare me, that this will be legally done. When Bro. Eshelman comes.

... and unable to go out, but the children yet remember

... was reading of a history they saw a picture of a man with a sword; they were passing

... and more

... ever last chance. Often it is said, but God's will be done. May we only succeed to gather around the eternal throne of the Lamb.

Let us ever work for the good of our brethren, for peace and good-will, and put away every selfish motive for that one cause. I feel much older, and as though I had only one thing to do for the church; this is my first and last wish. We need your prayers, dear brethren, and I shall wish your gift as. Oh, let us have a large share!

Help me to pray for those that the gifts send her, may do her good, and send your prayer for me, that I may be yet less a Christ done, my all Amen. Our united love to you all.

Yours as ever,
C. H. BEECHER.

Live for something, if you have to die for it

Bro. Enoch Ely started to Ashland, Ohio, Monday evening, Aug. 1st.

The Fall term of the College commences in three weeks from to-morrow.

It is reported that Bro. J. W. Beer will likely move into Fayette Co., Ohio.

We learn that Eld. Geo. Wolfe, of California, is recovering from his apoplectic stroke.

The address of S. H. Baker is changed from Rock Falls, Wis., to River Falls, same State.

Parents cannot teach their children plainness while bringing them up in the way of pride and folly.

The Brethren in the White Oak church, Pa., have rebuilt two of their meeting-houses this Summer.

Bro. A. Hutchison has been holding some meetings near Plattsburg, Mo. The attendance was good.

The Preacher reports that Bro. I. D. Parker has been suffering from something like erysipelas in the foot.

August 2nd, brother I. J. Rosenberger left his home for Ashland, Ohio. From there he goes to Berlin, Pa.

The Brethren's meeting-house in Duxton took fire some weeks ago and considerable damage was done to the building.

On the morning of the 23rd of July quite a shock of earthquake was felt in the eastern part of France and Switzerland.

The speech-making at the Annual Meeting was done by less than seventy-five persons whose names are given in the Report.

We had considerably warm weather last week. The thermometer near the center of the lake indicated 96°, to the sun it was 110°.

THIRTY-SIX persons have been baptized in the Plymouth church, Indiana, during the last nine months. So says brother John Kuisly.

Writes to the Practical Bro. Archy Van Dyke thinks there is too much meeting in connection with A. W. and not enough of solemnity.

Just as we go to press we learn that brother John Sward of Cherry Grove, Curral Co., Ill., hung himself on the morning of the 4th inst. Cause unknown.

ACCORDING to recent telegrams, presentations of the Jews have recommenced in the Russian province of Pskov, and seventeen villages have been destroyed.

From the Bible Banner we learn that our constituents of America held a Conference at Forvoston, Ill., last June and united their interests and adopted a Platform.

The end of some men's work shows that they have been trying to make their audacious presumed moral stand on its point or apex instead of the base, it has fallen upon its side without any slanting.

It is now generally believed that the President will recover.

An exchange says it is a notorious fact that one whisper in a church can attract more attention in about three minutes than the most talented minister can in half an hour.

The expenses of the American New Testament Committee from October, 1872, to March, 1881, amounted to over $32,000. This sum was met by voluntary contributions.

BRO. E. A. Orr, of Plattsburg, Mo., says his school is closed for the season and he is now whetting up for next Winter. He speaks very highly of the Mineral Springs near his place.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that as many as three-fourths of the 500 deaths in that city from the effect of excessive heat, were traceable to the intemperate use of intoxicating liquors.

Two hundred and forty-one thousand immigrants have been landed at New York during the past six months. This is the largest number on record for the same length of time.

TERIBLE destitution is reported to exist in northern China. Parents are selling their children for trifling amounts, to keep them from starving, and to provide a little food for themselves.

SOME of our religious exchanges are censuring the American Bible Society rather severely, claiming that the way it is conducted is a nuisance. Time will tell whether these reports are true.

CHILDREN need good reading matter as well as adults. For this season we prepared a lot of tracts expressly for the young. Price 3 cents each, 12 for 30 cents, 25 for 50 cents. For sale at this office.

ANOTHER meeting has been appointed at Solomon's Creek church, Ind., Sept. 22nd, commencing at 9 A. M., to consult further in regard to holding the Annual Meeting of 1882. Let there be a full representation.

AT THE Sept. 1st. the B. at W. and Macaroni one year will be $1.75. Read our extra notes in this issue and accept them before Sept. 1st, as after that date they will be withdrawn. No letter indolence can be offered.

THE dog-days are upon us, and there is reason for every one to be careful of diet and exposure. Cleanliness about our dwellings will go far towards keeping off the plagues which are so apt to come during the heated term.

THE Levy, of Plattsburg, Mo., published an encouraging article in regard to the closing exercises of Bro. E. A. Orr's school near that place. We are always pleased to see such favorable notices of our work done by Brethren.

THE Annual Meeting of the Indiana State Christian Association opposed to Secrecy will be held at New London, Howard Co., Ind., September 27, 28, 29, opening on the 27th at 7 P. M. Thomas Lowe, of Michigan, will work the degree.

The following from the pen of Bro. I. C. Mowbray is well said: "Speaking of preaching and not practicing reveals an incident that is said to have transpired recently as follows: Under whose preaching were you converted? The reply was, 'I was not converted under anybody's preaching but under aunt Mary's practicing.'"

MUCH of the German emigration is due to the desire of the men to escape military duty. According to official tables, no fewer than 11,454 young men liable to military duty left Germany in 1880, and it is probable that the number this year will reach 20,000.

THE governor of Kansas sends us a neatly printed pamphlet, giving much information in regard to the prohibition movement in that State. Persons interested in the temperance work will find in this pamphlet much that will prove both valuable and entertaining to them.

A FEW weeks ago, we stated that Eld. Rathbun was beaten by a mob in Mt. Airy, Iowa. The party who struck him, and dragged him into the street was recently acquitted by the Mayor of the city. The Mayor also belongs to a secret order. Comment is unnecessary in this case.

SEVENTEEN cases of lockjaw have been reported from Baltimore alone, resulting from wounds from the use of toy pistols on the Fourth of July, and it is supposed that the fatal cases have not all been reported. Knowing the evils resulting from their use it is strange that people will allow the sale of anything of the kind.

FOREIGN papers report that hoop-skirts are being brought forward again among fashionable women. Of course they'll be "good for the health" again, and every sort of plea will be made by the no-scripture-against-it class for the abominable fashion. It doesn't require much of a prophet to predict the amount of troubles that shall arise by the latest fashion from Paris.

WHEN the streets become dusty and the weather is hot, it is necessary to sprinkle water upon them to keep down the dust and cool the temperature. So in the church. When men permit their temper to rise and go about kicking up the dust and carrying discord among brethren, it becomes necessary to turn on the water of discipline and cool their hangings. This is a kind of sprinkling in which we believe.

ON the last page of this issue will be found an interesting description of a monster steamship plying between New York and Bremen, Germany; it belongs to an excellent line of steamers, one of which leaves New York each week. Brother L. A. Platte & Co., of this place, are agents for this line. Brother Platte will take pleasure in giving all desired information to travelers either in or from Europe. He can correspond with you in English, German, or French.

DURING the late war, at a time when the dark clouds were thick and heavy, a colored man approaching Gen. Grant, said: "How do you, General Grant," and reached out his hand, which the General shook cordially. "How are things going, general?" "Everything is going right, sir," said Gen. Grant. These assuring words passed around among the colored people and changed their gloom to hope. If the dependent Christian will always go to his Commander, he will be assured, "everything is going right."

D. L. MILLER and Melchor Newcomer were had at work last week, refitting the College building and making a large room for their commercial classes. The prospects for a large number of students are good, and undoubtedly the first term will open with a full attendance. There is not room for more, and those who contemplate attending Mt. Morris College the coming school year should apply now. Everything is being put in good order, and, as heretofore, the proprietors will strive to make the students' sojourn here both pleasant and profitable.

THE COMET.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

"On the other side,
Increased with indignation, Satan stood
Unterrified; and like a comet burned,
That fires the length of Opibolus huge
In the Arctic sky, and from his horrid hair Shakes pestilence and war."—Milton.

The stranger in the Northern sky,
Is drawing every curious eye;
And many gave with awful fear
That he might do some mischief here.

A great transparent orb is he,
A "wandering star," a mystery,
A foreign messenger of light,
A passing wonder of the night.

He travels through eternal space,
A stranger to the human race,
Prognosticating blood and fire,
Prevailing death and ruin dire.

Ah! well may regal orbs turn back
Affrighted at the monster's track,
The Acheron his distance hold,
The Scythian with far baner pale.

The Bear is greeting with her orb,
As if Hercules uplift his club,
The Gorgon monsters to defy
That come across the northern sky.

But still his fiery courses run,
Receding at the morning sun;
His chariot roils the stars between,
Through boundless space but dimly seen.

But when the sun leaves his domain,
As if a noble giant begins to reign,
His courses with Pegasus flight,
As if a comet the fiery light.

Away they go between the sphere,
Through space vacated million years,
With burnished wheels and blazing cars,
Like some fierce giant from afar.

Ethereal brightness fills the space
Through which he runs his rapid race;
His path rolls his path along;
The constellations catch the song.

The nations gaze, bewildered quite,
And wonder at his rapid flight;
The stars do homage as they pass,
The crystal orb, transparent glass.

The solar rays compose his race,
And nations trembling gaze with awe;
The Autocrat, the Russian Czar
May well prepare his hosts for war.

Or all the world may stand in awe,
Repenting o'er a broken law,
And bow in humble penitence
Before the coming pestilence.

We may not be able to see how "all things work together for our good." God does not require us to see it, but to believe. The mother sees for her child—God for her.

INFANT BAPTISM.

BY MRS. HARRIET ORR.

Respectfully dedicated to those preachers whom
I last heard speaking on "Infant Baptism."

Respected Sirs:—

I OFFER no other apology for writing this letter than hearing your sermons in defence of "Infant Baptism," and what Acts 18: 26 suggested to my mind; for, in my weakness and inability, I still feel a sacred duty to do my Divine Master's bidding by trying to show the way of the Lord more perfectly and help onward the glorious cause, by dropping a few Gospel seeds in good and honest ground, which I judge your hearts to be, that, perchance, they may take root and bring forth abundantly, for we are assured that the Word of the Lord shall not return unto him void, but shall accomplish that for which it was sent. I was, indeed, highly pleased with your candor, honesty, mildness, and somewhat of firmness, considering the weakness and vacillating foundation on which the whole fabric of infant baptism is built upon, and in all kindness I ask, What does it amount to in the end—this striving and struggling to uphold and substantiate a sinful dogma of the Dark Ages? To speak in the mildest terms possible, of this man-made institution, fraught with more mischief than we of the present day can conceive of, only as we look in the benighted past, we there learn of those who still cling to, and faithfully contended for the one baptism, how they had to seek shelter in dens and caves until the storm of ignorance, superstition, and bigotry, with all its darkness and blackness, had well-nigh spent its force.

But amidst the dense fog and smoke of the man of sin to darken the counsel of God—blessed be his holy name—the one baptism was not entirely lost sight of. And now that our minds are enlightened, and the thick veil of prejudice lifted, which was like the slime of a serpent in his trail, we can behold baptism in all its beauty as a divinely-appointed institution, symbolizing the death, burial, and resurrection of Jesus the Christ for our justification from sin, and signifying our birth to an immortal home. And, although it is worthy of our highest and deepest study to fully comprehend the "first principles of the oracles of God," whereby we enter into covenant relation with the Lord who bought us; still, in Hebrew 6: 1 we are admonished to leave the first principles of the doctrine of Christ and go on to perfection, in the same manner, no doubt, that we leave our A B C's, or alphabet, when thoroughly mastered, to perfect our education.

I have read and listened to quite a number of sermons on "Infant Baptism," but thus far I have been unable to find one point wherein they agreed, save in this respect, they do not pretend to give Scripture, neither chapter nor verse, for the practice of "Infant Baptism." But some have imagined they could trace through tradition, back to St. John, their pet institution. But they invariably fail to get St. John's sanction to this strong delusion. Therefore Paul must have referred to it when he said, "That the mystery of iniquity doth already work." Or, perhaps, St. John, when on the Isle of Patmos, gave a foreshadowing of it when speaking of the scarlet woman making all nations drunk with the wine of her wrath." For what, I ask in all sober solemnity, has so blinded, bewildered, and made drunk as it were the whole religious world like "infant baptism" has done, is doing now, and will continue to do, as long as we find persons unwilling to take the Bible for their guide and the Savior for their pattern in all things, but would prefer hunting through tradition for one gleam of hope to save their rotten structure. But they have equally failed. True, the devil has but few firebrands that have been better wielded and accomplished more toward causing schisms in the church, than "infant baptism." For "infant baptism" is, in truth, but a child of the devil, conceived in sin, brought forth in iniquity, cradled in ignorance, nurtured and fed by zeal without knowledge, carried in the arms of superstition, clothed with human traditions (which have made void the commandments of God), educated in the school of bigotry, and finally will graduate and go home to his parents—fidelity and Anti-christ—ready to be revealed at the last day. Then will the rejoice that ore of Satan's bulwarks and strong-holds is broken down.

But I must confess and do it cheerfully, that I am ever pleased with one part of each sermon I have ever heard or read. (But it does not prove that for which it is given to prove, but contrariwise.) You contend that infants were born into the Jewish Church, and were, therefore, members entitled to the sign and seal, which was circumcision. And as infants were in the Jewish Church, you contend that infants should be in the Christian church to-day. You are unquestionably right. And I emphatically respond, Amen—just what we are contending for precisely, and have been these eighteen hundred years and more, most strenuously and zealously believing it to be good, wholesome doctrine, and very full of comfort. Yes, indeed, infants have a right to be in the Christian church to-day. But they are re-born infants, born of water and of the Spirit. It is one of the Savior's commands, "Ye must be born again." And, as new born babes desire the sincere milk of the word—"babes in Christ Jesus"—and as infants in the Jewish Church had father and mother, so also in the church of Christ, generated of God and born of water. For unless we are born of God, we would be still, or dead born, if born of water alone. But when we are generated of God and born of water, we are then as infant newly born in the kingdom of our Lord and Savior, and as a child of God (like the Jewish infant) we are entitled to the sign and seal, which is the gift of the Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption, for the Spirit beareth witness with our spirits that we are the children of God. Please remember, dear friends, that our Savior was not acknowledged by God as his well-beloved Son until after his birth of water, when he was baptized of John in the Jordan, to fulfill all righteousness (as for the Savior had no sins to confess or wash away.)

But we have now the great and blinding mistake of advocates of "infant baptism" are making of this. You misplace baptism by making it the sign and seal, thereby robbing it of its legitimate work in the plan of salvation. I earnestly beg of you to desist, and leave it where our Lord has commanded it to be, a birth of water. These are his words respecting this divine institution, "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water," etc., etc. And when you acknowledge baptism in its proper place you will, methinks, at once grasp the beauty and grandeur of the second birth; and will also, with great sublimity and somewhat of awe, recognize the force of all those passages bearing on our new relationship, which we enter into at our baptism with him who hath washed us and redeemed us and made us white in the blood of the Lamb. Such, for instance, as "born of water and of the Spirit;" "buried with our Lord and Savior in baptism;" "planted together in the likeness of his death;" "obeyed from the heart that form (or mold) of doctrine;" "if ye be risen with Christ;" "raised to walk in newness of life;" "saved by water;" our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," and several other passages which utterly lose their force and become a mere jargon of words, if we accept of sprinkling on the forehead only for baptism, or put baptism for a sign and seal. But we have no notion, whatever, of losing our eyes to such plain and sublime teaching found in the blessed volume. No; but in the language found in Isa. 58: 1: "very abundant, and spare not," etc. Although you do ask us pleadingly to leave you alone, we cannot conscientiously do so. But for the love of the truth as it is in Jesus (in a religious and spiritual way of course), we will still continue to place a mustard plaster here, a blister there, give an emetic, bathe the extremities, wet the temples, rub the body, poultice, apply lotions, and, in fact, do all that Christian love impels us to do for our fellow travelers to the bar of God, to awaken them, if possible, from the deep lethargy which they have fallen into when "darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people." And if we fail, we can go home to glory with a conscience void of offense.—A. C. Review.

For the Brethren at Work.

TO THE YOUNG.

BY SIXTER WAMPLER.

YOU are just starting out in life. You want to live a Christian life; you want to go through the world respected and loved by all, and at last die the death of the righteous. But this is impossible; they that live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. If you follow Christ, some will likely point the finger of scorn at you. But you will generally be loved and trusted. But do not take heed to what men will say. One minister will tell you one thing, others will tell you something else. "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." Do not conclude that because some wise man (perhaps the minister) says "so and so," that it is the doctrine of Christ. God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise. Jesus says: "Search the Scriptures," etc. This, therefore, is a command, and if we do not obey it, we are "guilty of all." O let us read for ourselves, and not only the New Testament, for the Old is very interesting. When I read of Jonah, Daniel, the men cast into the fiery furnace, the story of Joseph, and many other passages as interesting, it makes me wonder why young people, and some old ones, like novels (things that are untrue) much better. The Bible is more interesting than any other book or paper ever printed, if we will only practice reading it. "But," says one, "it is not as interesting to me." That is because you do not read it enough. When you commence reading a novel the more you read the more you want to read. So it is with the Bible; the more we read it the greater will be our desire for studying it. How many of our young people who are able to read, do read almost every book but the Bible? How few have ever read it through? If we do not read it, is it our own fault if we do not do our duty, and our reward will be the reward of the transgressor. Let us take our Bible down from the shelf, brush the dust off of it, and peruse its pages.

For the Brethren at Work.

CLEAN AND UNCLEAN IN THE ARK.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Rudolph Behm Reigert, Esq., of West Hanover, Pa.:

"Come in thou blessed of the Lord, therefore standest thou without?" Gen 24: 31.

WHEREFORE? For many reasons, thou sayest. No reasons are potent against an absolute obligation. Does not the word "come," uttered by God himself, outweigh all hindrances whether in or out of the church? If there are ten thousand voices that endorse your alienation, there is one that vetoed them all, and that one represents Almighty power and infinite love. If the church is in anarchy, as you affirm, and progression is licentiousness, and black tongues have the last word, and black hearts the leading impulse, and conference is idle talk, and everything is sweeping into the vortex of agnosticism, what then? Is truth less truth than it was before? Is the personality of God and your responsibility to Him altered by collision of sentiment, and the babel of tongues, and the exaltation of self above the cross, and the twaddle of ignorance, and the domination of pride and passion? Hast thou forgotten that we are individuals as well as a Brotherhood? "We are our brother's keeper," and yet "every man must give account of himself to God." We are not obliged to follow any man's dictum, nor the dictum of a million; God is one, and in His image are we made—units. The church has a right to exist, and speak and act authoritatively, only because it is Christ's church. Apart from Him, she is no more than any other religious corporation that knows not God. Come in, and bring this truth with you, and you will always be even with the highest requirement of the church, or in advance of it. Christ must be the only object of vision and the only goal of effort. Much evil, is in our midst because much ignorance and obstinacy and self-worship. Those who are accounted the most ignorant are often the wisest. Those who think they know most are often the most glaringly stupid and inconsistent. Reason-wise, logic wise, college wise, is not necessarily God-wise and cross wise. Should this keep you out? Your heart is in, and your body may as well be here too.

You have often given me excellent counsel, now please accept some in return. Is it wise to drown in the wrathful surges of disobedience because misanthropes and creed-mongers and bombasta and mammon-worshippers and self-idolaters and blackguards and loggerheads are in the life-boat? The tiger and wolf and snake and hawk are in the ark as well as the lamb and the dove and man. Wait not for a clean church. It never existed on earth, and never will. People forget their paddles now a days, but God does not. Deut. 23: 13, 14. Come in, and be a well-spring of life in what you deem a knoral Sabara. Your special grievance is that we allow too loose a rein to the despisers of authority, erige too much to living dictionaries and encyclopedias, suffer the truth to be openly trampled and the cross ridiculed, and supporters maligned, and the flesh-element and money-greed to run rampant. Grave charge, but not without a modicum of truth. But it was no less true in apostolic times than now. Demas never dies so long as the church is militant. Philpp. 3: 18, 19, is for all time. We have now no inspired detector, no God eyed Peter to penetrate the sorcerer's heart, and intuitively determine the spiritual status. Come in, and with mind and heart and life help mould and leaven the whole lump into the purity and grandeur and power of the Divine incarnation. Would not this be better, wiser, nobler, more sublimely self-consistent than to stand outside and point the finger of reproof and revulsion at our incongruities, back bitings and animosities and scurrilities? The life-boat may hold monsters—saapping turtles and hyenas and mad dogs and alligators and seven headed, ten-borned Abaddons—it is a matter of life and death and you must associate with what it carries, or ultimately with devils. Come in, and do great good, as you are capable of doing, and keep not your hands in your pocket because you are sure we entertain liars and cheats and curmudgeons and blasphemers. You have an imperial, native intellect, wide reading; extensive travel and acute observation, and fine acquirments; why not consecrate all your capabilities to Christ, and make the church and yourself richer by exemplifying the life you know so well to appreciate, and the lack of which in our members you so intensely detest? In communia with us you would come in contact with the leftiest, purest souls, and with the meanest and most groveling. You are not required to kiss the Pope's toe, or to worship the church, or to exalt human authority over Divine; but simply to be a Christian. Some cry Paul, some Cephas, and some Apollus; but they are not the church, and the church is not Christ, but Christ's. Simply Christian; yea, but what high, deep, broad, significance in this. The conservatism and progress of God in the finite is meant by it. Hypothetically and in endeavor I am a radical progressive, but it is after Paul's type. 2 Cor. 3: 18. Eph. 4: 13. Does this mean the substitution of hats and ribbons and flounces and other carnal etcetera for the simplicity which the cross authorizes? What does the cross authorize? A form that crucifies the flesh, and is a standing symbol of the death of sin. No person is baptized into forms and externalizations not inherent in the life of God in the flesh. Here the authority of the church begins and ends. Jesus was so far from the world in life, because so far removed in nature. As He is, so are His. If we are all content with this, there would be no collision, even where there is difference; because with such a soul-basis, differences would be more the different stages and aspects of truth, than the opposite of truth and error. Good men differ, and the wider their knowledge from different standpoints, the wider the chasm between them; but God who knows all truth fills the mystic gaps no less than the mountain tops. The Tree of Life spreads the branches over the Eternities, and eldest angel has not counted all its twigs and leaves, and tasted all its fruit. But flesh is flesh, and has no right in the sacred enclosure, save more and more to die! and not to harangue and swagger and rule.

Neither authority nor license may transcend the essential nature and expression of Emmanuel. He was very God controlling the human, and living out Divine beauty in a human mould. An objective Emmanuel saves only the objective. In other words, Christ is His own savior, living the Divine ideal of the human, and becomes the savior of others in whom he relives his earth-life through the Holy Ghost. He is not simply a Model looming through eighteen centuries, but a molding power of to day in individual hearts. Not at random, or in a loose, irregular way; not as chipping and smoothing and modifying the flesh-life by the force of will, but as the free immanence and outgrowth of Divinity. The laws of God are rigid. He is the Word. His tongue is not forked. When the father of lies speaks falsely he does so naturally. Yea and Amen is the Alpha and Omega of God. So do is as immutable as "I say unto you." "I am" is the ground of "this do ye." So far the church is Omnipotent—God's vicegerent. Flinching here, she is reorent. Exacting more, she is popish. To disobey the church so long as she is in the principle of the inflexible Word, is to die, to be damned. To restrict the principle to the letter, and allow of no new application as exigencies may require, is to antagonize the very purpose of God in putting the eternal, all-expansive life of his own being into humanity. To go beyond the church, not aside or apart from, yet abiding in this principle, is not sin per se, though it cause friction and convulsion. This is the "sword" and "division" Christ brought on the earth. But the temper and general life will reveal the scabbard whence the sword is drawn. Truth is in the long run self-justifying. Colleges would not have been tolerated fifty years ago, while log school houses were esteemed a blessing. A college is only a primitive school-but developed. For once I am indebted to Darwin's nomenclature. There is no principle in the triennial oak that was not in the acorn. Motives are something different. Here colleges may be curses, which God forbid. I do not believe in stagnation, in the effervescence and froth and miasm that it breeds. Growth is the word, and this is synonymous with progress, not of principles, but their apprehension and application. Principles never grow. They are eternal and immutable as God. But we grow, or ought. We can discover but not create them. The laws are all ready for us, physical and spiritual, and our religion and glory and joy is their exemplification. Is not this Gospel enough for any body? Whoever preaches any other, says Paul, be he man or angel, "let him be accursed." Here is the substance and sum of it all: "I am the way, the truth, the life;" "follow me;" "looking unto Jesus." Has the flesh a voice in this "high calling"? Not a breath. The carnally-minded speak and act carnally, but neither the Gospel nor the church is responsible. Here again we are individuals. As such you must come in, live and die, notwithstanding the larger life of the body in which you would be a member. "Why standest thou without?" Is the corruption in the church an adequate reason? Your own good ~~ness~~ must give the negative. ~~Bar~~ ~~ism~~ ~~is~~ ~~for~~ ~~ty~~ will go through a corpse from one living being to another. No matter whether you have an "Isariot on your right and a double dyed Isariot on the left at the eucharist, if you are in Christ the circle from Father to Son and Spirit and church and back again to the Father, will not be broken. There is much harm done by individuals which is a corporate detriment and degradation, and yet law and judgment go by individuals. We live not the less by ourselves because we live in the mass. Our individuality is to be all the more distinct and vigorous because we are in a body where we get the aggregate life of all. Let each be himself with the utmost radicalism, while self, in its deepest self is "hid with Christ in God," and the church will be strong and unified in proportion to our individuality.

God alone is the Lord of the conscience, and the church has no other Head but Jesus Christ; and He controls the little toe and little finger, and "the members which seem less honorable," equally with the entire body. We are aggregated, not they, we may absorb and annihilate each other, or tyrannize and stunt and abnormalize each other's individuality, but that we may help each other to a higher and more rounded individuality in Christ Jesus. We need both centripetal and centrifugal forces to maintain our orbit. In Christ they are one, and no less one in us through him.

"Come in, thou blessed of the Lord, wherefore standest thou without?" Life is here, eternal life, even if faggi, and claws and horns and hoofs, and grotesque moral centaurs be met with from the liquid crystal gate to the dark back portal. Come in, eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of Man, and live forever, with God and as God.

FLEEING FROM GOD.

IT constantly occurs that after a crime has been committed, it will be ascertained by the police that the criminal has taken passage in some steamer for Europe. As the vessel swings clear of the wharf, and then loses sight of the land, and the last pilot leaves it in the outer bay, he begins to breathe more freely and ventures out of his state-room on the deck. Soon he mingles freely with the ship's company, and becomes as light hearted as any, and even himself quite forgets the haunting shadow of his sin. But meanwhile under the sea, underneath perhaps his very feet as he dances on the deck, flashes unknown to him a swift cable message, announcing to the police at the other end of his route who he is and what he has been doing. And when the steamer comes to anchor on the other side, an officer steps on board, presents a warrant of arrest, and carries him off to prison.

May it not be that some of us, who are voyaging calmly and even gaily across the sparkling waters of life, are forgetful of the fact that sins may go before to judgment? And shall we continue to ignore our criminality before God, till we reach the other shore and find that we have only taken a circuitous route to our prison-house?—Sel.

I AIN'T DOING NOTHING.

THERE was a boy in school once who was very lazy. He would sit on his seat all day doing nothing. He never made any noise or disturbed any one. He never whispered or got into any mischief. The master never caught him at tricks.

One day, as he sat still and quiet, the master came along by him and struck him a smart blow with a ferule. The boy jumped at the unexpected blow and cried out:

"I ain't doing nothing!"

"That's just it," said the master; "I want you to do something."

So with some people. They think, like this boy, that innocence consists in doing nothing. Not so. We must do something. We must pray to Jesus, and speak for Jesus, and do all we can to show our love for Jesus. Some people think if they do nothing wicked they are all right. Not so. We must not only "cease to do evil," but "learn to do well." And we should do all we can.

Are you doing all you can? Can't you find something more to do? Don't let us think we are good because we "ain't doing nothing."

MEN are like an old fashioned country wagon. When loaded, everything works well and smoothly; with nothing in it, it rattles so it can be heard for miles.

LIBRARIES.

BY M. F. LIGHTY.

LIBRARY, is the name for collection of books designed for use and preservation; and also the name for the repository of such a collection.

Libraries are probably nearly coeval with the art of writing. The oldest of which we have any record is that of the Ramessesum, a temple founded in the ancient city of Thebes, in Upper Egypt, on the Nile. Another great one was in the same country in the old city of Memphis, then the capital of Egypt. The most famous of all ancient libraries was that founded early in the third century B. C., by the Ptolemies in the city of Alexandria, also in a city in Upper Egypt. This library had at one time a collection of about 700,000 volumes, collected by one Demetrius, from all nations, Jewish, Chaldee, Persian, Ethiopian, Egyptian, Greek, Roman &c. This was probably the largest library prior to the invention of printing.

The Hebrews preserved their sacred writings in the temples. The first library established in Greece was at Athens, either by one Pisistratus, or by Aristotle. Much might here be said about ancient libraries, but I must forbear going into details; however, in the western part of Europe, after the downfall of the Roman empire, learning was confined to the monasteries, and almost all libraries, up to 14th century, belonged to ecclesiastical institutions. They were generally small, comprising only the wreck of the collections dispersed by the barbarians.

Among the cultivation of learning in the Dark Ages were the Benedictines, an order of Monks in the Roman Catholic church, who during the Middle Ages were the great preservers of ancient learning; and for centuries they were the principal teachers of youth in all branches; in their colleges and schools; and to their careful reproduction of manuscripts the world is indebted, chiefly for the preservation of the classics. With the revival of learning began a new era in the history of libraries. The fall of Constantinople sent numbers of learned men into the West, who brought with them many valuable manuscripts. A zeal for the collection and preservation of books arose. Scholars traversed Europe and parts of Asia and Africa in search of literary treasures, and in a few years most of the classic authors now known were to be found in the great cities of Italy, Germany and France.

The largest libraries in the world are the National of Paris, containing over two million volumes; the British Museum of London and the Imperial of St. Petersburg, each containing over one million of books and manuscripts; while hundreds more throughout the old world contain from fifty to one hundred thousand volumes and some, not a few, contain as high as nine hundred thousand. Asia has many cities with fine large libraries, and so, also, has Africa.

The libraries of the United States, public and private, numbered in 1870, nearly one hundred fifty thousand, containing from one thousand, to as high as two hundred and sixty thousand volumes.

The largest libraries of the U. S., are,—two in Boston, the Public, containing two hundred thousand volumes, and the Athenaeum, which contains over one hundred thousand. The Harvard University of Cambridge, Mass., has over one hundred thousand volumes; so, also have the Astor, and the Mercantile of New York, and the Library Company, and the Mercantile of Philadelphia. The great library of Congress in Washington has likely by this time, over seven hundred thousand volumes. There are many libraries in the United States that contain from one to twenty-five thousand volumes.

Our own library, here in Mt. Morris College, numbers over twenty-eight thousand volumes, including pamphlets.

Suppose one should read one volume a week, on an average, this would take 28,000 weeks, reduced to years we find that one would have to get nearly 600 years old to read this library through satisfactorily. I presume if all the books in the world were built into a solid fence wall, a pretty large field could be inclosed.

I had to think quite often of Solomon's words since I have commenced cataloguing the Cassel Library, that "of making many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness to the flesh." But this is an age of learning and rehashing of old literature. Books are made faster and more abundantly every year. Nearly everybody of a literary turn is diving into the business of book-making, and nearly everybody can get possession of a library now-a-days.

The question might be asked, what are all writing about? I presume I am safe in saying, that many write nonsense, many write speculative theories which is nonsense also. It is amusing to see how many have written upon the same subject; but there is one subject which has been many a writer's theme, and which can never be exhausted; namely, "Jesus the Son of God." Oh, how many books have been written on the character and life of Christ, and his wonderful works! and still the half was never told. That beloved disciple, John, tells us that of as many other things which Jesus did, if every one should be written, he supposes that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written.

Kind friends, I have in my weakness tried to give you a little history of libraries, and in conclusion I will say to all those having an interest in the "Cassel Library," that we expect to have a catalogue ready by the first of the coming September.

Mt. Morris College, Ill.

HIS ONLY SON.

BY J. MADSEN.

HE that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all; how shall he not with him also freely give us all things. (Rom. 8: 32) Who can tell the abundance of love that is hid in these words, "He that spared not his own Son."

Fathers and mothers who dearly love their children, and with a heart almost broken, part with the little ones, when God takes them away to give them a place among those little lambs who are already surrounding his glorious seat in heaven, would not like to give one of them to a cruel people to be persecuted, slain, and hanged on a tree with nails driven through its hands and feet; or, I believe you would sooner lose all your earthly riches; But "God spared not his own Son," "He delivered him up for us all." Was it because he did not love him? No, twice he spoke from heaven, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." He could not always look down upon him and bear the sight of his Son left alone with his bitter temptations and sufferings, but sent his angels to serve and comfort him, and let cheering words fall from his lips, that they might mitigate his sorrows. This he did of pure love to him.

But "for us all" he delivered him up, because it was the only means that could save a lost world. Oh, what a price! He had rather give away the earth with all her possessions if this had been sufficient to make atonement.

You older brethren and sisters, who have trained up children, with the tenderness of a parent's heart, you can praise and glorify the Lord beyond measure, as you really are able to see much more than you ever can do, when he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. If he could do so much, "how shall he not with him also freely give us all things?" And my dear young brethren and sisters, how I would like to shake your hands by and by. What will you give for "all things?" will you take it freely?

Then let us continually march onward, fully trusting in the Lord, and at last we shall with Jesus inherit all things.

I can muse on God's wondrous love with tears rolling down my cheeks, how he could deliver up his own for me, an unworthy creature! but, praise God, it is true, he did so!

Blessed Jesus, loving Saviour,
Thou wilt guide us safely home.

GOD'S TENDERNESS.

NOTHING can exceed the tenderness of God in his treatment of sinners. No desire can be more earnest than His for their salvation. No broken-hearted father ever yearned so strongly for the return of his son. No mother's heart ever bled so profusely over her wayward boy. The favorite attitude of God toward the sinner is one of invitation and inexpressible tenderness. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come to the water; he that hath no money come buy and eat; come buy wine and milk without money and without price."

CHRISTIANS need not quarrel with their fellow-men, the world is wide enough; if they persecute us in one city let us go to another. Let us bear with them as long as possible and then leave them. It is only in this world they can give us trouble.—J. Madsen.

CHRISTIANITY does not consist in a proud priesthood, a costly church, an imposing ritual, a fashionable throng of assenting organs, loud response and reiterated expressions of praise to Christ, but in true love.

ALL IN VAIN.

WHAT weight has a mother's precept when weighed against a father's example?

A mother may tell her son the effects of bad habits—such as going to the village store and loafing around, or spending their evenings about the bar room and at the card tables. But what effect will it have if father does such things? Surely the son is apt to follow father's example.

The mother says, "My son do not smoke or chew tobacco; for it is a bad habit. It will defile your person, and make you look filthy, and more than that, it is a sin to spend your money for that vile weed, and the pleasure it affords is trifling compared to the evil it works."

But the son replies, "Father smokes and chews, and I will do what father does."

Now the question comes up, what weight has a mother's word when denied by a father's example?

We answer no weight at all. A mother may do all in her power, to form habits in her sons, which will prove a blessing to them for all time and eternity; but unless the father sanctions her teaching and training by his own example, her labor will be all in vain.

Fathers, what an account you must give in the great day of God's wrath! Surely you cannot escape that awful sentence, "Depart from me."

A LECTURE FOR OUR GRANDPARENTS.

SOME one has truly said, that "To ridicule old age, is like throwing cold water in the morning into the bed in which we must sleep at night." Old people have a right to demand that they be treated with respect; but are they out under great obligations to be pleasant, agreeable, and as far as possible—cheerful? Falling in this, it is my wonder that neglect and disrespect sometimes follow? Old people should be held in reverence by the young, especially if there is anything worthy of reverence about them; but each man and woman should see to it, that as they grow old in years they do not grow out of all sympathy for their children and grandchildren. No person, because he is old, has a right to be selfish, sullen, and morose.

Said a little boy, "Ma, will grandpa go to heaven?"

"Yes, my son, I hope so; but why do you ask that question?"

"Because, ma, if grandpa goes to heaven, I don't want to go there. He would say, 'When! when! what is this boy bothering around here for?'"

A short time since I read a little old man old, white old love give with

so many virtues that not to love him—or any other person such as I described—would be an impossibility. I thought that to love such a person would be more of a pleasure than a duty. Every neighborhood has its old person who, at though bowed down with weight of years, still has a warm heart for the young and a kind word for the children.

No need of the word "duty," to cause such people to be sincerely loved and respected. Again, every neighborhood has its representative, from whom the children instinctively spring away, as from a plague, persons that little girls are afraid to meet, whom the boys give a wide berth to, and whom no person desires to encounter. Even a long newspaper article, in which all the chances are rung upon the word "duty," will fail to cause such unsympathetic people to be respected, unless less loved.

Let us all, therefore, resolve that whatever be the number of our years, we will be true to the right, kind and sympathetic to all, especially towards the weak ones of earth, whether they be in their first or second childhood. Doing this faithfully, we shall be loved and respected by all along the pathway of life. And when the end comes, may it be said of us, as Sir Walter Scott in his vivid description of "King Rene:"

"A mythical man he was; the snows of age
Fell, but they did not chill him. Gayety,
Even in lips closing, touched his teeming brain
With such wild visions as the setting sun
Raises in front of some hoar glaucian,
Painting the bleak ice with a thousand hues."

THINGS MONEY CAN'T DO.

SOME boys and girls have an idea that money can do almost anything, but this is a mistake. Money, it is true, can do a great deal, but it cannot do everything. I could name you a thousand things it cannot buy. It was meant for good, and it is a good thing to have, but all this depends on how it is used. If used wrongly, it is an injury, rather than a benefit. Beyond all doubt, however, there are many things better than it is, and which it cannot purchase, no matter how much we may have of it.

If a man has not a good education, all his money cannot buy it for him. He can scarcely ever make up for his early waste of opportunities. He may say, as I have heard of one saying: "I would give all I have if I had only had a good education and a well trained mind;" but he will say it in vain. His money alone can't obtain it.

Neither will wealth itself give a man or a woman, good manners. Nothing next to good health, is of more importance than easy, graceful, self-possessed manners. But they can't be had for mere money.

A man who is what is called "boddy," who has not taste and correct manners, will never buy them—though he would, no doubt, like it. They are not to be had in the market. They are nowhere for sale. You might as well try to buy sky, or cloud, or sea-breeze.

Money can't purchase a good conscience. If a poor man, or a boy, or a girl—anyone has a clear conscience that gives off a tone like a sound bell when touched by the hammer, then be sure he is vastly richer than the millionaire who does not possess such a conscience. Good principles are better than gold. All the gold of Golconda couldn't buy them for a man who hasn't them already. (N)

LOVE OF DRESS.

A GIRL who seeks employment in the city to gratify her vanity, whose nature is not to help a widowed mother, or to support herself, but to gain wages in order to please her love of dress, is in high danger. No matter where she goes, or at what she is employed, she is open to temptation. She desires to dress, and she covets an easy service and high wages. Her vanity and indolence will increase with indulgence; then will follow the fall that adds another illustration to the many which show that the pride of the soul and the lust of the eye, are most unprofitably gratified by ways, and end whereof is death.

Headstrong and vain girls, are the last who should venture among the temptations of the city; but those are the last to heed warning to stay away.

There is one lesson to be learned, and that is the redemptive virtue of self-restraint and self-denial.

Religious principle is a shield, moral training is a defense; knowledge of the rock ahead, may keep them in the right channel; but in this, as in all life's virtues, the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom. (N)

THE CONTENTED HERD BOY.

IN a flowery dell a herd boy kept his sheep; and because his heart was joyous he sang so loudly that the surrounding hills echoed back his song. One morning the king, who was out on a hunting expedition, spoke to him and said: "Why are you so happy, dear little one?"

"Why shall I not be?" he answered: "our king is no richer than I."

"Indeed!" said the king, "tell me your great possessions."

The lad answered: "The sun in the bright blue sky shines as brightly upon me as the king. The flowers on the mountain and the grass in the valley grow and bloom to gladden my sight as well as his. I would not take a hundred thousand thalers for my hands; my eyes are of more value than all the precious stones in the world; I have food and clothing too. Am I not therefore as rich as the king?"

"You are right," said the king, with a laugh, "but your greatest treasure is a contented heart; keep it so and you will always be happy." (N)

"I WISH I could join the Band of Hope," said a little boy about six years old, who stood shivering in the doorway of a saloon by his mother's side. "You are not old enough," replied his mother: "you can't understand it." "I guess I'm old enough to know better than to drink whisky," was the reply.

Wrote thy words in a balance, and make a door and a bar for thy mouth.

DR. Cummings of London, the eminent preacher and writer on the prophecies, died July 6. He was a firm believer in the nearness of Christ's coming.

PROF. R. SPERT of Hustonville, Ky., reviewed the "Problem of Human Life" in the Apostolic Times, and A. Willford Hall replies in four numbers of the same paper. His demonstrations are overwhelming, and he handles the wave theory of sound with his usual ability. The battle has fairly opened, and the Microcosm will be the field of contest. That we are in an era similar to that in which Galileo lived is pretty evident. The Ptolemaic system of astronomy was "endorsed" by all the scholars, and it seemed like a madness to attack the "old system," but Galileo ventured, and of course aroused long and bitter opposition. Nevertheless the old was finally admitted as erroneous, and to-day the new or Copernican system is universally believed. And so it will be upon this Sound question. The "old" is found to be erroneous, and while the new theory is crude and needs further demonstration to make it equally acceptable, it will prevail and the opponents will at last find themselves in the same condition that Galileo's opponents found themselves. If you would keep informed on this interesting question, you should send for the Microcosm.

THE ANNUAL MEETING REPORT.

THINKING that we might be profited by seeing the amount of speaking done by each one at the Annual Meeting, contrasted, we had the lines and speeches in the Report counted and now place the result before our readers. The names are given as found in the Report. It may contain a few slight errors, but not enough to affect it materially. As most of the remarks made by the Moderator pertained to the government of the meeting it was thought best to omit his speeches altogether. A number of explanations lawfully belonging to clerks, and made by them, were also omitted.

Speaking on the dress question, page 20 of the late Annual Meeting report, the reporter has me to say something that I neither believe nor advocate. It is this:

"I am not in favor of making these auxiliaries a test of fellowship at present, I am in favor of gradually working to that point, and I believe it will be reached eventually."

Instead of a "test of fellowship" it should have been a test of official position. My indistinct articulation doubtless caused the reporter to miss the exact idea that I aimed to present. I favor a uniform cut of clothes as an aid in carrying out the gospel principles of plainness, but never was in favor of making that cut a test of fellowship; however, I am in favor of making the wearing of gold, jewelry, costly array, fine apparel and fashionable decorating a test of fellowship in all the churches. I further believe, that where uniformity in dress is practiced it is not so difficult to keep the members plain in their manner of dressing, hence I regard uniformity an important aid in carrying out the principles of plainness, and as such, and such only, do I teach and advocate it. I am also of the impression that this is the way our ancient Brethren looked at the matter. And certainly there can be no reasonable objection urged against it. J. H. M.

CIRCUS SHOWS.

OUR people have always discouraged circus shows on the ground of their evil tendency. One of our exchanges says when Forepaugh's circus arrived in Milwaukee, the managers were placed under arrest by the society for the prevention of Cruelty to Children, for allowing a tight rope walker to take her little child with her in the dizzy and perilous performance as a part of the attraction. The society was sustained and the little one separated from the unnatural mother during her ascent. The expenses of these circuses to the communities through which they travel, is well shown by a New Jersey paper, which estimates that it cost Patterson in that State $50,000 to see a circus, or $1.00 each for the native population. The loss to the working class for tickets and lost wages was $25,000, and to the rolling mill, silk mill, locomotive shops and other factories, $15,000. A little spread of such arguments before the public authorities, would soon lead them to forbid the stretching of the circus tent within the limits of many towns.

ON PIKE'S PEAK.

OUR DIARY.

JULY 15th. The day opened without a visible cloud in the beautiful blue heavens, and we congratulated ourselves upon having a fine day for our climbing among the mountains. Hastily arranging our lunch for dinner and extra wrappings for the change in temperature, we rapped in readiness to our guide, and scenery would in a measure relieve us of our fears along the precipitous pathway, and this assurance was verified before we had gone three miles.

One mile of a ride over a fine road brought us to Iron Ute Spring, over which a neat Summer house has been erected and here the owner dishes up the cooling waters to the satisfaction of the thirsty. We halt for a refreshing drink, then move along, soon reaching the Little Chief Spring, where we fall into single file and enter the trail or narrow pathway. We ride only about a quarter of a mile when the shrill whistle of our guide brought the toll gatherer from his hiding place among the rocks. From each of us he collects a dollar, and then we are ready to go on. We are now in the following order: Geo. Arnold, the guide, Lizzie Miller, D. L. Miller, the writer, and A. P. Baldwin of Watertown, Conn.

The trail is just wide enough for a horse to walk in, and was constructed at a cost of $1200. It is quite a source of revenue to its owner; he realizes about $3000 per year from it. But we are climbing up, up, upward until Manitou seems thousands of feet below us; the canyon presents a weird-like appearance, inviting us on and on as if to enter its very jaws there to ponder and meditate amidst the pine crags and huge boulders enwrapped in grandeur. Before us on a lofty peak away up in the sky, side by side stand huge rocks, Gog and Magog, as if they were keeping vigils over the boulders and waters and pines away down beneath them. But on and on we go, climbing slowly, but surely, now passing between two huge rocks which seem to have split asunder just to let us pass, then carefully picking our way around a monster boulder while far beneath were the waters of Ruxton Creek, rushing and roaring as if impelled by some fiery hand, now disappearing under the great boulders, then emerging far down to pass through the same gyrations and then swiftly move down until they reach some quiet unassuming farmer's plantation to water his crops and make his heart leap with joy at the glorious prospects of a beautiful harvest.

But where are we? Our faithful animals have been careful. Along the dizzy heights, among the green pines and hemlocks, across the rustic bridges, around and under the projecting crags they have carried us without making a misstep and apparently without a murmur. But where are we? "Look yonder," says the guide, "that is Bridal Veil Falls." Indeed our ears had caught the roar of the waters before he spoke, but we knew not from whence the sound proceeded, until we beheld the sheet of water rushing swiftly down the smooth surface of a rock which lay at an angle of about forty-five degrees. It was several hundred feet below us, and by peering through the pines at certain points, we saw a view of the Falls. We have ascended only two miles. The scenery becomes ever more and more higher and higher. Bald and looking down upon its smaller neighbors with dignity and reverence. Here and there along our pathway issue from the rocks the tiny rills whose waters steal gently down the slopes and mingle with the mad torrent below. Delicious and cool is the water of these peary rills among the pines.

But we have reached Little Minnehaha Falls, where the waters roll down over a precipice for about thirty feet, stand still for a moment as if to gather strength for another plunge, and then rush on as madly as before. Hidden Falls next appears to our view. Here the stream after having been shut from view by the rocks above, emerges from its pent-up prison and leaps over the rocks, presenting a spectacle grand and impressive. To our left away up on the very summit of a peak stand two massive rocks much in appearance like Gog and Magog, but upon inquiry our guide informs us they are nameless. We christen them Dan and Matt, then turn our eyes to take in new wonders.

We now pass a lonely cabin in a gulch, where refreshments are sold, but the pure water of the mountain rills lures us past the vendor of victuals and drink, and we continue our upward and onward course. Aspen Peak, a beautiful plateau, almost enclosed by majestic mountains, is reached and through it by the side of the now gentle Ruxton we urge on our well-trimmed animals, occasionally one of the party dismounts to pluck a beautiful mountain flower or gather a bunch of strawberries. Finally we reach the half way point where we dismount, turn our horses loose to graze on the green grass, while we seek the shade of a pine to rest ourselves a moment, for though we are at an altitude of about 10,000 feet, the sun pours its rays down between the mountain so strongly that we feel the need of shelter. A spring of cool, clear water near by invites us to taste of its sweetness.

"All mount," says the guide. We obey, and are off, up through the green and dead pines, over rocks and sand and stumps for more than three miles and then we reach the timber line—the point above which no timber grows, where rocks and sand meet our gaze above and around us. We halt and take a glance back over the mighty basin below—the expanse over which we have come, and behold the tall pines, the great rocks, the lake, the mountains in the distance, and the vale between. Now we are moving on ward and upward again over the bare rocks. The trail is still narrow, and so the horses pick their way over the stones that have been thrown into the crevices, a low rumbling sound comes up from below, indicating that the rocks have been thrown together promiscuously and that the space between is reverberating the clanging and clanking of the horses' hoofs. On and up around the Peak we move in single file for three miles more, and then we reach the top which contains about forty acres of surface—all rock, however, over which we pick our way with care, lest we fall and bruise the flesh. It is now 12:30 P. M., and before we take a view of the wide expanse before us, we enter the Signal Officer's room, but, ask for coffee, which he readily supplies for twenty-five cents per cup, unfold our lunch, eat ourselves around the table and with a relish eat our dinner. The coffee was timely; for we already felt our heads reel on account of the exceedingly rare air; but dinner over and the dizziness vanished, our strength revived, we sail forth to behold the wonders all around. Pen moves slowly and tongue is dumb amidst the enchanting and magnificent views from this lofty height—14,147 feet above the sea. Here we are nearly three miles up in the air, on solid terra-firma, while below us thousands of feet lay, pigmy like, the smaller peaks, the valleys, towns, creeks, the great plains and hills in the distance.

First we turn to read the super-scription neatly printed on a board and set up at the edge of a pile of stones almost in the center of the summit. It reads as follows:
"Erected by Sergt. John and Sarah O'Keefe in memory of their infant daughter who was destroyed by mountain rats at the U. S. Signal Station on the Summit of Pike's Peak, May 25, 1876."

About the time your detestation of rats in general, and mountain rats in particular, arises, just as your sympathies for the darling infant of Sarah O'Keefe is awakened, you ascertain that the "lovely thing" here entombed is Mr O'Keefe's favorite donkey! Sympathy immediately changes into disgust and you wonder what great purpose is served by the government's servants deceiving tourists in that manner. We dare not believe that the donkey was related to Sergt. O'Keefe though he announces it as his daughter. Poor Balaam!

A few minutes spent in writing cards to friends, and noting data for this article, and then we arise from our stone writing desk to survey more minutely the world around and beneath us.

Looking westward we see the Sangra de Cristo (Sacred Mountains of Christ) and Saguache (Siwache) ranges extending north and south as far as the eye can reach. These snow-capped peaks one hundred miles distant present a grand back ground to the lovely scenery between us and them. A mighty consciousness of vast and measureless power, before which your mind recoils, grows upon you constantly as you look down upon the smaller mountains, and with the aid of your field glass discover the highways, the peaks, the valleys, the canyons that seem to wind in and about the hills. Having seen the cities, the manufactures, the railroads, the ships, the great works of man and then these of God, your pride of human power becomes dwarfed, and a feeling of insignificance comes creeping over you until you unconsciously exclaim, "Great and mighty are the works of God before which the works of man sink into mere atoms." But we behold the enchanting view westward, and while we are by no means weary but could gaze upon the grand panorama for hours, time informs us

Will some one explain Genesis 4:15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold. And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Does Gen. 4 infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living. If so, who was his wife? MARY C. NEWMAN.

Will some one please explain the fifth verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were these "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CROOK.

What are the seven spirits of God mentioned in Revelations? C. D. H.

WOMEN SPEAKING, ETC.

Will some one please explain 1. Cor. 14: 34, 35? Why are women to keep silence in the church?—Shall they not sing or pray or what shall they do? A BROTHER.

THE apostle doubtless meant that, as a rule, they should be silent, and not claim to participate in the active public business of the church, as teachers, but that as a class they should occupy a more retired place.

This, as a rule, is eminently proper, and is, in the main still observed in religious assemblies. Were no such a rule in the church, there would be disorder, more or less. Women might claim full equality in discharging the public affairs of the church. There might be as many women preachers as men preachers.—There might be as many women missionaries as men missionaries. Naturally the sphere of women in the more retired one of the house and family; while to man belongs the more stern, public duties of life. The apostle wants the same principle to obtain in the church.

He, however, does not mean, that women shall, in no case, exercise in religious services. They have a full right to sing publicly in the church; and as occasional prayer by a sister publicly in the church, we think, would not be out of order. Should a sister be gifted in exhortation; an occasional exercise of this gift, we think, would also be in order, subject however to the elder in charge.

It would not be in order for women to lead in those exercises, but to exercise their gifts in subordination to those having the care of the church. This, we think, is substantially what the apostle means—referred to.

"THY KINGDOM COME."

Please explain, whether the part of the Lord's Prayer, "Thy kingdom come; thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven;"—was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, and there stopped, or is it right to pray it yet? ANNA GUIBERRY.

WE pray, "Thy kingdom come." Let the kingdom of the Messiah be extended to the utmost parts of the earth that all the children of men may learn of his free salvation and become one fold under one Shepherd,—Jesus Christ. May his will be done in us by the light of the glorious Gospel, that we may be enabled to imitate the angels of light, which the Psalmist tells, "excel in strength, that do his commandments, hearkening to the voice of his Word."

Yes, my dear querist, we have a right to pray it yet, and let us pray frequently that we may shine in his kingdom as stars and that we may be united to the innumerable company of angels and to the general assembly and church of the first-born; and beholding his face, we shall be farther changed unto the same image of glory whose petition was breathed, while wrapped in this transient of clay.

DIVIDING THE SHEEP FROM THE GOATS.

THIS is a Scripture illustration, by which we were particularly struck, was derived from flocks of sheep and goats that fed in the same field or on the same common. The goats were of a finer breed than I had ever before seen, and the sheep had long, coarse, hairy wool; so that in casting your eye over the field, you could hardly say at first glance, which were goats and which were sheep. The shepherd, I perceived, at evening brought the flock home, and separated them into two parts, putting the sheep by themselves, and the goats also by themselves.

The words of the Savior never came home to my mind with greater force, than after witnessing this arrangement.—Clarke's Glimpses of the Old World.

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY GHOST.

NOTICE that some of our speakers and writers make a distinction between the terms, "Holy Ghost," and "gift of the Holy Ghost," which accord to my understanding, the Holy Scriptures do not warrant.

I come to this conclusion because I notice that inspired men did not make the distinction. I will call the reader's attention to Acts 10: 44, 45, "While Peter yet spake these words, the Holy Ghost fell on all them which heard the Word. And they of the circumcision which believed, were astonished, as many as came with Peter, because that on the Gentiles also, was poured out the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Here we notice that the inspired writer, in giving us this piece of history, uses both terms for the same blessing, the full blessing of the Holy Ghost.

Next I will call the reader's attention to the history of Simon, the sorcerer, as given in Acts 8: 13, where he offered money, for the power which the apostles had, and was told that he should have no part nor lot in this matter, because his heart was not right in the sight of God. Though he was a member of the church, and apparently sincere, yet for this thought he was told that he was in the gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity.

This shows the great importance of our hearts being pure, before we can receive this precious gift. Now, dear brethren, every where, let us remember that the "Kingdom of God" consists not in cold formalities, neither in meat or drink, but in righteousness; and peace and joy in the Holy Ghost. Rom. 14: 17.

J. R. MILLER.

A LADY, once writing to a young man in the navy, who was almost a stranger, thought, "Shall I close this as anybody would, or shall I say a word for my Master?" and, letting up her heart for a moment, she wrote, telling him that his constant change of words and places was an apt illustration of the Word, "If we have no continuing city," and asked, if he could say, "I seek one to come." Trembling she folded it, and sent it off. Back came the answer: "Thank you so much for these kind words. I am an orphan, and no one has spoken to me like that since my mother died, long years ago."

The arrow shot at a venture, hit home, and the young man shortly after rejoiced in the fullness of the blessing of the Gospel of peace. How often do we, as Christians, close a letter to those we know have no hope, "as anybody would," when we might say a word for Jesus! Shall we not embrace each opportunity in the future?

EVERY man is a missionary, now and forever, for good or evil, whether he intends or designs it or not. He may be a blot, radiating his dark influence outward to the very circumference of society; or he may be a blessing, spreading benediction over all the length and breadth of the world; but a blank he cannot be. There are no moral blanks; there are no neutral characters. We are either the sower that sows and corrupts or the light that splendidly illuminates, or the salt that silently operates; but being dead or alive, every man speaks.

LOVE is on the front of the throns of God, but justice and judgment, with inexorable dread follow behind; and where law is slighted and mercy is despised, when they have rejected those who would have been their best friends, then comes justice with her hoodwinked eyes, and with her sword and scales.

AFTER all the best version of the Bible is the translation of it into daily life. Every time this is done, there is indeed a revised and truly authorized version of the Book of God. May the Holy Spirit everywhere prompt his people to multiply these personal editions of the Scriptures.

PEOPLE talk about "killing" time. Why, the Care of all the Russians couldn't kill a second. It is a thing as immortal as his own soul. Listen to the clock ticking. Every rapid pulse marks the flight of a second, yet every second lives eternally in the soul of every man. Time is precious; let us make good use of it by studying the Word of God daily.

Correspondence.

Home Again.

As stated in our last, we left Iowa the 25th of July, arriving at St. Joe, Mo., in time to take the evening train over the St. Joe & Western Branch of the U. P. R. R. Next morning in the vicinity of Alexandria, Nebraska, we noticed the effects of the terrible storm of June. Patched roofs showed where the hailstones, large as coconuts, had crashed through and many windows were broken out, sash as well as all. The crops were entirely destroyed.

At 10 A. M., we arrived at Carleton, Neb. Visited brother Hoffer, and at 4 P. M. boarded the express for Grand Island, where we made close connection with the California express, and next day at 1 P. M. arrived at Cheyenne, where we changed cars for Longmont, Colo. We soon crossed the State line, and felt glad we once more were in Colorado. The snow-capped mountains looked as beautiful as ever. The hoary-headed Sentinel of the Rockies, Long's Peak, loomed up in majestic splendor at no great distance south-west of us. All were in good spirits with the thought that a few more hours and we would meet dear ones at home. But alas! for human expectations, how uncertain! Nearing Sand-Creek our careful engineer brought the train to a stand-still, and passengers clambered out to see what the trouble was. As another flood and another wash-out. Only Sunday evening before, a train some distance further on had run into a wash-out, killing the engineer and one person. The engine of our train was draped in fluttering crepe as a memento of the sad event. How reluctant we were to go back, but back went our train to Cheyenne, and after supper set out over the D. P. R. R. for Denver, where we arrived at midnight. Next morning we took an early stroll through some of the streets of the city. Marked improvement was visible on all sides in this wonderful city of the plains. The new Union Depot is a grand structure, indeed.

At 7 A. M. we were off for Longmont, where we arrived the 28th, at 10 o'clock, and soon were at home, where we found all well, for which we humbly but fervently thank the Lord. We were absent three months lacking a few days, and traveled in one dozen States—a distance of about 4,700 miles. On memory's chain are linked many pleasant thoughts and affectionate words of dear friends, relatives, brethren and sisters in the Lord. Many were the greetings and many were the farewells. May we all meet in the better land.

The First "Microcosm."

UNION DEPOSIT, PA., June 16th.

Beloved Wilford:—

The first number of the Microcosm is here. "Glory to God in the highest" for the omnipotent demonstration of the truth of the Bible it contains. I see more and more how fundamentally right is your position in relation to the substantial nature of the soul. The seminal truth that is to rout skepticism, and revolutionize even Christendom is found in the V and VI chapter of the Problem of Human Life. The sound of a tuning-fork, the buzz of a gnat's wing, the scratch of my pen furnish the grand argument for the destitution of our higher being. Tyndall and Helmholtz and Mayer are the great anti-christs of this cradinal doctrine of the Christian faith. Eternal issues for millions hang on the truth that inheres in the odor of a flower or the monotone of a Katy did. "Bless the Lord O my soul," for the light with which he is flooding the world through Wilford Hall. The sincerity of the dirt idolizing scientists of the day is about being tested. The grand questions of a personal God and the immortality of the soul are to be decided upon the great principles which they have long boasted as the certain overthrow of Christianity. "Alleluia, the Lord Omnipotent reigneth."

You are colling in Doctor Hazard transparently. He is too full of prejudice to make a fair argument, or to appreciate one that antagonizes his views. With intense anticipation I await the course and conclusion of the discuss-ion.

You are grudging that poor, unfortunate ignoramus of a reviewer in the Christian Advocate into powder. I pity him. But the fact of his ignorance, egotism, and insincerity, is past redemption. It is an ugly blot on that journal and on all who endorse its mean, unrighteous course. God speed the Microcosm, and keep the editor in good health, glowing mind, and sweet temper. His work will live and shape the destiny of thousands to the close of the present dispensation, and will roll its crystal billows into the grand millennium of Christ and His saints, in which there will be no Darwins, nor Tyndalls, nor Huxleys, nor Haeckels, nor half-baked Christians, nor clergymen who need a lens of ten thousand sun-power to make out whether Christ is God, or a sleek, well-bred monkey.

God speed the Microcosm. With sympathy and gratitude, C. H. BALSBEATH.

NOTE—We cannot offer the Microcosm free to those who pay $150 for BRETHREN AT WORK, after Sept. 1st, hence if you want both papers for $150 you must send your subscription in for next year before Sept. 1st. After Sept. 1st, the two will be $175.

Wilford And His Work.

Out at last. The first number of the Literary Microcosm received, perused, and contents weighed. I am well pleased with the general appearance and tone of the new paper. I consider it a lucky hit—the right thing in the right place and at the right time. I shall gladly give it a prominent place among the periodicals, and shall gladly await its monthly visit. Demand creates supply in literature as in everything else; and the demand now so deeply felt by the more thoughtful of literary and scientific men is, in part at least, supplied by the timely appearance of the Microcosm. When God would reform his people he raises up an agent for that purpose, gives him the necessary equipment, and sets him to work. The work is the Lord's whether the agent is conscious of it or not. Cyrus did not know he was the Lord's "anointed." So God may, through the agency of Wilford's pen, be working a revolution in our midst. The world is now right for a change of some sort in science. The Cosmos of modern Evolution is entirely too narrow and weak to bear the great superstructure of true sciences and philosophy. But let us not, therefore, fall down and worship Wilford, or adopt his theories as our creed. He is a hero, but to worship a hero is no less idolatry than to worship a "golden calf." Perfection is no more a prerogative of Wilford than it was of Aristotle, of Galileo, or of Newton. The great difference of men is, after all, a matter of time. The school-boy of to-day can and does comprehend Newton. Great thinkers are the first to see the full orb of new scientific truth; but while they in their elevated position are enjoying the full splendor of the rising sun of new truth, we in the valley, can see the day dawn, and sooner or later he must burst upon us in all the fulness of his dazzling brilliancy.

The man on top of the mountain will see the sun first; but the man at the base will see it just as certainly. Of course I mean men who have eyes and who keep them open. Just so with Wilford. If his theory be true, if the time of his appearance is here, it must have been discovered had Wilford never even been born. It is not, therefore, to be supposed that he is any the less worthy of honor. He is blessed above us in that he is allowed to see the truth first, and has the honor of leading us into its light. This honor none can rob him of. Many will now read Wilford's writings (the Problem of Human Life and the Literary Microcosm) who have previously had but little, if any, experience in scientific and philosophical literature. Such are very liable to be misled and can, therefore, be none too careful how they accept theories.

Because these writings are highly recommended by the religious press and by certain well-known and influential ministers, it is to be feared that many will read and accept his arguments without understanding, or even without caring to understand them. Too many people are ready to follow the bell sheep without a sufficient reason—because and only because they are bell-sheep.

I am not so blinded by egotism but that I know that I am too young and too little known to be regarded as a leader; and yet were it not that my name is used in the B. at W. in connection with, and to give currency to Wilford's writing, it is probable I should not have undertaken this essay.

What is therein said by me was written in a private letter to Bro. Eshelman with no thought of its being published. I am willing, however, to have it go to the world with the understanding that both Wilford and myself are but men. Don't forget that. I want no one to pin his faith to Wilford's or any other man's theory on my account, further than he sees it to be in harmony with truth. I judge and choose or refuse for myself. You must do the same. Marry they are too proud to think for themselves, they are too proud to be thought ignorant, they are too proud to have their theories proven them, with a great show of wisdom, go about putting them out on every every occasion, not knowing that they are too ignorant to understand the first principles on which the theory is based. "Do you mean to throw discredit upon Wilford's writings?" says one. No by no means. I want, you I urge you to read them; but more. Read other authors on the same subjects and think and examine for yourself until you are sufficiently informed to intelligently choose or refuse. Do not be too hasty. With these restrictions I would advise every minister in the Brotherhood, but especially our young ministers, to read and study both Wilford's book and papers. This Microcosm promises to give us some rich psychological feasts. The science of the human soul is a theme fraught with deep interest, and one that should not escape our attention. Let every young minister get some good work on mental philosophy, (Haven's, Porter's, Wayland's, or Upham's), and in connection with the Microcosm, and he will doubtless make greater progress in learning than ever before. He will gain greater control, not only of his own, but also of the minds of those who hear him. How can he in the energies of another soul when I do not know the how of the operation of my own? The power to see, understand, and arouse my own soul enables me, to the same extent, to see, understand, and arouse yours. If you would succeed in the realms of thought, you must, by the power of your own will, pass in between the white and gray matter of the cerebrum and cerebellum, into the secret chambers of your own consciousness; and there, by reflection, discover and set to work the latent energies of your soul. Do you know that we are commanded to think? (Phil 4:8) We must think, feel, will, then act; otherwise we act unintelligently.

E. A. Osa.

Plattsburg, Mo.

From B. F. Moomaw.—We arrived home safely from Annual Meeting, after an absence of three weeks. Tied some time in the valley of Virginia, with the brethren of the Second District. Had a pleasant time with them at meetings and in the family circle.

The wheat crop had improved very much during the time we had gone West. The crop is not heavy in the field, but finely headed and well matured; quality, prime. On arriving at the place, which on earth we call our home, found it distressingly dry and so remains still; the ground here has not been wet three inches in two months. We found all well. Thank the Lord.

We are having considerable excitement in the construction of railroads, and the development of the vast mineral (iron) resources, which bid fair to inaugurate a better state of things financially.

I am sorry that Am... do not dispose of the brethren and sisters in the districts by reference to the Gospel being the guiding star and not in number A. M., with so much may I not say unimportant matter? And I would further suggest that the district whose queries were not reached, reconsider them and, if possible, recall all but such as may be of general interest and vital importance.

My attention to the subject of adopting science to convert the skeptical element has been occupied considerably since my return. I have been reading Butler's analogy and the Problem of Human Life, and also noticed some articles in the papers on that subject, and so far my mind has not been very favorably impressed. Is there not danger of guiding imperceptibly into rationalism and undermining the doctrine of faith to that extent? "Life and immortality are brought to light through the Gospel," says the language of inspiration, and as to convincing these scientists—as it is proposed to do—I am inclined to believe that if they will not hear Moses and the prophets nor the apostles, they would not be persuaded if one should be raised from the dead. Christianity is a system of faith, and far beyond the range of our reasoning power. But I intend to examine the theory referred to before saying more about it.—Bonsack, Va., June 28th.

[The above was overlooked, hence its delay till this time.—Ed.]

LATER—Aug. 1st—Since my last writing, I have been from home attending continued meetings in Alleghany county, this State. Preached twelve sermons in eight days. There were six districts, others altogether and a number absent, persuaded, and the church apparently much revived. Proposed to compensate me for my labors, to which I objected, because the good Master, whose servant I am, has abundantly prepaid me in different ways. On the 6th inst., I am engaged to go east some seventy-five to one hundred miles to labor for a while. The length of time will be governed by the will of the Lord as indicated by the circumstances attending.

From M. Caylor.—We number thirty-one members at this time. One of our speakers and one of our deacons moved away last Fall, and on the 12th of April our elder went to his long home in heaven. This leaves us only one minister in the second degree and two deacons. The nearest organized church is thirty-five miles distant. The ministering brethren from that church visit us frequently. We have one brother that is deaf and blind; he has been in that condition for about two years. Will not some of the ministering brethren come and preach for us. We are only few in number, but we have a good meeting-house. There are many sinners here to convert. I see in the B. A. W. some churches are increasing very fast. This makes us feel glad, and I hope that many more will forsake sin and folly and turn to Christ and live forever.... The weather is very warm and dry at this time.—Salen, Marion County, Ill., July 24th.

From Jesse Calvert.—As previously announced, the brethren and sisters met in communion at Solomon's Creek church, to make some arrangements for next Annual Meeting. A goodly number met. A large number being represented the meeting was organized by appointing the officers of the former District Meeting to preside. A committee of five was appointed to select a place to hold the Meeting.

Several places were offered, and a number of suggestions talked over, and another District Meeting appointed September 22nd, 1881, at Solomon's Creek Church, at 9 A. M. It is hoped that all the churches will be represented, as important business will then be transacted, and the places decided upon where the meeting will be held.

[Printable Christian, Preacher, and Progressive Christian, please copy.]

From Annie B. Light.—The members of this arm of the church rebuilt two of their meeting-houses this Summer—one near Pennville and the other near Mountville, being a distance of about eleven miles apart. The one at Pennville is now finished, and was dedicated to-day, (July 31st). The ministers present were C. Bucher, S. R. Zog, Jacob Ebelman, and but one of our home ministers, (the rest were at the funeral of one of our sisters.) The house was well filled. It is 75x45, and arranged for Communion services with basement and kitchen. We expect to hold a Communion in it this Fall, but the time is not as yet appointed. The Brethren took their text for the occasion from John 4:19-21, from which we were ably addressed. After meeting we went to the water where two precious souls were added to the church by baptism. We now have one applicant, and some that are halting between two opinions, but I do hope they may soon become willing to follow the meek and lowly Lamb—J. 4:19.—Sporting Hill, Lancaster Co., Pa.

From J. L. Brown.—This beautiful Sabbath morning Bro's wife and I at home, wishing for the privilege to occupy a seat that is vacant in the old Panther Creek church, Woodford Co., Ill. We have no opportunities here to attend church. We were at Stockton, Cal., a few days ago, and on our way home stopped awhile with brother and sister Shank close by the school-house, where brother Bashor held some meetings. There are forty members and three ministers in that body. We anticipate a visit soon to their camp-meeting, which will be close to Bro. W. H. K.—sixty miles from here, if the Lord will. We have seen some beautiful natural scenery while in California—big trees, natural bridge, etc. We live in the mountains in a mining country—very rough. The valleys are more pleasant. There are large wheat fields containing thousands of acres in a body here. We can say that so far we like California very well. We sincerely hope these lions may find all well and strong in the faith. Will the brethren and sisters remember us at all times?—Glenora, Cal., July 24th.

From George K. Sappington.—We are all well in this arm of the church (Bever Dam) so far as I know. Had our council on the 23rd of July, and considering the importance of the work done, everything passed off as pleasantly as could have been expected.... The weather here was dry up to yesterday, when we had a very fine rain, which gives us a prospect for a fine crop of corn.—New Midway, Md., Aug 2nd.

OUR HOME.

Of all the dear spots on earth, there is none so sweet to the memory as that of home. It has been said, "A home is a home be it ever so homely," and it no doubt is true. We feel that place to be our home, our resting place, a place where we are cared for, a place where kindred hearts beat in union with ours and welcome us to rest from the labors of the day. To the brave braves as eve approaches, with anxious eye they turn their footsteps homeward, and eagerly listen for a welcome voice:

"How sweet to hear the watch-dog's hoarse bark

By deep-voiced welcome as we draw near home;

"The sweet to know there is an eye will mark

Our coming, and look brighter when we come."

With all the pleasures of the homes in which we live, how much they might be increased. Many are satisfied with too little.

A home is a place where we live, and it should be as near heaven as it can be made by human effort. A home should be the most pleasant and attractive place on earth, so much so that the heart would have no desire to leave the pleasure there for greater looks for pleasures abroad.

First of all, the home should be arranged so as to insure health, as there can be no pure happiness without health. Heuss should be as commodious as means at command may permit. Rooms should be well ventilated, letting sufficient pure air in to keep them pure and fresh.

The yard must be kept clean, all waste water should be drained away from the house. All weeds should be kept clean and the yard neatly trimmed so as to render it inviting to the inmates, all of which will have a tendency to promote health and happiness. This once secured, perpetual bliss is ours. The soul becomes more and more elevated, and though it may feel that happiness here on an earthly home yet it feels that here in a home is sweeter beautiful and pleasant there is no substantial delight, but is quailed to seek that happiness in another world to which it aspires and will reach when dissolved of earth and earthly things.

We may be absent from home a long while. We think of returning. What cheerfulness, what longings, what preparations for that return to friends in that highly-cultivated home. O that pleasant home of earth, how they inspire us with the thought of our heavenly home to which we are going. What longings, glorious anticipations, we are almost there. This higher life is but the outgrowth of a pleasant home, a beautiful mind and body, the fruit of a holy determination of conquering self and finding abiding pleasures.

SLEEP.

There is no fact more clearly established in the physiology of man than this: That the brain expends its energies and itself during the hours of wakefulness, and that these are recuperated during sleep. If the recuperation does not equal the expenditure, the brain withers; this is insanity. Thus it is that, in early English history, persons who were condemned to death by being prevented from sleeping, always died raving maniacs; thus it is also, that those who are starved to death become insane; the brain is not nourished, and they cannot sleep. The practical inferences are three:

1. Those who think most, who do most brain-work, require most sleep.

2. The time "saved" from necessary sleep, is infallibly destructive to mind, body and estate.

3. Give yourself, your children, your servants, give all who are under you, the fullest amount of sleep they will take by compelling them to go to bed at some regular, early hour, and to rise in the morning the moment they awake of themselves, and within a fortnight, nature, with almost the regularity of the rising sun, will unlock the bonds of sleep the moment enough repose has been secured for the wants of the system. This is the only safe and sufficient rule; and as to the question how much sleep any one requires, each must be a rule for himself; great nature will never fail to write it out to the observer, under the regulations just given.—Hall's Journal of Health.

GOOD MORNING.

DON'T forget to say "Good morning!" Say it to your parents, your brothers and sisters, your school-mates, your teachers—and say it cheerfully and with a smile; it will do you good and do your friends good. There's a kind of inspiration in every "Good morning" heartily spoken, that helps to make him fresher and work lighter. It seems really to make the morning good and to be a prophecy of a good day to come and to be. And if this be true of the "good morning," it is also of kind, hearty greetings. They cheer the discouraged, refresh the tired one, somehow make the wheels of life run smoothly. Be liberal with them, then, and let it no morning pass, however dark and gloomy it may be, that you do not try to do to brighten by your smile and cheerful words. (B)

MEN OF GRIT.

THE largest majority of men do not owe a tithe of the power they possess. One of the wealthiest men in all Great Britain, broke down in business a good many years ago. He went into an office where he was well acquainted, and said to a member of the firm that he had no bread for his family. "I am ready to go messages for you, or perform any other service." He hung up his coat and commenced work around the lowest rung of the ladder. Previously this man's check was accepted any where on the street. You may be sure that the man gradually mounted up. Over it.

His mind-mind may feel out. He was without bread, and soon would be without shoes unless he wakened up and stirred his energies. He was a boot-keeper, and at one time earned a handsome salary. What did he do? This he did: He took a cotton hook and went down to the wharf to load and unload cotton at so much per hour. Behold another man with grit. The owners of the cotton and the ship eyed this hero. Soon the decree went forth, come up higher. He resumed the quill and laid aside the cotton hook. Discouragement never weakened the Boston boy. Whiners, with barging lips and chicken hearts, who cure their troubles with the bottle or the pistol, are pitiful creatures who should never have been born. (B)

KEEP AHEAD.

ONE of the grand secrets of success in life is to keep ahead in all ways possible. If you once get behind, it may be very difficult to make up the headway which is lost. One who begins with putting aside some part of his earnings, however small, and keeps it up for a number of years is likely to become rich before he dies. One who inherits property, and goes on year by year spending a little more than his income, will become poor if he lives long enough. Living beyond their means has brought multitudes of persons to ruin in our generation. It is the cause of nine tenths of all the defalcations which have disgraced the age. Bankers and business men in general do not often help themselves to other people's money until their own funds begin to tail off, and their expenditures exceed their receipts. A man who is in debt walks in the midst of perils. It cannot but impair a man's self respect to know that he is living at the expense of others. It is also very desirable that we should keep some what ahead in our work. This may not be possible in all cases; as, for instance, when a man's work is assigned to certain fixed hours like that of the operatives of a mill. But there are certain classes of people who can choose their time for the work which they are called to do, and amongst them there are some who invariably put off the task as long as possible, and then come to its performance hurried, perplexed, anxious, confused—in such a state of mind as certainly unfits them for doing their best work. Go ahead, and keep ahead, and your success is tolerably sure. (B)

WHAT IS A CHRISTIAN?

IF you come to us and say you are a praying man, we answer we are glad; but we would like to ask your wife and children what your praying is doing for you? If you say you daily read the Bible, that is right, but let us ask your partner in business how much of its teaching you practice. If you say you are a member of the church, we are glad of that, if you are a worthy member, if not, we are sorry for the church. But let us go on to the street and ask the people you daily meet to come

Remember. So it comes to pass that many of our duties may be the evidence of a man's life. Whether a man is a Christian or not depends entirely upon the principle which governs his daily life, and the harvest which the world is gathering from that life.

Fallen Asleep.

Blissed are the dead which die in the Lord.—Rev. 14. 13.

WILLIAMS.—In Brownsville, Mo., July 15, 1881, Charley, infant son of the undersigned, aged 5 years, 0 months and 28 days.

He was a sprightly, little boy, kind and affectionate in all of his ways; was ever ready and quick to obey whatever he was bid to do. We feel our sore bereavement, and that home is a lonesome place since little Charley is gone and we are often made to weep, because of his absence to nevermore to return to us. But we can go him and hope we will be found traveling in the ways of righteousness, which affords us the anticipation of meeting him in glory.

COWICH.—Also on the 16th, inst., our niece Malissa Cowich, of consumption, aged about 18 years.

The deceased leaves a husband and one child, and many friends to mourn their loss. She made application for baptism, but waited for her husband until she was too much reduced to have the ordinance attended to.

DICKENSON.—Also on the 19th, inst., of old age, James Dickenson, our nearest neighbor, aged about 90 years.

The funeral of the latter we preached to a very large concourse of people. Friend Dickenson was a good, moral citizen. He never attached himself to any church, but became strongly inclined to the Brethren in later years. He leaves a large circle of friends and relatives.

D. L. WILLIAMS.

EMMERT.—In the Arnold's Grove Dist. Aug. 1, 1881, John Arthur, infant son of Bro. J. J. and sister Catherine Emmert, aged 5 months and 12 days. Funeral occasion from Matthew 15: 15 by the Brethren.

DISTRICT-MEETINGS.

Sept. 9, Northern District of Missouri, Whitesville church, Andrew Co., Mo. Those coming by rail should stop off at Rosendale.

From Longmont, Colorado.

When we left the Shenandoah Valley, Va., the wheat crop was all gathered into the barns or in stacks, and the brethren had already commenced having their harvest or thanksgiving meetings.

The crop was good as also was the corn, grass and fruit crop. In Ohio a portion of the wheat crop was yet in the field, the crop tolerably good; fruit crop good. In Illinois and Iowa the harvest is just over; crop, excepting in a few sections, on low lands, poor,—on rolling land good North-eastern Kansas, some wheat yet to cut, crops generally good in Nebraska; harvest about half cut. Wheat and corn crops only moderate. Arriving in Colorado, we found harvest had just fairly commenced, wheat crop generally heavy. Reapers and self-binders are running on every side. The latter run day and night and some of them on Sunday. The crop is so extensive, they are urged to do so in order to save the crop. The corn crop good also.

The travel to our State, including emigrants, tourists and invalids, seeking health, is immense. We hurried home, expecting to find Bro. M. E. Esheiman here, growing hale and hearty, but how disappointed we felt to learn he had from some cause changed his mind, and was on his return already. He certainly missed seeing the best part of Colorado, and I am impressed with the idea, it would have added to his health, to have journeyed awhile up here, away from the cities, towns and hotels. A rustic life is what invalids want here.

J. S. FLORY.

A Monster Steamship.

The new steamship Elne, now in the port of New York, is a magnificent iron screw steamship of nearly 6,000 tons gross register, built for the North German Lloyd Company, of Bremen. The steamer is intended for the Bremen and New York line, and is in length, 440 feet; breadth, 45 feet; depth, 30 feet 6 inches.

All the decks and deck work are constructed either of teak or iron. With a view to protect the vessel from the heavy Atlantic seas, strongly constructed iron turtle cases are placed over both ends of the ship. Situated in the center of the upper deck, are bunks for the officers, firemen and others, together with galley, smoking room, and entrances to first and second cabins, w.

head there is a promenade deck about 80 feet long and the whole width of the ship solely appropriated to the use of first-class passengers. In addition to the accommodation for the officers and crew, 170 in number, the vessel is designed to carry 100 first-class, 120 second-class, and 1,000 steerage passengers. The first and second class passengers will be located on the main deck, while the steerage passengers will be berthed on the lower deck. The chief dining hall—a very handsome and comfortable apartment, about 40 feet square—is beautifully lighted by a cupola from the promenade deck.

The tables are provided with revolving chairs, and along the side of the hall the rich divans are upholstered in dark red plush.

The ladies' parlor is on the promenade deck, and fitted up in ebonized wood and gold. As a further attraction in this room, the walls have been elaborately carved, paneled and corniced, while silk tapestry has been introduced.

Divans are placed around the sides of the ladies' parlor and surround the main mast, which penetrates this apartment, hidden by rich, artistic carving and handsome mirrors. The ladies' parlor is lighted by four side-lights and two windows forward, and is brilliantly illuminated at night by four large lamps attached to the mast between the mirrors.

The Elne is rigged with four pole masts of iron, with yards on the fore and main masts. She is provided with steam windlasses, steam and hand steering gear, steam winches, steam hold pumps, fresh water condenser, in short, all modern appliances to secure the safety of the vessel at sea, and the comfort of passengers.

The engines of the Elne are of the three-cylinder type, one high pressure cylinder 60 inches dia. meter, and two low-pressure of 85 inches diameter having a stroke of five feet. The boilers are four in number, double-ended, each 15 feet diameter by 17 feet 6 inches long, and six of iron, constructed for a working pressure of 80 pounds on square inch. There are 24 furnaces, made of mild steel, on Fox's patent corrugated principle.

A Letter from the Governor of Kansas.

STATE OF KANSAS,
Executive Department,
TOPEKA, August 1st, 1881.

J. H. MOONE:—

Mt. Morris, Ill.,

My Dear Sir:—

Your letter of the 29th ult., enclosing a clipping from the New York Observer in relation to prohibition in Kansas and especially in the city of Leavenworth, has just been received.

I send you by to-day's mail a pamphlet recently published here which will give you I think a fair representation of prohibition so far as it has been tried in this State.

The clipping enclosed by you does not give a fair statement of the facts as they exist in this State; while it is true that in three or four of the larger towns of Kansas, the law is recklessly disregarded, yet it must be borne in mind that there are hundreds of towns and rural districts in the State, where prohibition is absolute and the law is as honestly obeyed and enforced as any other penal law on our statute book.

I know of no temperance men who regard our law as "crude, clammy and impracticable."

You must remember, that we are fighting the combined raw power of the nation here in Kansas, and that the enemy resort to all manner of falsehood to break us as far as possible the force of prohibition in this State. It matters not what stories the whisky ring may instigate, circulate and publish;—that they are a whole and a part of the same;—they are struggling for the people's homes, and for the advancement of the cause of society, morality and good government. They feel that they are right, and have no doubt but that God will give them the victory.

Very Truly Yours,

JOHN P. ST. JOHN.

BRETHREN AT WORK $1.50 and Messenger free one year. This offer open until Sept. 1st.

Bro. David Franz, of Ceto Grob, Ill., started to Minnesota, to remain about one month.

The Linnick church held a concert Saturday evening the 12th inst., and did considerable business in a short time.

This is a good time to hold out-door meetings. Improve every opportunity to make known the ways of the Lord.

The donation of the B. at W. the remainder of the year to your friend might prove a great blessing. Only 30 cents!

Sister Emma Kirdig, of Woodford Co., Ill., arrived here the 15th, and will make Mt. Morris her home for the present.

An Ohio girl by the name of Louisa Cleary has married a Chinese by the name of Wah Koon, or in English Ben Ho Lee.

If you do not get your paper regularly, notify us and we will endeavor to find the cause. We desire that you get every number.

THERE will be many Love-feasts during September. Will come one at each meeting please send us a report of the Lord's doing?

Bro. B. W. Graybill, of Morrill, Kan., writes: "On the 11th inst., the thermometer stood 112° in the shade. Our corn crop is badly hurt."

It is said, "Of two evils choose the least." Better choose neither. There is small choice in two rotten apples. Both are to be rejected.

THE post-office at this place is becoming quite important. The second week in August eighty-five packages of mail were received and sent out.

The leading question at the College just now is, "What are we going to do to provide for all the students who wish to attend?"—Democrat.

Those who subscribed at A. M. for the Danish meeting house should forward the amount to D. N. Workman or E. H. Miller, Ashland, Ohio.

Do not repose too much confidence in any man, or class of men. "Cursed be the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm."—Jer. 27: 5.

Is there is more whiskey sold in Kansas now than before prohibition, why are the men trying to break down the law? Why spend money trying to kill prohibition if it enables them to sell more whiskey?

Dr. Weston, of Cresser Theological Seminary, has brought out an edition of the Revised New Testament with the American changes incorporated into the text.

We should be pleased to see brethren and other good citizens make Mt. Morris their dwelling place. Every industrious, sober, steady man will be heartily welcomed.

PLEASE do not sew your copy together and make a continuous string of it, but number the pages, and when ready to send arrange them in proper order and pin together.

The Brethren of Shannon church, Carroll Co., Ill., had a very pleasant concert meeting in the forenoon of the 15th inst. Their Love-feast will be held October 11th and 12th.

D. E. Ray, of the Baptist Flag, is very busy. At least he has not noticed the "Shin and Ray Debate" yet. We hope the "dear people" will let up on him a little so that he can review the Debate.

Sister Flora Tague writes: "Our (Covington, O.) church is still in union and love. At our last quarterly concert we had but very little business. Our Love-feast is to be held on the 7th of October."

The Murren Creek church, Morgan county, Mo., will hold a series of meetings, commencing Sept. 26th, at the new church, eleven miles south of Tippecanoe, and seven miles north of Versailles. Love feast on 12th.

We are being favored with an abundance of good matter for the B. at W. New life and zeal seem to have taken hold of many of our writers. Praise God for it! Let the good thoughts come right along.

BROTHER Moore stated Week the 16th. This leaves the lone edito to do the work again this week. Brother M. will visit Saline Co., Mo., and probably be gone about ten days or two weeks. His wife is some better.

BROTHER Cyrus Wallick is traveling in the Mississippi valley viewing the landscape o'er. He writes us from Mississippi. He goes to Waterloo, Geneve to Libertyville, Ia., where he will be glad to receive communications from friends.

WRITING from Kansas City, Aug. 17, Bro. Moore says: "Reached here at 10 A. M., and shall leave at 3:30 P. M. for Saline Co., Mo. It is now 10° F. in the shade—too hot for travelers. Stover suffers some from heat. Aaron Warble all right."

Bro. FROES in his lectures on health, among the Brethren in Indiana, delivered one on "The Evils and Remedy of Tobacco." On the 22nd, he begins to lecture in the North Liberty church, and on the 29th will begin in what is known as the Stump church.

ATTEN the type as all arranged in columns, the form need to be placed so that there may not one letter stand above another. God punishes all of us; but too many here do not learn to stay with those that stay planted. They are always working up away from the root.

It is with many regrets that we announce that up to this writing no communication for this paper has been received from brother Stein. His silence is inexplicable by us. It may be he is sick, or perhaps he sent several communications together and they have been lost. We have a written agreement with him in reference to his correspondence. The last letter received by his wife was dated at Vienna, Austria.

Bro. David Ely and wife have left Linnick and gone to Mt. Vernon, Ill., where they will anchor their lives. They are both earnest, active workers, and we hope they may do much for Christianity in their new abode. We shall miss them, as we have spent many happy hours together.

Our another page brother E. J. Buerntorger gives a brief statement of the Berlin council. The committee, which consisted of E. J. B., J. W. Beer, J. P. Sigs, John Wise, and C. B. Boney, found it... that H. R. Hobbs by no longer to be a member of the Brethren church.

Bro. Henry Stauder, 4 P. M. 16th, has written us a very affectionate letter expressive of his appreciation of the assistance of his letter in Progress for 1880, and of which we make mention in B. at W. page 141. He better knows how Christ is a clergy, and we wish him a glowing crown in the "Secret Eye and Eye."

THE brethren at Longmont, Col., are a well organized lot in their faith to visit their wife in Colorado. It was not their fault that we did not hear of them. Circumstances seem to be in our way to their point. The good brethren had arranged to meet us at North Park for us, to fish and hunt. How we would have enjoyed it!

Why not publish the names of the men who are successful in supporting the mission cause here? When it is not needed, it can be sold and the money invested elsewhere to carry on missionary work. The greatest possible good should be done with the money, and we think our suggestion worth looking at by the Mission Board.

YOUNG people who contemplate attending school should not resolve to take a large number of studies. A few branches well studied and understood will do more service in life than a smattering of many. Besides this, the brain should not be overworked. There is not a single rehearsing machine as a source of mental training which breaks down the health.

On the 17th inst., twenty of us started early for Rock River to spend the day fishing. We fished with the net from 9 A. M. to 2:30 P. M., and while on our face we were able not to draw the seine to the shore on account of the multitude of holes, yet we were amply rewarded for our toil. We secured about 225 pounds of fish. The fish had brought out one fish that had long twenty-one inches, around the body, and weighed twenty-five pounds.

On the 11th inst., we attended meeting at Linnick in the forenoon. We were happy in working with the brethren there. There are many resolutions and good saints at that place. At 3 P. M., we attended service in brother Levi Schumaker's yard under the shade trees. Two applicants for baptism. At 6 P. M. meeting again at Linnick. This was a busy day, and we enjoyed it very much. How much better to be at work all day instead of loafing!

Dr. MAY says in his "Succession" page 35 and 356: "After the rise of the Arian controversy, the Catholics originated the practice of time immemorial." The Arians originated in the fourth century, and we understand years before this, Monimus, a catholic, said that time immemorial had always been with them. How they could originate in the fourth century when they were practicing in the third is not a clear, so far. They will please read and explain or stand convicted of gross misrepresentation.

OVER THE HILL FROM THE POOR-HOUSE.

[A sequel to "Over the Hill to the Poor-house."]

I, who was always counted, they say,
Rather a bad stick any way,
Splintered all over with dodges an' tricks,
Known as "the worst of the deacon's six;"
I, the truant, saucy and bold,
The one black sheep in my father's fold,
"Once on a time," as the stories say,
Went over the hill on a Winter's day—
Over the hill to the poor-house.

Tom could save what twenty could earn;
But givin' was somethin' he never would learn.
—I could half o' the Scriptures speak—
Committed a hundred verses a week;
Never forgot an' never slipped;
But, "Honor thy father an' mother," he skipped,
So over the hill to the poor-house.
As for Susan, her heart was kind
An' good—what there was of it, mind!
Notin' too big, an' nothin' too nice;
Notbin' she wouldn't sacrifice,
For one she loved; an' that 'ere one
Was herself, when all was said an' done.
An' Charley an' Booz meant well, no doubt,
But any one could pull 'em about.

An' all our folks ranked well, you see,
Save one poor fellow, an' that was me,
An' when . . . an' rainy night,
A neighbor . . . se went out o' sight,
They pitched on me as the guilty chap
That carried one end of the halter strap;
An' I think myself that view of the case
Wasn't altogether out of place.
My mother denied it, as mothers do,
But I am inclined to believe 'twas true,
Though for me one thing might be said—
That I, as well as the horse, was led;
An' 'th' worst of whiskey spurred me on,
Or else the deed would never have been done.
But the keenest grief I ever felt
Was when my mother beside me knelt,
An' cried an' prayed 'til I melted down,
As I wouldn't for half the horses in town.
I kissed her fondly then and there,
An' swore henceforth to be honest an' square.

I served my sentence—a bitter pill
Some fellows should take who never will;
And then I decided to go "out West,"
Concluding 'twould suit my health the best;
Where, how I prospered I never could tell,
But Fortune seemed to like me well,
And, somehow every vein I struck
Was always blubb' over with luck.
And better than that, I was steady and true,
And put my good resolution through.
But I wrote to a trusty old neighbor an' said,
"You tell 'em, old fellow, that I am dead,
And died a Christian; 'twill please 'em more,
Than if I had lived the same as before."

But when this neighbor he wrote to me,
"Your mother's in the poor-house," says he,
I had a resurrection straight way,
And started for her that very day;
And when I arrived where I was grown
I took good care that I shouldn't be known;

But I bought the old cottage, thro' and thro',
Of some one Charley had sold it to;
And held back neither work nor gold
To fix it up as it was of old.

The same big fire-place wide and high,
Flung up its cinders toward the sky;
The old clock ticked on the corner-shelf—
I wound it and set it agoin' myself;
And if everything wasn't just the same,
Neither I nor money was to blame;
Then over the hill to the poor-house.

One blowing, blustering Winter's day,
With a team and cutter I started away;
My fiery nags were as black as coal;
(They some 'at resembled the horse I stole);
I hitched, and entered the poor house door—
A poor old woman was scrubbing the floor;
She rose for her feet in great surprise,
And looked, quite started, into my eyes;
I saw the whole of her troubles' trace
In the lines that marred her dear old face;
"Mother!" I shouted, "your sorrows are done,
You're adopted along o' your horse-thief son;
Come over the hill from the poor-house—"

She didn't faint; she knelt by my side,
And thanked the Lord till I fairly cried.
And maybe our ride wasn't pleasant and gay,
And maybe she wasn't wrapped up that day;
An' maybe our cottage wasn't warm and bright,
And maybe it wasn't a pleasant sight,
To see her a-gettin' the evening's tea,
And frequently stoppin' and kissin' me,
And maybe we didn't live happy for years,
In spite of my brothers' and sisters' sneers,
Who often said, as I have heard,
That they wouldn't own a prison bird,
(Though they're gettin' over it, I guess,
For all o' 'em owe me more or less.)

But I've learned one thing—and it cheers a man
In always a-doin' the best he can:
That whether on the big book a blot
Gets over a fellow's name or not,
Whenever he does a deed that's white,
It's credited to him fair and right,
And when you hear the great bugle's notes,
And the Lord divides his sheep an' goats;
However they may a-tilt my case,
Wherever they may fix my place,
My good old Christian mother you'll see,
Will be sure to stand right up for me,
With over the hill from the poor-house.

For the Brethren at Work.

A SERMON DELIVERED IN CHRISTIANIA, NORWAY, 1876.

BY C. ROPE.

"As the Father hath loved me, so I have loved you."

I SHALL ask your close attention to the text; and, as there is nothing in it but love, our object will be to dig down into the very heart of it—hold it up before you and try to look at it from all sides. But as we have not written our sermon nor put down any stakes from which to proceed, you will have to content yourselves as it will be revealed unto us at present.

"As the Father hath loved me so have I loved you." Our Lord Jesus Christ addresses his apostles, not the world. He is putting to the hearts of his own the very fullest measure of love, using the plainest, the strongest language, the only words capable to express the idea set forth. Mark them: "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you. Did God love Jesus Christ? Verily he did, for he testified:—"This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased."

Now love is manifested by action from the one who loves toward the one who is loved. Hence to find out how Jesus Christ loves his own we have to find out how God acted toward his Son, and then how Christ acted toward his children. Compare those actions, and if alike, we have digged in the right direction and ought at the same time behold what manner of love it is.

But it is said that everything has two sides, consequently to look at one side will make a man one-sided. This explains why we have so many one-sided people in religious matters. I want you to turn away from this evil and prepare yourself to look at both sides of God's and Christ's love; and for this reason put your whole heart on our text: "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you. The side of God's love toward Jesus Christ is revealed in time past. He made nothing without him. Jesus as the object of his love is not only called into counsel, is not merely valued to know, but is called to co-operate in creation. Yea more; by Him all things were made; and not only by Him, but for Him also. Now any one will readily see this is love, and not only love, but unlimited love. Hence his expression: "As the Father hath loved me," etc.

The same kind of love was manifested from God toward fallen man, who is dead in trespasses and sins. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." The higher the sacrifice the more love. This needs little explanation.

Now then did Jesus Christ so love his own? Did he come up to his own measure? "As my Father hath loved me so have I loved you." He put off his glory because flesh dwelt among us, and, like his Father, he not only came to let us know God's will,—not only called us into counsel, but called us into co operation with him. Was it true that God made everything by him and for him? So it is here just so true that he makes everything by us and for us if we, like He, accept our appointed place. Hence He did nothing of his own; he did everything for them even unto death. Therefore it is true: "As my Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." Now this kind of love is the beginning of love, the fountain the start; it gives itself wholly to the Beloved One, however wicked or inferior he may be; hence it is free. Therefore this love is for all—for the world; for we were all alike dead, wicked and corrupted. Sinner, where are you? I see you there in the corner hanging your head, and another one boldly looking me in the face. Would say to the one, sure you are a dead man, but God loves you; put all your sins on His Son, who commands you to look for safety. Would like to tell the other you are no better—dead! dead!! You try to hide it by a form of godliness, but the streak of your guilt you cannot hide. The Lord wants you to acknowledge your condition; and thus come to the fountain and get eternal life freely. This is freely given to all; the gift is Jesus Christ and eternal life. Some do not like this freedom; they want to have something for their work in the Lord's service, to be somewhat more than the one who has no work. Have patience, you will get it when we look at the other side; we want no mixture, everything in its place.

A few words to explain: Were not all of you once dead in trespasses and sins? You were. Was not Jesus Christ given as a sin-offering for the whole world? He was. Well, as all die in Adam, so shall all be made alive through Jesus Christ our Lord. The sacrifice and eternal life (not salvation or happiness in heaven but prevented to die) is for all and the sacrifice for all is the price that Jesus Christ paid for the world to his mother and the world is his. And as he overcame death, it was impossible that those he redeemed from death ever could die. This does not claim all will be happy, as it is possible to exist without happiness, but that depends altogether on how the one who bought us has ordained the matter. This we will now proceed to see, leaving this side and turn to the other, by which you will be able to see how much security you have for future happiness.

"As the Father hath loved me so have I loved you." If the first part is easily understood, and every one likes to have a part in it, so is this scarcely comprehended, and hardly none in Christendom will wish to have part in this.

Many preach that God did not love Jesus Christ when he poured on him his wrath and penalty for sins, when he withdrew himself from him and did not answer his prayers, and when he was stretched out on the cross bleeding for you and me. Well, can you see he loves you? Can you read in those nail prints that God never hated you,—but your sins. If not, there is no stronger proof than this: "For God so loved the world (not hated) that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him should not perish but have everlasting life." If, therefore, God loved the guilty one so much, how much more the one who went as his substitute in the penalty? Therefore I claim it was love of his Father, not only to man, but to Jesus Christ himself, which made the Father give him up in death. The prophet proclaims, "It pleased the Lord to bruise him." Ah! look at God in his fearfulness! Look at the Lamb of God, the Holy One in his humiliation and suffering!—the beloved Son! See how God who is love, loves, and is pleased to see him bruised. Fearful love looking on all this suffering, not so much as giving him encouragement or answer; no, but filling his cup to the very brim, makes him drink it and die. And this is His pleasure to behold. Remember our text, "As my Father hath loved me so have I loved you."

As already remarked, He died that we might live. But more than that. He himself profited by it, He learned obedience; through suffering he was perfected in that he suffered. God wanted this; he would have that accomplished at any cost, consequently he with pleasure measured out to him, with exact measure weighed out by the balance, immovable, the last pain, hiding himself from his view. This is the other side of God's love to his Son. And so pleased was he to see him bruised that he took him up with all his stripes in the midst of his throne on the right hand, there to remain in his sight at the present moment. Now our text is in its place: "As my Father hath loved me so have I loved you."

Dear pilgrim traveling along to heaven, if you are here this evening and have confessed your true condition to him, and by faith accepted atonement and eternal life of him as a free gift, you have no reason to doubt he loves you, or be uncertain about the matter. If every one hates you; if he also seems against you; if you get no answer to your prayer, remember our text, remember God's love to him, and remember his pleasure. Jesus loves you now. He wants you not only saved, but to learn obedience, be perfected through suffering. The apostle claims he called us for that purpose. Also he chastens severely every son he adopts; and the one who is without this is a bastard and no son. Now as this could not altogether be ignored in Christendom, the priests soon made out that sickness, loss of property, if a cow or a horse died, that was the cross of Christ. Will you know, oh vain people, this is no more His cross than light is darkness. Others have made a man's sinful lusts the Christian's cross; but will a please remember God tempted no man? All those crosses an unbeliever or infidel has in common with you, and they may be used as means of the Father to draw you to his own. But if that is your suffering with Christ, if you never become partaker of any other, rest assured that when the preacher, after your death, tells your relatives and friends of your great cross, that you in hell are then better informed of the matter. Therefore once more to-night, consider our text: "As the Father hath loved me, so have I loved you." Did and does Jesus Christ in the same way love his own? Look at the first martyr,—Stephen. He carries the cross of his Master. He is not only hated, but he has to die. There is no escape. The stones fall heavily on him, bruise him, but before he departs he is permitted to look into heaven and confirm our position. Jesus is there in his Father's place, pleased as his Father was, to see his beloved bride bruised and die. He is not going to help nor prevent nor save from the stone. Neither is he indifferent to the affair; his first one following him in the fiery furnace. No, he stands up, looking earnestly on the scene below, pleased to see bruise after bruise inflicted; pleased to see his body mangled, his blood shed, pleased to see him yield up his Ghost in death, and then (not before) receive him into rest and glory. The Martyr History all through tells the same tale—tells the fact he loves the same way as his Father, and will continue to do so till he comes.

When we look at the connection in which our text stands, He tells them about suffering all through; is even trying to comfort them with this very theme. Friends, it is no use to play Christians; it is no use for you to expect eternal happiness because you believe he died for your sins; if you do not suffer with him, if you are not made like him, you will have no part with him in glory. For when he bought us with his own blood, he put this down never to be altered; first the cross and then a crown. Let me earnestly tell you that all your Christianity outside of Jesus is worth nothing at all. Here a man needs to count the cost before he starts, and if willing, you have the Master's will revealed in your Bible. Obey all his commandments, and he will in due time, little by little, lay his cross on you. He will not forget you. He loves you as his Father loved him. He loved the saints gone before us, for he is the same to day, yesterday and forever. And you will find that his cross is sweet, his chastening pleasant, and in itself worth more than the pleasure of sin for a season. I said in the beginning, if we compare the actions of those who love the loved ones, find the actions alike, then the cause, which in this instance is love, also is alike; therefore it is true, "As my Father hath loved me so have I loved you. Abide in my love." Amen.

THE PRINCIPLE OF OUR FATHERS.

BY SILAS GILBERT.

BEING interested in the principles of our ancient fathers in the church, I have eagerly read what they have done in council as far back as we have any Minutes, and some reliable history much earlier, of which I present here from the lips of Dr. Franklin. He speaks of a persuasion of people who had committed themselves by publishing their faith in a needless impudent manner to the admissions of new convictions of duty, even when set before them from future experience and reflection. To furnish an example of what he deemed a more prudent course of conduct, he relates an interesting conversation he had with one of the founders of the sect of "Dunkers." The brother referred to (Michael Weffare) complained to Franklin of slanderous representations of the principles and practices of the church. Franklin remarked that such was the usual fate of new churches, and suggested that to put down calumnies they should publish their articles of faith and rules of discipline. Brother Weffare replied that they had once thought of doing so, but had concluded otherwise, for the reason that when they first formed their society, God had been pleased, as they believed, to give them light enough to see that some doctrines which they had deemed truths were errors and that others once deemed errors were truths; that further light had been by degrees imparted to them, and that they were now sure their spiritual knowledge was perfect. They feared to put their faith in print lest their brethren, and still more, their successors, should feel so restricted thereby as to reject new light, and thus perhaps arrest their advancement in the truth.

The above history presents to our minds the great desire our Brethren had at that early age for the truth and for the development of spiritual knowledge. It presents to our mind a truth that it may be beneficial for us not to let pass unnoticed; that is, the care which they used not to put any hindrance in the way of their successors, so that if it were possible for them to drink deeper in the fountain of truth they could to do so. Compare this characteristic of our Brethren one hundred and forty years ago by coming down through the channel of our Conference for the past hundred years and see how beautiful they have left open the way for profound research of divine truth, and have not made the policy which they recommended to carry out the principles of Christ and propagate his cause, infallible, but they are left to conviction of duty as new duties present themselves. I close by asking the reader to study the principles of our ancient Brethren.

BOILS AND ULCERS.

BY DANIEL BRIGHT.

PHYSICIANS all agree upon this psychological fact that boils and ulcers are of a purifying nature to the human body. To have a few large boils which discharge an amount of pus and decaying matter from the system, though they may be extremely painful yet they are of great value. Had the blood not purified itself in that natural and external way, the patient would have to undergo a severe, if not, perhaps a fatal disease. But I am no M. D. nor a psychologist, to go in more detail on this subject. I do not intend to dwell on boils and pus discharging sores on the human body in this article, but especially on the "boils" and "ulcers" on the mystical body of Christ. What do you say? Will the reader inquire boils and pus discharging sores on the body of Christ, ready almost to denounce the expression as being ecclesiastical and me a blasphemer. But, kind reader, only follow me on a little further.

When I say boils and ulcers, I have reference to such men as Col. Ingersoll, Tom Paine, and all of that type. When I say "mystical body of Christ" I have reference to the historically and outwardly professing of Christ. "The body without the spirit is dead." Will Ingersoll deny this? So is faith without works. But when the spirit and the body are together, then it constitutes a living being, and this is the case with the body of Christ. Christianity is not dead. There is life there yet. Though it has at some places (the rich congregations) exalted itself, "sat in the window" of their own light,—"science falsely so called,"—and Paul having been so "long preaching" Christ and him crucified, they sunk into a deep sleep and fell from their loft and are taken up dead. But if Paul were here filled with the Holy Ghost, he would even fall on them kindly, and lovingly embracing them until there was heard a "shaking among the dry bones," sinews and flesh would grow, and breath come upon them, and he would say, "Trouble not yourself; for his life is in him." Acts 20: 7-9. But we must admit that there is a large portion of professing Christians who are Christians only by name. In their breasts and in their practices they are infidels. These constitute the natural part of the mystical body. But we must also admit that there are Christians who both believe and practice Christianity. These constitute the spiritual part of the body. Now that Ingersoll does not tell many very unpleasant truths about these cold professors, cannot be denied. And as the life in the human body is what feels the pain the flesh is heir to, so with this. These cold-waxed professors care nothing about what these Ingersolls say, but it sorely grieves the true believer that his holy religion should be so evil spoken of.

But now to the point. Some years ago I thought very hard of these Ingersolls, but by the kindness of a very dear friend I received better light on the subject. I could now shake hands with them. I love them dearly, yea "painfully"—as one loves his enemy. Matt. 5: 44. I consider it all joy to meditate on them and their work, as one counts it all joy when we fall into divers temptations. James 1: 2-4. (Read this quotation, ponder on, and practice it carefully.)

Col. Ingersoll and all his colleagues are upon Christianity what boils and ulcers are on the human body. My friend said that "Bob was rotten in his top brain." As the boil feeds on the impurities of the human body, so these feed on the corruptions of Christianity. It is said that Mr. Ingersoll's character is irreproachable; that he is an honest, moral man. To this I have no objections. Neither do I wish it to be understood that I intend to attack his character, but I declare him before the whole world to be like unto pus-discharging sores, who feed only on the impurities of the body. Like the buzzard, he feeds only on the lifeless, half-decayed part of Christianity. In the late war in the South, these birds were considered of great value. They devoured the unburied carcases, and it was against the law to kill one; so by all means do not destroy Mr. Ingersoll. Let him feed on his well-selected food, and discharge his offensive excrements in his eloquent lectures, until he himself and also his hearers become disgusted thereat. Perhaps he may some day learn the fact that he is thereby building himself up to be only an offensive being before God and man. My soul's desire is that the Holy Spirit may follow these remarks and penetrate the truth into his inmost soul, so as to convert his buzzard like appetite into the feeding desire of the dove, and tell the skeptical world that there are miracles wrought yet in this nineteenth century—even that of transforming a buzzard into the harmless dove, and healing the "leprous man," that his boils and sores become again "like unto the flesh of a little child." 2 Kings 5: 14.

In conclusion I will yet say that it were well for the mystical body of Christ: when all the "boils" were externally. But I am convinced that there are a great many internally—those who confess Christianity and practice infidelity. A boil is foreign substance; it does not belong to the body, and it is nourished by the excretions which the body throws off. Hence if only all the boils were on the external—would confess their infidelity and join their ranks, Christianity would soon be healed, and adorned as a bride for her husband.

Dear reader, though these "boils" pain us, nevertheless let them have this effect: that we purify ourselves from all corruptions by God's grace, and our blessed religion will, shall, and must prove a success. Amen.

WHAT SPIRIT ARE WE OF?

BY CHARLOTTE T. BOND.

WE are now approaching the most important crisis in the history of our church. Every one must now come to a decision. It will be made manifest of what spirit we are. If the spirit of Christ dwell in us we will "be kind to one another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us." But if we are controlled by an evil spirit there will be "bitterness, wrath, anger, clamor, evil speaking, and malice" among us. Can we not easily decide to which of these classes we belong, which of these spirits have a controlling power over us? Are we doing our duty towards our Brethren without "murmurings and disputings"? Are we exercising the fruit of the spirit: love, joy, peace, long suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, and temperance? If we are, we need have no fear but we have taken the right course, and sin has no more dominion over us. Let us continue in well doing, no matter what strife Satan may get up among us. God knows his own, (Even the hairs of your head are numbered, and ye are of more value than many sparrows") and he will guard and protect them from all danger.

Ever since the creation, Satan has been busy; he has had his armies at work. The first one he has had in his employ was the serpent, and since that time he has always found some way to carry on his work. Now he is working in the church, and we very much fear he has gained a pretty strong hold in it. What the result will be, we must just wait patiently and see. And if we ever did need to pray to be kept from temptation, we need it now, and constant prayer should ascend to God to deliver us from evil.

PEACE.

BY G. A. SHAMESGER.

PEACE, peace, brethren say; but there is no peace. They tell us to be calm—sheathe the sword and let the matter die. What! shall we retire from the conflict, leaving the hydra-headed darling of perdition fattening in our midst? Never. We are for war. Not, however, a war of words. There has been plenty of word warfare. Just now we want something more effective. We reflect, "Can it be possible that there is no power on earth to set things right?" The answer ever comes, If the church of the living God is on earth, there is. I repeat it: we are for war. Not with brethren, but with error. If brethren will be the vehicles of error, we know of no better way than to switch the train. WE CANNOT COMPROMISE; WE NEVER WILL. And we never will withdraw until the truth has prevailed. Wielding the sword by the arm of love, we want to leave nothing unsound. Zion's welfare has long since called us to DO, but we chose to WAIT. Eternity will find untold numbers "just waiting." God spare us from supinely sitting down while "The pillar and ground of the truth" is being undermined. "Awake thou that sleepest," arise, put on the armor, and help. Slowly, the mighty are getting up; it makes us feel glad that there are some who are not ashamed of the Nazarene. Let us with a oneness that is terrible, lift the banner of heaven and keep it from under the feet of the erring.

ROBINSON AND MODERN BAPTISTS, WHEREIN DO THEY DIFFER?

BY JAS. EVANS.

LIKE modern baptists, Robinson was a single immersionist, but not an inveterate opposer of trine, like many of the present day. In his days there were few if any advocates of trine immersion who wrote in the English language, hence no virulent opposition was called out against it. The Baptists were then contending for immersion and against infant baptism, and as they found so many trine lads in the great chain with which they attached themselves to the apostolic age, they could not afford to cast a veil over the ancient testimony in favor of the threefold action. Trine immersion did not then stand in the way, hence we find no Rays denouncing it as "blasphemous."

Robinson is a far more reliable witness for the truth than Baptist writers of the present day. The latter tremble for their ark and are ready to shout "great is Diana of the Ephesians!" They are interested parties and no fairness can be expected at their hands. Not so with the former, he was not fighting the single immersion battle; but for believer's immersion only, single or trine.

Let us then hear a little from him again. Remember he was a single immersionist; for he claims very absurdly and in the teeth of his own testimony that in the primitive church there was 33 trine immersion. Yet, in justice to him, he does not expressly say this. He says: "In the Book of Acts there is no mention made of trine immersion," p. 53. Neither is there mention made of wine in the communion, and it is doubtful if reference is made to the communion at all in Luke's narrative. The breaking of bread mentioned in Acts may have been common meals partaken of when the Brethren met together, or as we would say, they brought a lunch along and all partook and thus ate their meal with gladness and singleness of heart.

Luke tells us simply that the converts were baptized, and the commission tells us how it was done.

But now for Robinson. "The word baptism is confessedly Greek, and native Greeks must understand their own language better than foreigners; they have always understood the word baptism to signify dipping," and therefore from their first embracing of Christianity to this day they have always baptized, and do yet baptize by immersion. In this case the Greeks are unexceptionable guides, and their practice is, in this instance, safe ground of action. Chap. 3, p. 17. Robinson could not consistently oppose trine immersion for he knew it always was the practice of the Greeks from the beginning and yet is. "Tertullian," he observes, (p. 18) "the first Latin father, said that baptism was observed with great simplicity (homo in aqua demersus et inter paucis verba factus). The man being bowed down was dipped, a few words being said. The mode seems to have been this, the administrator standing in the water and putting his hand on the back part of the head of the candidate standing also in the water, bowed him forward until he was immersed in the water, pronouncing in the meantime the baptismal words, by which he characterized him a Christian. Every body, who understands Latin, i. e., knows how the Romans understood demisso capite de missovultu, demissis oculis, and the like."

In Robinson's day, as well as our own, some agreed that water baptism ought to be set aside. It was said that a few of the early Greeks had it so. But, he says, even if this could be proved, did not the whole Greek church use trine immersion, and of them one single church (Antioch) contained 100,000 souls. The Greek dissenters all baptized, and particularly the Ennomians, who denied the trinity and rejected the trine immersion of the established church, (p. 58) Query: Why do not the Baptists claim these Ennomians as their legitimate ancestors? Perhaps this is the reason, the Ennomians had not fallen away so much as to make the candidate fall backwards like those who came to seize the Savior. John 18: 6.

Speaking of the church of St. Sophia in Constantinople, built by Constantine, he says, "Everything in the church goes to prove that baptism was administered by trine immersion and only to instructed persons," (p. 75, ch. 14) On page 75 he says, "All the ancient Greek rituals have intended catechumens for the subjects of baptism and trine immersion for the mode." Speaking of Basil, he says, "It seems clear that the homilies of Basil on baptism were addressed not to Pagans old or young, but to the children of Christians, whom he calls the church; that the Greek church of those times did not force a profession of Christianity on their children, but conducted them to baptism by instruction and argument; that baptism was administered by trine immersion, and that as the sermons of their bishops were intended to persuade, so the lessons for the day read openly in the church were intended to explain and enforce the subject of baptism. Robinson thinks that the sermons of the ancient bishops on baptism, could not be preached to a modern congregation except Baptist assemble, and there they would be heard in raptures for their singular propriety and beauty." Well this is refreshing after hearing so much concerning the corruptness and apostasy of those ancient bishops. Whatever may have been their faults, it seems that Baptists even would go in raptures over their baptismal sermons, so remarkable for "singular propriety and beauty." But alas! we are doomed to disappointment. Let us imagine Basil preaching a baptismal sermon in Mr. Ray's church. The venerable bishop says:

"Two things are proposed in baptism, to put an end to a life of sin, lest it should issue in eternal death; and to animate the soul to a life of future sanctification. The water exhibits an image of death, receiving the body as into a sepulcher.

2. The spirit renews the soul and we rise from a death of sin into a newness of life; (Here Mr. Ray begins to feel uneasy and scarcely can refrain from shouting "popish blasphemy!") this is to be borne from above, of water, and of the Spirit, as if by the water we were put to death, and by the operation of the spirit brought to life, (water regeneration almost escapes from Mr. Ray's lips)

By three immersions and by three invocations we administer the important ceremony of baptism, p. 77. What Baptist goes in raptures now? The singular propriety and beauty of the sermon is gone, and the great archbishop is now ranked with "ignorant Darkards." No Baptist assemblies would now go into raptures over such preaching, because it subverts their practice and modernizes them, and refuses them a place among the early Christians where they may hide themselves.

REJOICETH NOT IN INIQUITY.

AMONG our most cherished memories is that of a Christian lady who would not listen to an evil report; who would say at once to the gossip that brought it: You may be mistaken; there may be some explanation to this matter; we had better not talk about such things even if we knew that they are true. Hasn't that person any noble or amiable traits of character? Hasn't he done some good that we can talk about? It is a great deal better for us to converse about pure things. If there is really any corruption in our community tainting the air, we had better bury it as soon as possible. The sight and smell of it will do us no good. It may do us and our children a great deal of harm. I don't want any body to talk about the faults of others before my little ones. I don't want them comforted in their naughtiness by hear-how-naughty-other-people-are. And now suppose, instead of talking about these folks and getting our hearts set against them, we go into our closet and pray for them.

The spirit of that lady would banish gossip, with all its blighting influence, from society. — Vermont Chronicle.

FAITHFUL IN LIFE OR IN DEATH.

DE then faithful, said the Master, to the B tempest-tossed, battle-scarred warrior, "even though it cost thee thy life."

We are not to be faithful simply when skies are clear, seas calm and foes driven from the field—when it costs nothing. We must be faithful, even though our life pays the forfeit. Persecutions, as a terrible flood, were to come to those to whom the above language was addressed. Fire and sword were to go forth desolating on the right hand and on the left. Fear none of these things, saith Jesus to the disciples, who were to be severely smitten by the fierce storm. Be faithful to me, to the vows taken upon you; and although the body may fall, the spirit, robed in immortal garlands, shall rise to live and reign forever.

The spirit of God will not dwell in a divided heart. We cannot feel the pleasure of devotion while the world is our delight. Not that all pleasures are criminal, but the closer union we have with the world the less is our union with God.

FALSEHOOD is never so successful as when she baits her hook with truth. No opinions so fatally misled us as those that are not wholly wrong; as no watches so effectually deceive the wearer as those that are sometimes right.

QUESTIONS.

Oh! why are our spirits listless,
And why is our faith so weak,
And why do we miss the blessing
That is promised to all who seek?

Oh! why is our service listless,
And why are our hearts so cold,
And why do we lack the vigor
Of glorious saints of old?

Oh! why do our footsteps falter,
And why are our lights so dim,
When Jesus has bid us watch them,
And let them burn brightly for him?

Oh! why do we live forgetful
Of our home in heavenly light,
And suffer the earth and its business
To shut out from our sight?

Oh! why are our tongues so silent,
And do we shrink away
When we ought to be joyful and ready
A word for our Master to say?

Oh! why do we lose the sunshine
Of fellowship with him,
That would lift our spirits upward
Above earth's shadows dim?

Let us ask ourselves these questions,
Let us ponder them well and deep,
God help us to shake off the power
That is halting our hearts to sleep!

Let us hurry awhile with Jesus
Apart from earth's hustle and strife,
And review in his presence the filling
That darkens the years of our life.

And oh, to walk nearer the Savior
In communion close and sweet,
And to find fresh strength and courage
At the gracious mercy seat!

And there let our hearts linger
Till our hearts are suffused with love;
Then impelled by a zeal untiring
May we work for the Master above.

HAPPINESS AT HOME.

WE never get tired of talking about that which is good, and which tends to elevate the human family. It is a fact beyond doubt, that if happiness exists in every home in our land, we would see it manifested in all society.

To be happy at home is the ultimate result of all ambition, the end to which every enterprise tends. It is indeed, at home that every man or woman must be known, either of his or her virtue or felicity.

It certainly was the purpose of God, for man to be happy, when he created him. Divine Revelation informs us that God created all things for his own pleasure. Rev. 4: 10, 11. Therefore, God connects his own pleasure with man's highest well-being. But God cannot take pleasure in wickedness, neither shall evil dwell with him. Ps. 5: 4.

Hence our earthly homes should be made a sacred spot, consecrated to the work of God our Father. Let the effectual, fervent prayers be made to God through Jesus Christ; for it is only by prayer and supplication that we can expect the blessings of God to rest on our families.

By true living, love will flow from heart to heart, and the truest action and utterance of family sympathies and affections, confessions and forgiveness will be exchanged from one to another. There will then be no occasion for ill or unbecoming conduct in the family—no rudeness in manners and speech and action. Parents will not be hasty or fretful in their way of addressing or reproving their children. Children will not, therefore, forget the respect and honor due to parents.

Dear parents look well to the home circle; for your children's future destiny depends much upon the influence you exert at home, and of the kind words spoken, and prayers offered up in their behalf.

I will add, that the way to be truly happy, is to rely with confidence on the Word of God, believing that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. He has commanded that piety be first shown at home. Hence by a diligent observance to this command, you may expect a happy home where the spirit of God richly dwells, and all is confiding love.

NOTHING LEFT FOR BY-AND-BY.

PARABLES are less used than formerly to teach moral truth. But they are often well calculated to arrest attention, and make the erring condemn themselves. For instance, this method was here wisely chosen to expose the folly of the young in wasting their time and means, and seeking only amusement.

"I should like very much to hear a story," said a youth to his teacher. "I hate serious instructions; I cannot bear preaching."

"Listen, then," said the teacher: "A wanderer filled his traveling pouch with savory meats and fruits, as his way would lead him across a wild desert. During the first few days he journeyed through the smiling, fertile fields.

"Instead of plucking the fruits which nature here offered for the refreshment of the traveler, he found it more convenient to eat the provisions which he carried with him.

"He soon reached the desert. After journeying on for a few days, his whole store of food was exhausted. He now began to wail and lament, for nowhere sprouted a blade of grass. After suffering two days with hunger and thirst, he expired."

"It was foolish in him," said the youth, "to forget that he had to cross the desert."

"Do you act more wisely?" asked the teacher, in an earnest tone. "You are setting forth on the journey of life, a journey that leads to eternity. Now is the time when you should seek after knowledge and collect the treasures of wisdom; but the labor frights, and you prefer to trifle away the sprightime of your years in useless, childish pleasures. If you act thus, you will, when wisdom and virtue fail you, fare like that hapless wanderer." (N)

Do you hesitate? Is the bargain bad? Is wisdom better than gold, sweeter than honey, a way of pleasantness, a path of peace? Then go, sell all thou hast and buy it.

"ALMOST."

KITTY had a birthday present which pleased her very much indeed. What do you think it was? A sassa-wood work-box from Uncle Curtis, with scissors, needles, and everything it was proper for a complete work-box to have. It was a great spur to Kitty's love of sewing. She did not like a needle and thread before; now, she did. And Kitty undertook to hem a dozen towels. A dozen towels was a pile to be sure; but she well knew it was only a stitch at a time; and a stitch at a time is perfectly within the compass of a small child to do. Kitty was on the first towel, doing it all herself, even to turning down the hem, and had hemmed half of one end when she took it to her papa.

"Papa," she asked, "is not that hem even?" Papa took his eyes from his newspaper, looked at the hem, then looked at his little "Kitty" as much as to say, "Do you think it is, Kitty?" "Don't you think it is almost even?" asked Kitty, guessing his meaning, and blushing.

"What is almost even?" asked papa, stroking his little girl's hair.

"What is almost even?" repeated Kitty, with a look of surprise in her blue eyes.

"Yes," answered he. Kitty thought a moment, and her father waited for the thought.

"It is uneven," replied Kitty. "Yes," replied papa; "almost even is uneven. The hem is uneven."

"Then it must be picked out and done over," said Kitty, with a disappointed hitch; "I want to do it right."

"Of course," replied her father.

"Papa is setting himself up to be a great judge of hems," thought Kitty. She did not believe her mother would be so exact. However, since she asked him, she could not do less than act on his judgment. Kitty went back to her window seat, picked out her stitches, which nobody allows to be pleasant work, and carefully began the second time. She did not dare to go beyond two stitches before coming to show it. Her father took the towel in his hand and examined the hem.

"This is even," he said; "the stitches are in a straight line; the work is done right."

And Kitty, I am sure, was more pleased than if she had succeeded at first; and much more than if her father had thoughtlessly said, "very well," when it was done ill.

"Kitty," said papa, taking her small hand in his, "there is a straight line running through life, and one side of it is the wrong side; on the other is the right side; and everything is on one side or the other. There is no such thing as almost right. Almost right is always wrong; aim at good is bad; almost true is an untruth, a lie; as almost even is uneven."

"Yes, papa," Kitty added, "and an almost perfect lesson is an imperfect lesson. I told the girls so. Because if you miss once, you lose your place."

"Exactly so," said papa; "and as God is a truth-loving God, he likes to have things called by their right names. He wants us to see the truth and speak the truth; and, in order to do so, we must be exact in our words and expression." (N)

FAITH AND SCIENCE.

IN our issue of Aug. 9th, will be found a communication, entitled "Willor and His Work," from a beloved brother. It evidently was written with a view of infusing a sense of steadfastness in faith on the part of all who walk by faith and not by sight. And would have some additional words of praise for him if he did not teach me an important lesson, that concerning the work of men instead of the men themselves. What matters it who writes the truth? Is the truth less truth because it comes from the mouth of Ahab instead of Solomon? God once used a donkey to rebuke a prophet. Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings he has ordained strength. Unfortunate is he who essays to be a critic and then wastes his ink and paper on the man instead of setting up a beacon for the benighted and way-faring men.

The first or primary meaning of science is knowledge, "penetrating and comprehensive information." It "embraces those branches of knowledge of which the subject is ultimate principles, or facts explained by principles, or laws arranged in natural order." If, therefore, science is knowledge, and faith is the result of knowledge, may not a knowledge of the Scriptures be justly termed, an acquaintance with revealed science? To comprehend the Word—to know Christ as revealed to our understanding in the Gospel is to be in possession of Bible science, and to possess faith in all of its soul-life power.

The second definition of science is "the comprehension and understanding of the truth." The first was to possess penetrative and comprehensive ability to discern the truth.

The third meaning of science is thoroughly demonstrated—brought to the fuller comprehension of the mind. This is the point where our eyes see and our ears hear.

The fourth definition of science is "knowledge duly arranged" or systematized. In arranging knowledge, scientists cannot account for all the phenomena that appear along the illuminated line, and in their desire to assign a reason for every phenomena, they enter the speculative field. Too frequently these speculations are accepted as the truths or basic principles, hence the confusion which arises in the minds of many who are seeking simple facts.

Gibbon says: "The works of speculation or science may be reduced to the four classes of philosophy, mathematics, astronomy and physics." I use the word speculation in the sense of conjecture—the absence of facts upon which to base a theory or assumption. Were philosophers and scientists contented to make known only the facts and principles which they discover, science would be held in better repute by all; but it is the conjectural which ebbs the student of revelation and entices the weak to turn aside from faith.

The fundamental of faith is knowledge, and knowledge comes to the mind in an orderly form, so that the faith must be orderly whether it be dead or alive. The theories about the, in explicable phenomena is science, falsely so called. True faith receives that which it cannot understand in revelation and creation as well that which it can. And while we may learn a great deal of nature, when we have reached that point which is mysterious to us we should receive it all just as readily as if it were all plain to us. Therefore, let every Christian carefully guard his faith amid the conflicting theories of materialistic evolution. If old theories in mathematics, physics, philosophy and astronomy are found to be erroneous, it need not affect the Christian; for saving faith is not founded upon these. Salvation from sin is not predicated upon one or all of these, but upon a knowledge of Christ and obedience to his requirements.

Nor is there any conflict or disagreement between true science and Revelation. Only where men begin to conjecture, then Bible science, Bible faith halts and refuses to walk arm and arm with the speculative. That Wilford Hall has demonstrated that some of the old theories are wrong, is clear to my mind. But we want every man to read and conclude for himself. Mr. Hall has only done what he was able to do; and he will receive a reward for every good act in behalf of the human family; but he cannot save anybody in heaven; but his labors may, now and in ages to come, be the means of lifting many a vessel over the sandbar of unbelief. Trust in God; never lose sight of Christ; hold up the old banner; and seek more and more to be led by the Holy Spirit.

M. M. E.

THERE is an old proverb which says, "It is better to have the good-will of a dog than his ill-will," but Christ did not so think when he said, "Wo unto you when all men shall speak well of you!" Some men's enmity is no water to the plant—giveth it increase rather than diminution.

TOOLS.

THE following, from one of our exchanges is full of thought to the purs in heart:

Some men wish a great deal of work done which they cannot or will not do themselves. Hence they require tools. The man who plans the enterprise is out of sight. His wires are laid; one puppet moves here, another dances there; all seems spontaneous to the uninitiated glance; but the penetrating observer discerns that every movement is in obedience to the one controlling, planning, wire-pulling, central will, and that all tend to put power in one man's hands, or money in one man's pocket.

Politicians want tools,—men that can browbeat, and cheat, and lie, and swagger; or who can "crook the pregnant hinges of the knees, that thrift may follow fawning." Demagogues and office-seekers want tools,—men who will help them to gain the longed for loaves and fishes, and take their reward in crusts to gnaw and bones to pick. Sectarious want tools,—men who will go the dirty work of heresy-hunting, part-striving, and unbolvy wrangling. Chief priests andcribes want tools,—men who for a shekel apiece, will cry, "Crucify," as loud as they ever cried "Hosanna;" and who will testify that "His disciples came by night and stole him away," or tell any other lie if paid for it, for the glory of their sect, and the good of their "cause." Ecclesiastical rulers want tools,—men who will caucus for them, vote for them, and quarrel for them; men who will put them into offices and keep them there, and justify their doings, whether right or wrong, and for the space of about two hours cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," whenever their craft is endangered or their crookedness exposed. Aspirants for greatness want tools,—editors who puff them by publishing what they have paid for, and telling what great things they have done for the Lord, or for mankind; associations to honor them by passing spontaneous resolutions of approval which they have written themselves; societies to vote them salaries and gratuities which they do not care to have publicly announced; committees to whitewash them when their affairs are investigated; respectable men to lend them their names and influence without inspecting their proceedings; influential persons to stand on their side whether right or wrong; and good, honest, easy souls to follow them handily, do everything they are told to, and pay the bills.

Such are the tools. The person who uses them lays his plans. He button holes this man, who feels honored by the attention. He walks arm in arm with that one, who seems taller than ever before. He suggests something to a third. He appoints a fourth on a committee. He gets a fifth to make a nomination, a sixth to present a resolution, a seventh to support a motion, and a host of others to "be sure and be on hand." Everything then runs smoothly; business is done spontaneously; the manager has abundance of time for patriotism or devotion, and at the end he stands at the head of all, with his friends, relatives, partners, and poppets, honorably and conveniently arranged around him. He has done nothing to effect all this. It was all providential. If disaster occurs he is not blameable, for he did nothing; and his tools, A, B, and C, wake up at last to see what mischief they have wrought, and seek themselves with the thought that they mean it for the best, and then retire and give way to a fresh lot of victims.

A COMMON ERROR.

THERE is in the world, a common mistake that needs severe censoring. It is the constant habit of appealing to God in defense of a position that may have been taken, regard less of its correctness. A person can hardly do anything, for which he is thought worthy of punishment, but that he at once appeals to heaven in imaginary proof of his righteous ness. He lays his hand on his heart, points his finger towards heaven and exclaims: "I can trust in God; he knows that I am right, and the day will come when I will be vindicated." Another person is found in error by the church, the decision is against him, he grows stubborn, and refuses to hear the church. In "holy horror" he lifts his eyes to heaven de claring he is right and the whole church i- wrong, and God knows it. He tells how hap py he feels to think his God makes no mistakes, etc., etc. Do such persons imagine that a great God is foolish enough to sanction all their lit tle whims? Is he going to justify all their mistakes and sanction their rebellious notions? Is God going to support one's stubborn, rebel ious man who will listen to neither the church nor reason?

Appealing to heaven and calling on God at such times amounts to nothing in the minds of thinking people. The greatest thief and hypocrite in the world can do that, with all the ac companying sanctimonious feelings and looks. It is no fair way of deciding a matter. God has put his laws in the Bible, by which all are to be judged in the last day. That is the standard to which we should appeal, turning to chap ter and verse in defense of the right.

Then there are those who have seen dark hours just because of their own conduct and lack of judgment. They get into trouble and while laboring to defend themselves, try to make it appear that they are the chosen ones appointed by God to perform a certain great work. The work to them is great, just because they happen to be doing it, and of course they conclude that God will sanction it. Thus things go until we find nearly every ism, plea for reformation, and fanatic movement claim ing a special mission from God. Let the world improve, let new improvements be inaugurated and reforms advocated, but let them rest on their own merits and not on a falsely-claimed mission from heaven.

J. H. M.

Success is the world's criterion of merit; fidelity is God's.

INSURANCE.

NO sooner are reformers successful in sweep ing away an evil than another with its hydra-head arises to inflict misery upon the human soul. Perhaps one of the worst evils now pressing itself upon the people is life insurance. So unscrupulous have some wicked hearts become that they resort to insuring very old people and then hurry them to the grave by one of the many ways to effect that. The Independent thus sends an arrow:

The life insurance thugs of Pennsylvania deserve a sharp course of law. There have been scores of cases lately in which old or sick men have been fraudulently insured for the benefit of the parties insuring them, and in some cases their death has been hastened, for the purpose of getting the insurance. In one case the man to be benefited by the death of the person insured, gave him all the free liquor he would drink, and so hastened his death. Another old man of eighty was insured, and then sent on dangerous railroad tracks, in hopes he would be run over. This is in the civilized North, but chiefly, we understand among the immigrants.

RUNNING A PAPER ON TRUST.

THE following, to the mind of an editor, at least, speaks volum e of expostiation: Richard Smith, of the Cincinnati Gazette, at a recent meeting of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, narrated some of the Gazette's experiences when it discarded the credit system of subscription. "There were," he said, '$80,000 due on the books from weekly subscribers alone that had been accumulating for a third of a century. Of that amount not 80,000 cents were collected. We employed a man and a good horse, and sent him off on a collecting tour. In six months the horse was dead, the saddle and bridle were pawned for keep, and the man returned a considerable balance against the company. We sold the books for old paper and called those credits lost."

Wm. E. Dodge, of New York, has sent his son to Turkey to work a reform among the people—to turn their attention to Christian principles. He backs him with a million of dollars.

LET him that standeth, take heed lest he fall, is the expression of revelation. The apostle does not condemn him that standeth, nor yet because he thinks he stands, but simply wants him to take heed lest he fall. It is a friendly warning.

A BROTHER, zealous for the whole truth, writes to the B. AT W.: "Long may you live to herald the glad tidings of peace and consolation. God bless your labors and keep you from becoming high-minded or lifted up, but in lowliness of mind serve him all the days of your life." We appreciate this godly wish of our brother.

LET all the people praise thee, O God, yes! let all the people praise thee.

Do you "take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake?"

The President had a relapse last week, and his recovery during the week was very critical. His recovery still hangs in the balance of doubt. The people are stirred anew, and millions of hearts are longing for his restoration to health.

The trustees of the Boston Public Library report that while works of fiction should not be entirely withheld from those who may be safely trusted with them, they should be restricted and denied in all cases to the young." If fictitious works are calculated to influence the passions and pervert the morals of the young, they can do no good to those who are old.

The Tonkers have swallowed the Materialistic philosophy of Mr. Hall. Are they Materialists, too?—Baptist Flag.

Elder D. B. Ray is the author of a book entitled, "Text Book on Campbellism." Does it therefore follow that Dr. Ray has swallowed Campbellism? Or has he swallowed Infidelity because he has a book treating against Infidelity.

It is unwise for any member to conclude that the church is going to destruction. Such a thing cannot be. Earth and hell and the devil cannot overthrow the church of Christ. Are not our fears of the failure of the church generally based upon local troubles—or difficulties near home? We must look at the whole church—east, west, north and south before we pass judgment. And it might help us a little to get around over the Brotherhood before we make up our decision. There is peace and harmony in hundreds of congregations today; and so for us, we have no notion of saying everything has gone to ruin because a dozen of congregations are quarreling over some unimportant matter. God will take care of his people.

We have known people who could never forgive or get over an injury, however trifling; and not content with brooding over it in secret, would make it the theme of conversation with stranger or friend, month after month and for years. Such people are to be greatly pitied. They wrap themselves in serge, and drink of wormwood and gall, however pure a fountain may sparkle beside them. And yet they are well-meaning people, often; only they generally give one the impression that they are a trifle wrong on their side, too; because there is something wonderfully invigorating in a clear conscience, in the thought that we have done the best we could, and that God knows it. Forgive, says the Savior, and ye shall be forgiven.

HOMEWARD BOUND.

AFTER leaving Pueblo I fixed myself for a comfortable sleep, there being but few in the car and vacant seats abundant. However, being quite unwell, sleep came not, though it was nearly 3 A. M. On through the darkness, over the wide-extended plain we were rapidly borne eastward. Suddenly at 4:30 A. M., our train came to a full stop out on the prairie, and upon inquiry as to cause, we were informed that a bridge ahead was on fire. No effort was made to put it out, though it had made but little headway, and water was plenty in the creek, buckets and ropes on the train. About 8 o'clock the section men came along and put out the fire. At nine, or about five hours after our arrival at the burning bridge, our company and baggage were transferred to La Junta, eight miles to the east. Instead of carrying us on to Kansas City, it pleased the powers that be, to set our train on a side track where the sun beat down upon us and the fierce warm winds of the south fanned us all the day long. This was not on the bills when we left Pueblo, and there was a pretty general feeling of indignation, for it was evident that the company desired to save wear and tear by "doubling" the train; so we were detained until nine P. M.

Our train has been doubled, and now we are being carried eastward at the rate of twenty miles an hour. Arriving at Cottonwood, there was another detention of seven hours on account of a freight wreck. This out of the way, all hoped that the journey might be completed without further delay; but hope must have something real for a basis, and what we wished for, failed us again; for when we arrived at Topeka we were informed that a freight train had been wrecked near Lawrence and that we escaped what might have been a great destruction of life. It seems a rail had been misplaced with a view of throwing our train off the track but a freight train coming along two hours ahead of us, received what was intended for our train. Seven hours waiting and then we were again on our way. There were eight cars filled with people, and had the wicked persons been able to carry out their plans, there is no telling the extent of the catastrophe.

We were sixty hours traveling 634 miles—usually accomplished in twenty-seven. However, all seemed thankful we were through and that we had escaped perhaps death or the loss of limbs or health.

And now something about Colorado as a health resort. I am inclined to regard that climate as not the most suitable for individuals who are advanced in asthma and consumption. Many go there with the hope of a speedy cure, but they are so far consumed by disease that life is cut short by the sudden change of atmospheric influences. One man arrived in Denver on Saturday while we were there, and the following Tuesday his corpse was sent home to Illinois. He went there consumed, with the hope of a speedy cure, but alas! death, the fell destroyer, claimed him immediately. We saw others who were going rapidly, and who might have enjoyed home and friends a while yet had they remained with the loved ones. But for those who are not too bad with the disease, the climate undoubtedly will be beneficial. The air is dry and rare, and one feels the change sensibly; still care must be taken lest in the pleasant surroundings and loveliness of the scenery the body is not overtaxed and the physical impaired by too vigorous exercise. One may get too much of this at the start.

Tourists should wear woolen clothes, as a little exertion will cause one to perspire freely, and then there is danger in suddenly cooling. The result will be mountain fever or rheumatism—two things that can be prevented to a great extent by being careful.

Colorado is a healthful State; and for scenery and surprises hard to equal. Its mines seem inexhaustible, but they do not lie on the surface, he who wants them must dig; yes, work hard through rocks; for by Rocky Mountains, is not meant sand and clay mountains.

By irrigation, good grain is raised, and as thousands are to be fed in the cities and mines, a ready market is found for all kinds of produce.

Personally we feel benefited by our visit to, and stay among the mountains. The mineral waters were to us a healing balm, and our only regret is that we cannot have them every day. The water is as clear as crystal; cool and delicious to the taste, and if you prefer the water warm, you can have it, for it, too, has a pleasant taste.

Now a few words to tourists and emigrants for their special good. The meals west of the Missouri do not tempt an epicure. Vegetables grow scarce and scarcer, and meats tough and tougher, while fruit is like the rind of diamonds on wings. Therefore take with you a satchel, so that when there is an "aching void" and nature calls for a supply, you can answer immediately; as trains stop for refreshments at all sorts of unearthly hours. And, then, too, after you have dined, you can spend the "thirty minutes for refreshments" in walking the platform, which is quite a relief after being on the train several days.

Having set in order what you shall eat and wherewith ye shall be clothed, you should next make provisions for mental food; not that you will care to read very much, for the scenery will attract your attention most of the time, but it will be a slight protection from the tireless newsboy. You can display your books conspicuously and it will operate as a defense; otherwise you are at his mercy, for "against such there is no law."

Money should also be a matter of consideration before you start, as every one "out west" seems to think you own a gold or silver mine. The amount asked for every article is in inverse ratio to its value, and prices will soon relieve you of all the extra ducats you may carry with you.

Having made due preparation and gotten under full headway, you can view the landscape o'er and o'er and keep a sharp lookout for prairie dogs and the promised antelope, the actual buffalo trails, and the bleak hills as you approach the mountains, which when their full glory bursts upon you, will make your soul leap with joy and your tongue exclaim, amid the wondera, "Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord!"

A GOOD EDITOR.

A GOOD editor, a competent newspaper conductor, is like a General or poet—born not made. On the London daily papers the historians, novelists, poets, essayists all have failed. We might say all, for after a display of brilliancy, brief but grand, they died out literally. Their resources were exhausted. "I can," said a late editor of the Times, "find any number of men of genius to write for us, but very seldom one of common sense." The "thunderers" in the Times, therefore, have, so far as we know, been men of common sense. Nearly all successful editors have been men of this description. Campbell, Bulwer and Disraeli failed. Barnes, Sterling and Phillips succeeded.

SOWING GOOD SEED.

A NOVEL mode, for this country at least, is projected by a Boston citizen. He proposes to start from Boston with a carriage, laden with Bibles, Testaments, tracts and papers, and travel through New England and Canada to Montreal, sowing the good seed along the way. The carriage will be fitted up to be used as a pulpit, whereby a crowd can be gathered, and so by preaching, singing, and distributing and selling copies of the Word of Life, it is hoped that much of the good seed may be sown by all waters. On the other side of the Atlantic, it is said Gospel carriages have been moving about for years. Thousands on thousands of Bibles and Testaments have been scattered broadcast over the country where they otherwise might not have gone. There are many people who do not go to meeting to hear the Gospel, and some, alas! who do not hear much of it when they do go. This plan contemplates bringing the Gospel to the very doors of the people that all may hear the voice of peace, and become reconciled to God.

A MEMPHIS, TENN., paper not over reverently says: "We've heard of people who got 'religion,' but religion got the negro who stole the value of an itinerant Methodist minister at Holly Springs. He selected it from among a number of others, on account of its weight. He carried it, puffing and sweating, in a scorching sun, eight miles before he discovered that it that it contained nothing but Bibles."

THE WORD "OUGHT."

I HAVE felt a special interest, of late, in the manner the word "ought" of John 13th is being treated both by those who advocate the practice of feet-washing, and by those who do not.

It would seem that upon this one word, the main point of difference is made, and may I not well say, that here, and on it alone, does the whole contention hang? Thus allowing that this word "ought," is dependent on no others of the sentence, but is the leading word in giving force to that expression of Jesus.—But just here I wish to say that it is this the conclusion, and that here, it is agreed the contention shall rest, I for one wish to dissent, at once from that view, and for this reason: That word in this case is not a leading word of that sentence, but is conditional and depending upon some other for its force.

In my view, the whole force of this command or duty, and that of the word "ought," also, depend upon something which has just preceded, and here it obtains its weight. And my conviction is, that our Master put the force not on what he said, but on what he did.

Here is where I think the mistake by divines is so often made. The word is examined, whilst the act is apparently overlooked. I grant that the word "ought" does carry with it a force, from which we cannot easily run away, and my wonder in this case is, why any follower should fail to come right up and admit it's claim. But the full force of the word in this place rests, where its author put it, and that is on the fact that he had washed their feet—not upon what he said, but upon what he had done.

Now here is, where I think the whole force of the commandment and of every word in it, rests,—upon his act, and that act is our example.

It is said, too, that this clause is conditional and I grant it; but ask, how is it such? What are its conditions? Why, it seems to ask for a fact, viz: "If it is a fact that I, your Lord and Master have washed your feet,"

This they all knew to be true. Not one of the twelve could doubt that. And here, upon their silent assent to that fact, they now bear from him, what he regards as their duty to do another. "You ought also to wash one another's feet."

They all had to admit that one condition, for they could not do otherwise, and that was the act for them to do, and the example for them to follow. Now here is the one condition, and it is a simple fact, which even a Voltaire never doubted, and it could not doubt. And I ask of all, Does any man, or can any one doubt the statements of John 13. I think they cannot.

Now let this fact be admitted by any, or by all Brethren, or any others, and then comes the word "ought" in all its force, and with a sweep takes every creed and ism from the platform.—Let any believer admit the one fact that Jesus washed his disciples' feet, and be here at once marks out his own duty; and that duty is to submit to and to engage in the service of washing one another's feet. And he may as well try to run away from the fact, as to try to run away from his duty. He can run away from neither.

And, if he seeks to be like his Savior, he will try to run away from neither the fact nor the duty. For Jesus did the deed, thus making it a fact, and upon us, his followers, has he enjoined the service, as a duty, after his own example; and, he says, that we ought to wash one another's feet, for he had washed their feet. And if he could take the form of a servant to fallen man which he did in washing their feet. And if he could take the form of a servant to fallen man which he did in washing their feet and not passing by a Judas either, surely we can take that form also, and wash the feet of one another. LONDON WEST.

THE BLIND BIBLE READER.

THIS is one of the numerous small and unpretending, but useful missions efforts in the city of London. A few friends have for some years employed Mr. Baylis, a Christian blind man, as a Bible reader. His mission is to read the Scriptures from Moon's raised type, in the courts and lanes of the metropolis.

Starting in the morning with his reading desk before him, suspended from his shoulders, he takes his stand in a back street or lane, and, feeling the words with his fingers, he commences to read aloud, and men, women and children gather around him and listen.

After reading a few verses, it is probable that some one will make a remark, or ask a question; or if no one does so, the reader will make some remarks which elicit a reply, and thus a religious conversation is commenced. When the reader thinks he has stood long enough in one place, he passes on to another, and pursues a similar course.

In addition to reading the Scriptures, he carries portions of the Scriptures for sale at a low price, and during the last year he sold nearly nine hundred of these, and read the Scriptures in more than seven-hundred streets, courts and lanes.

But is there any need for doing this? Cannot people read the Bible just as well at home for themselves? And are there not plenty of opportunities for those who wish to buy? The Bible says, "Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters," which means, I suppose, that it is wise and right to use any and every means that may attract the attention of men to spiritual things; and this blind Scripture reader does attract attention, and probably reads the Word of God to many who do not read it for themselves, and induces many to purchase portions of the Scriptures, who would not otherwise do so.

But does any good arise from this effort? We do not know in how many cases the Scriptures thus read are imprinted on the memory, and either at the time or afterwards are the means of preserving from the power of temptation, of encouraging to the exercise of patience, of stimulating to the performance of duty, of leading to prayer and trust in God for aid and direction, or even of the conversion of the soul. We do not know what good influence the portions of the Scriptures sold, may have on the purchasers, or on those to whom they may give them. But in addition to these unknown results, we have in the report of this work now before us some cases of decided, spiritual results, and some others, in which there is reason to hope that good has been done. And we know who has said of his word, "It shall not return unto me void, but it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it."

Sometimes persons come to the reader and ask him to read for their especial benefit; and there are occasions when the portion read seems just suited to the circumstances. Take the following instance:

A woman came up to the reader, and suddenly placing her hands on his book, said, "Give me a word to think about."

He turned over the leaves, till he came to the fifth chapter of Isaiah, and then read, "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them!"

The woman trembled, and said to him, "You know me then and my failings?" He replied, "No, you are a perfect stranger to me."

She then asked, "How is it then, that you read that verse that speaks of my very sin?"

And then, with much feeling she added, "Well it is very strange. I suppose it is God that sent the verse to me," and she burst into tears. Recovering herself she asked for the chapter and verse, shook the hand of the reader, and said, "God bless you!" and left.

When in London in 1869, the writer met this Mr. Baylis, and was much interested in him as an earnest, Christian man, and he is glad that he is now engaged in this missionary work. His salary of $5 per week is paid from a fund raised especially for that purpose.

LET no one suppose that by setting a good part through life, he will escape scandal. There will be those even who will hate them for the very qualities that ought to procure esteem.—There are folks in the world who are not willing that others should be better than themselves.

It is the ordinary way of the world to keep folly in the helm.

Some Encouragement From Your Dear Sisters to Brother Hope Across the Briny Deep.

After reading Brother Hope's trials and his great zeal that he has, all for Christ's sake, with many tears, we concluded to help him to preach all we can, if not in word and deed, with hearts full of love for the good cause, three of us started out, and went to all we could, gathering up the pennies from the rich and poor, the lame and the blind, all with willing hearts and many tears and blessings for the good of the far-away brethren, from the different professions—from the Brethren to the Catholics. All are God-tearing people. We had no cause to shake the dust from our feet against any one of our people, so kindly were we received every place. As "little drops of water, little grains of sand, form the mighty ocean and the pleasant land," so we hope the pennies will grow to dollars, and the little brother will grow up to be a godly man. Would say to sister Hope, be faithful in your trials and afflictions, and if you continue so doing, a crown of life shall be your reward, with all God's valiant soldiers.

Notes and Jottings.

According to previous arrangements, the committee appointed met in council, with the Ashland city church, Aug. 3rd, closing its labors on the 6th, and encouraged to find their report accepted by all the dear members. The Ashland city church is of recent organization, and their troubles would seem to be above that which it was their lot to bear. But we were happy in feeling with them, that a brighter day seemed to be dawning. Brother N. H. Miller has recently gone among them, taking charge of the church and school. Also editor of the Gospel Preacher. We were sorry to find him surrounded with such difficulties amid such grave responsibilities; but glad to see such a willingness on the part of the Brethren to give him their aid.

We humbly pray that he may enjoy grace, sufficient, to fit him for his day and trial. His case of the transient membership in the school, the duty imposed upon him as one of the principal elders of North-western Ohio, are also duties of no minor importance.

By appointment we met with the Berlin, Pa. Committee upon the 9th. There were no pains spared, to render all comfortable, by brethren and sisters of Berlin. The committee were cared for with special kindness at the house of H. R. Holsinger. I was impressed, with the marked and seeming humble piety of sister Holsinger; but was sad to see her grief upon the reading of the Committee's report. May Psalms 23 be hers.

As was previously announced, a stenographer was secured so as to publish a full report of the council. The Committee also met a resolution to hold the council public. The Committee demanded, that the church suspend their purpose of a full report, also rescind their resolution of holding the council public; upon which they would proceed according to the usages of the brethren; which, they as a church entire, refus'd to do. After deliberating to some length, on the above preliminaries, the Committee without further investigation, withdrew, made out their report deciding that H. R. Holsinger shall not be held as a member of the church. The Committee upon presenting their report, found it rejected by all save one, their aged elder.

The meeting closed with sad hearts, many in tears. May the omnipotent arm of Jehovah more effectually intercede in behalf of precious, wayward souls, is our humble prayer.

Fresh Crumbs.

Yesterday we had our Harvest Meeting, in Elder John Etter's barn. It was "a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Bro. Jacob Longenecker, from the Spring Creek Church, was present, and did the principal ministering. His text was novel for the occasion and inexpressible original, pithy, and pertinent. "Thou fool," were the awful words from which he drew many solemn and instructive lessons. Luke 12: 20. His subject was our responsibility in the use of temporal gifts, and we had all to feel ashamed at our practical atheism and self-idolatry and mammon-worship. "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof," and "ye are not your own, for ye are bought with a price," are two complementary texts, and practically harmonized make christians. "Thou fool" is a Divine denunciation that has a more universal application than most of us suppose. To escape it we must "walk as Jesus walked," "eat and drink to the glory of God," and "present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God which is our reasonable service." To indulge our carnal propensities with false luxuria, make "a God of our bellies," cheat Christ and his treasury by gratifying artificial body and soul-diffing habits, and converting into trinkets and futilities and show what should be given to the cross for the conversion of the world, is unchristian and anti-christian enough to evoke the stunning malediction, "thou fool."

Our Harvest Home was well attended, souls seemed hungry for the living word, many tears were shed, and fresh consecrations vowed to live to Jesus, "the wisdom of God, and the power of God," and the Everlasting Love incarnate.

Brethren David Etter and David Smith continued the subject in the same strain, and old father Jacob Keefer kept the audience in tears for a few minutes by what will doubtless prove his last harvest sermon. His white locks, his thin, solemn, heavenly visage, his low, tender, Christ-breathing tones, his magnetic tears and soul-searching expostulations, were like the overshadowing presence of Divinity. Our elder closed with a glowing outburst of gratitude for the harvest and the meeting, and predicted speedy rain on the long distressing drought which has already come to pass. All this would be only the idlest puerility, were not God the life and director of nature, the essence and energy of all physical law. He that denies christian positivism should never pray, "Give us this day our daily bread."

From Daniel Vaniman. — Woodland Church is the name given to a new church formerly a part of Astoria church, Folton Co., Ill. E. J. David Frantz and self met said church in council on Aug. 13. h. Found only peace and union existing among the members; so by the unanimous consent of all present, Jesse Dauter was ordained to the full ministry Henry Danner, and S. D. Hamm advanced to the second degree of the ministry. By unanimous consent of all present, an election was then held for one speaker, and two to the office of deacon, which resulted in calling Peter Burgard to the ministry, and Jesse S. Danner, and Benjamin Stephens to the office of deacon. After these brethren and their wives were instructed in the respective duties and responsibilities of their respective offices and their consent obtained to serve in them, to the best of their ability, they all at once, twelve in number, stood up and were, by hand and kiss, received into office.

Never before have I seen such a large number installed at once, and such a pleasant unanimity of sentiment as was expressed through the whole meeting is seldom found anywhere. We pray God that they may be able to keep the unity of spirit as here manifested for then they will find a prosperous future awaiting them. — Astoria, Ill., Aug. 15, 1881.

From S. O. Larkins. — On Wednesday, July 20th, brethren John Harshberger and Jacob Hedrick, of Rockingham county, came to our place for the purpose of holding a few meetings, and to organize our church at this place. The meetings were well attended and passed off pleasantly, and I trust were beneficial to all. One was made to feel the need of a Savior and was buried with Christ by baptism, and rose, we trust, to walk in newness of life. He came forty miles to preaching, which appears like earnestness. On Saturday we had our church meeting, which resulted in the election of a speaker and a deacon, who desire the prayers of all God's people, that they may be faithful in the discharge of their duties. It was also announced that we would meet on next Sabbath to organize a Sabbath school.

Brother Harshberger delivered his farewell address to the little flock which has gathered here, as he expects soon to move to the far West. He has our prayers that he may have a safe journey and that God may spare his life through many years to come to herald forth the glad tidings of salvation, and the glorious promises which are contained in his Word. It seems hard to give up those who have won a place in our hearts, yet God's will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Brethren come and help us; the harvest truly is great and the laborers are few. We do what we can. All have not the "gift of healing."... It is quite dry here, and the waters extremely low. — Larkins' Factory, Va.

From H. Shomber. — The Brethren and sisters of the Peabody congregation are in reasonable good health and alive in the cause of the Master. Weather is warm. Crops not so good as was expected; but have nothing to complain. Plenty for home consumption and some to spare. Our meeting-house is enclosed, and one coat of paint on it; is not finished inside. We have over $300.00 to pay the latter part of August, and need money very bad. So far, only two churches responded to our call for help. Brethren, remember we need it bad. I trust those having the oversight of churches will give this matter in mediate attention. O how much you can do for us. Dear brethren, I think we are worthy. The Savior fed 500 persons, and the disciples were astonished how much they had left. I think that is the way with a great many brethren—they would have so much left that they wouldn't miss it. Why not try it? If we do miss it a little here we will be repaid for it tenfold in the other world, yes a hundredfold.—Peabody, Kan.

From I. Zigler.—Very warm and dry now. Last Saturday (the 6th inst.) lightning struck a tree within eighteen yards of Newdale meeting-house while the Brethren were preaching the Harvest or Thanksgiving sermon. No other injuries done.—Broadway, Virginia.

From John Frits.—Would say to the B. AT W. and its many readers that this town is just building up on the new railroad that is just finished, and the cars now running. About a dozen, or so, members are living here. We have our regular meetings here in town. We would be glad to have members come and settle amongst us. We have no doctor as yet. We would be glad to have a brother doctor well recommended come and locate here. (It not a brother, some other good man.) I think he could do well with a small drug-store and build up with the town and country. We are living in a country hard to beat in the West. Come and see for yourself. For the present it is warm and dry, yet the crop prospect is pretty good.—Diller, Jefferson Co., Neb.

From J. S. Flory.—In No 29, B. AT W., we notice a short communication from a correspondent in this State, and he, like many others before him, speaks of the rough society in a way that would leave the impression on the minds of many that society in general in Colorado is rather rough. I hope in the future correspondents will not write so indiscriminately, but be more local in an application of their remarks. As in all other States a large proportion of the people found in the mining communities are wicked and "rough," but in the farming communities—such as here where we live, the society will compare favorably with any we can find east in farming communities. Remember Colorado is a large State—has enough territory to make two States as large as all Illinois, or three as large as Indiana, or thirteen States as large as Massachusetts. Sometime ago a man in his public preaching remarked that he had heard as much profanity in Colorado in a few months as he had heard before in his whole life; but he failed to explain that nearly every day he was in Colorado, he was in the mining camps, mining towns or large cities. A man might go into the mining towns or oil regions of Pa., and stay a short time and say the same, but such expressions are unfair, they leave a wrong impression in regard to society in general or in communities where moral and religious people live.

What we have said above is simply to do justice to those portions of our State that are settled with a better class of people than is found in the mines. Again we say the agricultural portion of our State is settled with as orderly, moral, and religious people as can be found in any new State of the West. Education has a prominence equal to any State of its age, and the press are noted for culture and praiseworthy enterprise.—Longmont, Col.

From John Bennett.—Brethren W. S. Riteby and M. Clair, came to our place; held a meeting at five o'clock the same day and baptized one. Bro. Clair remained here Saturday and Sunday to hold some meetings, while Bro. Riteby and myself went to friend Isaac Leasner's, five or six miles north of Old Town, Md., and held two meetings. Had small attendance and good interest. There are no members living in this neighborhood; but I think the Lord has a people here which he will soon call out to his servants do their duty. While in this neighborhood we heard there were Brethren living near Romney, W. Va., about 18 miles from Old Town. Now the object in writing this is to open correspondence with the ministering Brethren of this part of Va. So if this comes to the notice of any of the above Brethren they will please write me a note so that I can have their address.—E'binelle, Pa.

From E. Miller.—Our Harvest Meeting passed off pleasantly; the day was fair and cool. Had quite a large congregation both A. M., and P. M. Had two splendid sermons preached. Wm. R. Deeter spoke at 10:30 A. M., and W. C. Teeter, of Mt. Morris, Ill., spoke at 2:30 P. M. Both speakers did ample justice to their subject, and we hope much good has been done by way of encouragement. Bro. Teeter also delivered a lecture to the Sunday-school scholars, which was highly appreciated. Our Sunday-school is not as well attended as it should be. I am indeed very sorry that so many of our brethren are so dilatory in their duty which they owe to the Sunday-school. The Sunday-school is certainly one of the best places to teach the children. True, we should all feel it our duty to bring our children up in the "nurture and admonition of the Lord." But how many, oh many, children are not thus brought up, and it is these that we should try to teach at the Sunday school. Then who can be so self-willed as not to lend a helping hand in this great work?... Our wheat crop is not over half a crop. But it is still well worth our thankfulness. Corn and oats and flax though are pretty good. There is considerable of fruit, too, especially apples. Health, too, is pretty good.—Pierceton, Ind.

From J. M. English.—In looking over my paper this evening I was made to think back to the time when I received my first paper, and had but one paper to read, and now I have quite a number of them to spend my leisure hours in reading the good news from the brethren and sisters. So with the church; I well remember when there were but few of us, but now we number over three hundred. We feel to thank God for the many favors and blessings he has given us, and still ask him to continue his blessings that our number may increase daily. We are made to wonder how happy our dear brethren and sisters would be, that are in the far West sending up their prayers to God that they might only hear a few sermons by the Brethren, and if they could say their number had increased to three hundred. Brethren, let us be faithful a few days longer, and strive for that expected home, where there will be no east nor west, and where we can strike glad hands together and be as one church.—Union Church, Plymouth, Ind.

From K. Heckman.—Our annual annual meeting came off the 15th. Nearly all the little band of our Father's children (in our congregation) were present; but had nothing to bring before the church; all was love and union. It was agreed upon to have our Love-feast this Fall in Cornell, Livingston Co., Ill., on Sunday Sept. 18th, at 2 P. M. We have no house for worship, consequently we have to resort to our dwellings for council meetings, and a hall for our Love-feast, as barns and sheds are all filled with produce of the earth, which God has blessed us with. Hope the day will soon come when we can build a house for worship. Eld. T. D. Lyon was with us, and gave us good counsel in his usual loving manner, and made us to feel that we were in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. The dear old brother has our best thanks, and hope he will come often.—Otell, Ill.

From James A. Baker.—As it may interest some of our brethren and sisters to hear a word from Wisconsin, we take pleasure in writing a few lines through the columns of your worthy paper. Last Spring our elder (S. H. Baker) moved from us, locating with brethren at Riv'r Falls, same State, leaving but one minister with us to carry on the great work, a brother of our elder, and also of the writer. Although brother Henry is young in years, as well as in the ministry, he tries to preach the truth as taught by our blessed Master. As a testimony of his labors, last Saturday two sisters made the good confession and were baptized the same day. More are now counting the cost. Hope they may choose the right way. Those baptized were the wife and mother-in-law of the writer.... Our Love-feast will be Sept. 10th.—Chippewa Church, Wis.

From S. A. Garber.—Brother Jonathan Beard and I met with the isolated members near Lacona, Iowa. Had two meetings. Two were baptized. Brethren traveling will please remember those members, and give them a call. We think much good can be done there.—Laona, Iowa.

From Martin Neher.—I wish to say to you that we are having very dry and warm weather now; corn is drying up. Last Saturday some rain fell in different parts not far off, but we did not get any in this neighborhood. The corn is barely used up by the dry weather and chinch bugs. It has only been without rain about a month, but the weather gauge has been as high as 109°, and at some places as high as 113° and 114°. This is considered uncommon here. What the next extreme will be, time will tell.—Monmouth, Crawford Co., Kansas.

A CITY WITHOUT DRAM SHOPS.

WHEN Greeley, Colorado, was settled, the liquor traffic—that curse of civilization—was rigidly excluded from its borders. After ten years' experience, some one wrote to the Mayor enquiring how the plan worked. Here is a portion of his answer:

"We have a population of about 2,000; we have a constable, though a man will starve on a hundred such offices, as statements hereafter will prove. We have no poor-house, no calaboose, no houses of ill-fame, nor gambling-houses. This being the county seat, the county jail is located here; but I am pleased to say this institution has been without a tenant since January 20th, at which time a prisoner was discharged from a sentence of sixty days, imposed by the District Court for petty larceny, committed in the extreme southern portion of the county, and he a stranger, not a resident of the town, the county, or the State.

"This town was organized and settled in the Spring of 1870, and the statement that since that time not one dollar of the town's revenues has been expended for the poor, should be modified, as the poor are cared for by the county, and not by the towns. There has been a resident here since October, 1874, and can state from personal knowledge, that during that time, with two exceptions, the county has never paid a dollar to assist any citizen of the town of Greeley, or any citizen residing within the limits of the Union Colony of Colorado, which embraces an area of about 120 square miles.

"Since the first of October, 1874, the county has expended $2,603.55 for the poor, including care of the sick, burying the dead, etc., and I am confident that I am safe in stating that at least one-half of this amount has been paid for the benefit of those who came here from the East, destitute and sick, and were not residents of the county or State. I am confident this light expenditure for pauperism in the county, is mainly due to the scarcity of liquor saloons; for, with a county population of 6,500, and an area of more square miles than the States of New Hampshire and Vermont combined, we have but four saloons; one at Erans, four miles distant, two at Erie, forty miles distant, and one at Julesburg, one hundred and fifty miles distant.

"No, sir! Our experience and principles have not proven a failure; but on the contrary, a decided success; and while we live, we intend to adhere to them; and so confident are our people of the continued success and prosperity of the community, under these principles, that while there may be men as blessed, or burdened with this world's goods as to be able to buy the town, he does not live who is able to buy a license to sell liquor in this town, unless he first buys the town.

"In regard to the violation of our laws and ordinances, I will say that while there may be some violations, the cases are few and far between; and I am confident do not exceed, nor even tally with the violation of other criminal codes.

"Now, in closing, I will state in brief, that instead of having a Police Court record, blackened with the trials of drunken criminals, we have no Police Court at all, and no whiskey or rum trials on our Justice's Docket. Instead of our street being blacked with drunken rows, and paved with their records, we have social and pleasant greetings, and our streets shine with the happy pat. Instead of a town filled with drunken sets, whose blackened eyes would darken the sun of heaven, we have an energetic, industrious, and intelligent class of men. Instead of hovels filled with half-clothed, malnourished children, watched over as best they can be, by poor, haggard, and care-worn wives and mothers, we have bright, happy, and cheerful homes and families, and a prosperous and growing town; all because we are not damned with the presence of the aforesaid institutions; and thus we intend to 'hold the fort.'

"Very respectfully yours,

W. C. SANDERS, Mayor.

PRAYER, AND TOBACCO RAISING.

JOHN Collingsworth was a member of the South Carolina Conference. He is said to have been in some respects a remarkable man—pre-eminently so as a man of prayer. His faith, at times, seemed well-nigh almighty. There is a story told of him which should not be allowed to pass into oblivion. On one occasion he was passing through Virginia and seeing so much land given up to tobacco growing, he became greatly stirred in spirit. In a sermon which he preached, after denouncing in unmeasured terms the wickedness, he offered an earnest prayer to God, in which he besought him to convince the people of their great error in spending their time, means, and toil in the cultivation of so noxious a weed. He prayed the Lord to manifest his disapproval of their course; by destroying the crops, then in a most flourishing state, if nothing else would convince them. During that same afternoon a violent hail storm passed through that section of the country, blasting the prospects of the Virginians for a beautiful crop. The fields were literally torn up, and the tobacco utterly destroyed.

An old, ungodly planter, who had been a great sufferer, hearing of the Methodist preacher's prayer, resolved to follow and chastise him for the evil done. Overtaking him, full of wrath, he inquired, "Are you, sir, the Methodist preacher who prayed the Lord to destroy my crop of tobacco?" The preacher replied, "My name is Collingsworth; I preached yesterday in the neighborhood, and prayed the Lord to show his disapproval of raising tobacco."

"Well, sir, you are just the man I am after. I am ruined for this season, and I have come to take my revenge on you, sir!" and at the same time brandishing a frightful looking wagon whip, with which the whipping was to be done.

The minister commenced slowly to dismount, calmly addressing the planter as he did so: "Well, if I must be whipped for it, I suppose I must submit, but take care that before you have done, I do not pray the Lord to overtake you with something worse than overtaking your crop." That thought had never entered the planter's mind. Wishing to get as far away from such a man's prayers as possible, he put spurs to his horse and galloped off with all possible speed. Would that more such prayers might be offered in these times for the destruction of the vile weed.—S.L.

SUNNY ROOMS MAKE SUNNY LIVES.

LET us take the airiest, chinnest, and sunniest room in the house for our living room—the workshop where brain and body are built up and renewed; and there let us have a bay window, no matter how plain in structure, through which the good twin angels—daylight and pure air—can freely enter. This window shall be the open of the house. It shall give freedom and scope to the sunsets, the tender green and changing tints of Spring, the glow of Summer, the pomp of Autumn, the white of Winter, storm and shine, glimmer and gloom—all these we can enjoy as we sit in our sheltered room, as the changing years roll on. Dark rooms bring depression of spirits, imparting a sense of confinement, of isolation, of powerlessness, which is chilling to energy and vigor; but in light is good cheer. Even in a gloomy house where walls and furniture are a dingy brown, you have but to take down the dingy curtain, open wide the window, hang brackets on either side, set flower pots on the brackets, and ivy in the pots, and let the warm air stream freely in. (B)

The late appalling disaster in Canada, the sinking of the excursion steamer Victoria, by which two hundred and forty persons lost their lives, it appears by the coroner's inquest held at London, Ontario, was caused primarily by strong drink. That the steamer was overcrowded there is no doubt, but, according to the testimony of the captain of the steamer and others, the disaster was precipitated by the unruly conduct of a semi-drunken crowd on the lower deck of the vessel.

He who takes his boys to the beer shop, and trusts that they will grow up sober, puts his cross-pot on the fire, and expects it to look as bright as new fire. Men cannot be in their senses when they brew with bad malt and expect good beer, or act a wicked example and expect to raise a respectable family. You may hope and hope till your heart grows sick, but when you send your boy up the chimney, he will come down black for all your hoping. Teach a child to lie, and then hope he will grow up honest; better put a wasp in a tar barrel and then wait until he makes you honey.

"Don't, oh! don't sell him any more liquor! Have pity upon us," cried a poor heart-broken wife to a romseller. "You have got nearly all we had in the world—my poor husband's character, health and reason are nearly all gone. For the sake of his poor, unhappy family, don't let him have any more liquor. 'Get out of my palace, or I'll turn you out; don't come here with your noise. I am licensed to sell.'" responded the hard-hearted rom-seller.

Another Tract Ready!

Baptism—Grace and Truth.—Eight pages.

The following we take from page fifth:

The Lord that was "full of grace and truth" sent forth His gospel, containing His doctrine, His life, His examples, His commands, for people to believe and obey. It tells of His ministry, of His sufferings, His death, His resurrection, and of His ascension; and we believe it. He did not cause something to be put into His "word of truth" that we should not believe. That would not be grace. The Lord that said, "I am the bread of life," also said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." The Lord that said, "He that keepeth my word, and believeth on Him that sent me, hath everlasting life," also said, "If I your Lord and Master, have washed your feet, ye also ought to wash one another's feet." The Christ that said, "I came down from heaven not to do mine own will, but the will of him who sent me," also said, "Except a man be born of water and of the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God."

Price 10 copies 25 cents; 25 for 40 cents; 100 for $1.00. For sale at BRETHREN AT WORK OF-

OUR PLEA.

THE BRETHREN AT WORK is an unassuming advocate of Primitive Christianity in all its ancient purity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

And maintains that the sovereignty, uncreated, unchangeable, God is the only source of pardon, and

That the victorious sufferings and meritorious works of Christ are the only price of redemption:

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and cause the resurrection of the soul:

That Jesus Emmanuel, or dipping the candidate three times face-first, is Christian Baptism:

That Fast-Weeking, as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed in the church:

That the Lord's Supper is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, at the close of the day:

That the Salvation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ;

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ:

That a Non-Conformity to the world in dress, customs, daily walk, and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian purity.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Churches should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 11: 2, 4, 5.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of visiting the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostle have enjoined upon us, and since, amidst the conflicting theories and theories of modern Christians, to point out ground that all must concede to be suitable and safe.

Single subscriptions $1.50 in advance. Those sending eight copies send $12.00, will receive an extra copy free. For each additional name the agent will be allowed ten per cent, which amount will please credit and send us the balance. Money sent by Postal Office Orders, Registered Letters, and Drafts properly addressed, will be at our risk. Do not send checks, as they cannot be collected without charges. Address: BRETHREN AT WORK,

Correspondence.

From Minneapolis, Minn.

Brethren Editors:—

Being here, visiting friends, breathing Minnesota air, viewing Minnesota scenery and seeing interesting sights, in this "great city of the North-west," I have thought that I might be able to contribute some facts of interest to your readers.

The first place of interest visited was the Pillsbury A Mills. These occupy a stone building, 115 x 175 feet, and seven stories high, including basement. Two turbine wheels of 1,200 horse power each, furnish the power that moves the machinery. It takes 300 car loads of wheat daily to feed the mill, which, when fully completed, will have a capacity of 4,000 barrels every 24 hours. Twelve English mills of belting, and 20,000 elevator cups are used. At night it is lit by the electric light and presents a novel and interesting sight.

From the roof of these mills I had a fine view of the city of Minneapolis, a city, whose population, at present, is estimated at 60,000.

Nearly mentioning the Chalybeate Springs, and the Clute Cave, let us pass to the University of Minnesota. The main building is an imposing structure, beautifully situated on a bluff, near the bank of the Mississippi, and surrounded by an oak grove. The grounds are about 50 acres in extent. In the general museum were to be seen stuffed animals and birds, and many other curious and interesting objects. The library contains about 15,000 volumes.

Minneapolis is situated on both sides of the Mississippi River, at the Falls of St. Anthony. The two parts of the city are connected by four bridges, one a suspension bridge. The name signifies city of waters, mine being Sloux for water and polis Greek for city.

There are some twenty-seven flouring mills in Minneapolis, with capacities ranging from seventy-five to four thousand barrels of flour a day, sending out two million barrels a year, which goes to all the principal parts of the world.

I have already spoken of the Pillsbury A Mills. Another deserving special mention, is the Washburn A, said to be the largest mill in the world.—It is 100x244 feet and eight stories high, the area of each floor being considerably over half an acre. Its capacity, when fully completed, will be from 4,000 to 4,500 barrels daily. Flour in these mills is manufactured by the roller process, the grain being crushed between rollers instead of being ground.

There are some seventy churches and mission stations in the city, the greater part of which belong to the Lutheran, Methodist, Episcopal, Baptist and Catholic denominations. I have no statistics as to the number of saloons and can only say that they are very numerous. Forty passenger trains and a corresponding number of freight trains leave the city daily.

Fallen Asleep.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.—Rev. 14: 13.

MATTES—Near Hatfield, Pa., July 21st, David Mattes, of dropsy, aged 91 years.

Deceased leaves one son, Bro. Solomon Mattes, in Carroll Co., Ill., and two daughters. He was born in Perry Co., Pa., and, when a boy, moved to Union Co., where he lived the remainder of his days, except one year spent in Illinois. He was a member of the Lutheran church.

BAEME—On the 10th inst., near Williamstown, Ohio, Adam E. son of Mr. and M. S. Henry Bams, aged 2 months and 18 days. Funeral services by the writer, assisted by B. W. Bradford, S. T. BOSEMAN.

KNEPPER—In Ogle Co., Ill., Alice Savilla Knepper, aged seven years and twelve days. Deceased by D. E. Price and M. M. Eschleau at Silver Creek church.

RENN—Aug. 9th, in the bounds of the Pleasant Valley church, Eva and Emma, daughter of Bro. Andrew and sister — Renn, aged 3 months and 23 days.

Funeral occasion improved by Eld. J. B. Shoemaker, in the German and Joseph Hoover in the English. These two children died only one hour apart, and were buried side by side in one coffin.

A. A. WISE.

NEWCOMER—In the White Oak congregation, Lancaster Co., Pa., July 28, 1881, cousin Barbara K. Newcomer, aged 52 years, 3 months and 7 days.

She was afflicted with consumption; both parents are deceased. She left three sisters and four brothers. United with the church, A. D. 1860, in this district. Was buried on the 31st on the old farm. Funeral services at the house of her brother-in-law, conducted by brethren Zby, Giblee and a Monnetite minister, her sister and husband and majority of friends, which are many, being of that persuasion. A large and attentive audience was, I trust, lastingly impressed with the importance of a proper preparation for death from the words: "For to me to live is Christ," etc. Gone but not forgotten. L. C. NEWCOMER.

Are you a brother at work for the Lord?

Bro. Enosh Roy returned from the East the 23rd inst.

GRANT Mahon, of Sun-land, Colorado, arrived here the 21st to attend College.

Is order to get in Census matter, considerable church news must go over to next week.

The members of the Spring Grove congregation, Illinois, are building a new meeting-house.

A LETTER from California informs us that brother Geo. Wolfe is improving some in health.

THE "Holy Scriptures indeed shall be the sole foundation of our faith."--Annual Meeting 1875.

I WILL not go into any of the strifes and quarrels around me, but work the work of the Lord.

THE "lay preacher" in the M. E. Church is J. W. Harrison. His appeals are said to be eloquent.

SENDING on postal cards for "Talks From The Field." Let every baptist send one reported by some one.

As yet another brother Moore was at Plattsburg, Mo., viewing the country and enjoying himself among tourists.

THE defective chimney will smoke. Many persons think that there is something defective about the man who smokes.

IF a church be idle, there mischief will appear, trouble arise, love grow cold and divisions ensue. Work while it is called day.

SPECIAL meeting relative to place of next Annual Meeting will be held in Solomon's Creek church, Ind., September 22nd.

FIFTEEN books of over 12,000 pages of reading matter to be given away. It is fully explained on page 527. Who wants them?

DEVELOPING BOOKS are in great demand at this place. Some of our capitalists should show their energy and enterprise by meeting a number of good losses to rent.

Bro. P. S. Garrison, of Modesto, California, nephew of Bro. 15th says that in one week from that time his son would have come to attend school at this place.

The office of Messenger and B. AT W. one year to $1.50 is now withdrawn. Both to same address but at 71. Other offers still open. See page 527 for terms.

THE Reporters a new four-page supplement of the Primitive Christian, is on our table. It is devoted to the interest of education in general and in Huntington Normal in particular.

At this writing it is regarded by persons near the side of the President that he can live but a few more days at faintest. It seems, notwithstanding the medical skill, the good nursing, and the prayers of the nation, he must go the way of all men. Sad as it may be to have a ruler stricken down in the prime of life by an assassin, let every man learn the lesson of the hour, humble submission and patience in the dreadful hour.

THE General Purpose has failed to put in an appearance at our office for two weeks. We miss it from our exchange list. Hope nothing serious has happened to our beloved Robinsonian.

The congregation at this place is the largest in Northern Illinois, having a membership of two hundred and eight. The second on the list is Wadman's Grove with one hundred and twenty-five.

THE ministers of the Dry Valley (La.) church sounded out the Word of the Lord in Centre county, and two souls heard the truth gladly, reported, were baptized, and now go on their way rejoicing.

CHARLES worked very hard, unthought, unnoticed and unappreciated. He sowed not his own trumpet, and when he did a mighty work besought the benefited person to tell no man. O what a lesson!

A MISERABLE having walked through a village churchyard and observed the indiscriminate graves bestowed upon the dead, wrote upon the gate-post the following: "Here lie the dead, and here the living lie."

Bro. Silas Gilbert, Arcaman, Ohio, under date of 20th inst., says: "Our elder (Bro. Cressel) is sick. Had a pleasant count to day. Brother Cressel's two young daughters were baptized, causing much joy."

THE lot of the Cruz is not an enviable one. He has recently received models of different weapons and engines of assassination, accompanied by a written request to select one to be used upon his own person.

FROM the Lord's servant, Thos. D. Lyon, Hudson, Ill., comes the sad news of the ill health of his wife. Sister Lyon is an active laborer in the Lord's vineyard, and we hope she may be spared many years to the church.

WE learn that J. B. Bunnough, of the Primitive Christian, contemplates a trip to Nebraska early in September. We hope he will come this way and make his trial with his presence. Do you hear, brother John?

THE Brother's Advocate will be published monthly hereafter. It will be devoted to religion, and secular news. Success, brother, and may the Advocate carry your good words of "thank offerings" and "accolades" to the people of their kind.

Bro. J. S. Mohler says of Osler county, Mo.: "It is a fine country, full of grain, timber, and fine water, being overlaid and numerous. The famous Libbards Springs are also in this county. Address A. S. York, Vandalia, Mo."

THE copy for the Grand Library Catalogue is now in hands of composition and will be rapidly transformed into pamphlet. It will make about one hundred clay-type printed pages. Bro. Lighty spent his vacation day preparing the same for this work.

BROTHER and sister Saylor left home the 23rd for Deer Creek church, Ohio. Brother Saylor goes there as one of a committee. He returned from New Jersey the 20th. The work of the former committee to Annell church was confirmed in every particular.

LETTERS and returns should always bear in mind that the address should be inscribed as well on the letter itself as on the envelope; otherwise the loss of the envelope may cause great mistakes and serious confusion. And please do not forget to put in our address on the letter.

WAZER he, (Christ) bowed his head and sank into the gloom of death that baptism was accomplished.--Bottle Plug, Vol. 3, p. 295.

This is a frank admission by Eld. Ray that Christ loved his head in baptism. The Doctor stumbles upon the truth occasionally.

Dr. H. W. Thomas of the M. E. Church will be arranged and tried in Chicago some time in September, for departing from the principles of the Methodist Church. He is charged with denying the doctrines of atonement and inspiration, and teaching probation after death for sinners.

Sister Norman in her "All for Christ" writes Jodelite, which suits though the flesh into the very bone. She was once a member of a society that positively permits all the frippery and extravagance among its members, and she knows the evils resulting from such anti-scriptural work. Let her warnings be heeded by all.

THE editor of the B. at W. is under promise to go to Le Sueur county, Minnesota, about the middle of September to "preach the Word" and edify the saints there. He has been notified to hold himself in readiness to discuss the doctrines of True Immersion, Feet-washing and Lord's Supper with Mr. Stewart, a leading Campbellite minister in that county.

Bro. T. C. Hollenberry, formerly of the Primitive Christian is living in Whiteaker, Wis. He desires a good girl to do house-work in his family, a sister preferred. Railroad fare advanced if necessary. Must give references. Now who will go to his aid? Bro. H. reported the speeches at our last Annual Meeting, and did it well, too, all things considered.

THE Brethren church is not to measure its success merely by an increase of numbers. Its strength lies in the cultivation of holiness in individual members. Sluggish in faith and rich in good works, as the Lord's standard of measurement, and to have and maintain this high position, the church must see that the Bible principles of our holy religion are retained and cherished.

A WRITER in the Minneapolis Weekly essayed to describe the "Denkards"--their doctrines and peculiarities, and amused it badly in a number of points. Brother Cyrus Walkie being in Minneapolis at the time, took occasion to correct the error. A copy of the paper containing the correction is before us, and we thank our brother for the kind notice he gives the BRETHREN AT WORK.

MINUTES of Annual Meeting 1877-1881 for sale in pamphlet-form at this office. All the Minutes of the last five Annual Meetings are not in the Book of Minutes; but they are now ready in a form to put in the back part of that book. The Minutes are indexed. They are printed from the genuine "alkali" copies, hence can be relied on. Your book is not complete without them. Price twenty-five cents, or five copies for one dollar.

THERE are good prospects for a large number of students at the opening of the College September first. Quite a number of improvements have been made in and around the buildings since the close of last term. Students who were here last term, and return, will find the old pump replaced by a new one, a large cistern at the south door, a new, large, well-lighted commercial hall at the west end of the fourth story, dining-hall re-painted, rooms cleaned and unobscured, and other improvements indicating a good purpose on the part of the proprietors to make the day of the student pleasant and comfortable.

HOME ON THE FARM.

BY S. J. DEFFEN.

O! give me the home on the farm
Surrounded with beauties untold;
The trees in the orchard are bending
With fruit that's fair to behold.

O! give me the home on the farm,
A location both healthy and neat,
Where every breath of the morning
Is laden with fragrance so sweet.

O! give me the home on the farm,
And its pleasant walks of green;
As we turn our eyes from side to side
Fresh beauties may be seen.

O! give me the home on the farm,
Away from the noisy street.
O give me a home on the farm,
And my joys will be complete.

How oft I think of the home on the farm,
Of the pleasant days I spent,
Although they were days like other days:
That were only to us lent.

I often think of the home on the farm;
Tears will unbidden start,
Because I left that beautiful home
It grieves my aching heart.

For the Brethren at Work.

FUTURE IN ANTICIPATION.

BY SAMUEL LEEDY.

The time is now approaching near
When Christ our Savior shall appear.
The Gospel's awful bidding sound
Shall wake the saints the world around.

Faithful, mothers, who toiled with tears,
Shall rise to reign a thousand years.
We learn that Christ our King shall be Through all, throughout all eternity.

The saints who live to see this time,
The blessing, yes! shall be sublime,
We learn translated they shall be,
To meet the Lord and he set free.

The thousand years when once have fled,
The graves shall send forth all the dead,
And all that lie beneath the waves
Shall come forth from their watery graves.

The judgment day will then be nigh,
And some shall live and some shall die.
The King each sentence shall proclaim,
And blessed be his holy name.

For the Brethren at Work.

GOD MY SAVIOR.

BY HARRIET BUCK.

THREE words, short, simple, but full
Of matter for thought. Words that teach us what God is and what he would have us to be; they are the humble man's pride, for they own that he cannot save himself; words that strengthen man's hope, for they speak of One able to save; words that revealed the faith of her who uttered them, and encourage us to believe and to rejoice in whom Mary rejoiced. These words could not have been uttered by a proud Pharisee, for such a one knows not that he needs a Savior. Still less could they have been the words of a careless, faithless Sadducee, for to him there is no spiritual world to hope for or to fear. They are the words of a lowly heart uttered in a lowly but a most blessed place even at the footstool of mercy. There the sinner who feels his sins to be both a crime and a stain, cries, "God be merciful to me a sinner, and at the same times looks to Jesus on the cross and cries, "My soul hath rejoiced in God my Savior," and the more the believing soul looks at that Savior the more does it rejoice. When Mary uttered these words she rejoiced in a day when she saw by faith Him whom she looked for. The long-promised One was now at hand. She had a special subject of joy personal to herself; but if she had not believed in the Savior soon to be revealed she would not have so rejoiced. It was not only the honor to which she had been called, not only the thought that all generations should call her blessed that so filled and elevated her mind; it was rather that thought in which the whole church of Christ's redeemed ones may share with her, the wonderful thought, "God my Savior,"—God himself, not man, performing the work. My Savior, not others only, but me, even me partaking in the benefits of that work. Savior, this word means so much; it tells of such hopeless, helpless need, such utter depths of human misery,—a whole world that cannot save itself. Savior, this is the name by which Jesus speaks to the heart that needs him. Savior from sin and all its consequences now and evermore. Savior from sorrow, from ignorance, from darkness, from death everlasting. God my Savior reveals the mind of God in Christ towards man, the love of God, the plan and purpose of God, the glory of God.

THE things which we enjoy are passing and we are passing who enjoy them.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AND MILLENNIAL REIGN.

BY JAMES EVANS.

NUMBER IV.

6. The mistakes and absurd interpretations of prophecy by expositors may be added to the foregoing reasons for the prevailing indifference to the return of Christ. Times have been fixed on for the appearance of the Son of Man by various prophetic writers. Many old writers settled on 1866 as the time of the end. Wm. Miller raised an excitement about 1843, and Thurman in 1875. These failures did much to prejudice the minds of men against looking into the subject at all, not distinguishing between the time of the event and the event itself. These time movements rendered one thing apparent, viz., the nominal church did not love the appearing of Jesus. Thousands of professed Christians quaked with fear at the possibility of the advent. When the time passed these professors either invented or circulated all manner of falsehoods concerning those who looked for the Savior to come in the clouds of heaven. The story of the white ascension robes was a pure fabrication. No one ever saw one but somebody else did; like the good Methodist who prayed for the Lord to come down through the shingles and he would foot the bill. One story was as true as the other.

A reward was offered by the Advent people for one well-authenticated case of a white robe, but no one ever claimed the reward. Mr. Miller was a mistaken man, but it was his desire to see Jesus that led him to misinterpret the prophecies. The movement he gave birth to was a re-action from the indifference which everywhere prevailed in relation to the Advent.

7. The belief, too had become almost universal that the world would be converted before the end would come. To expect conversion of the world was not wrong. Prophets had foretold it. All nations, kindred and families of the earth were to be blessed in Abraham and his seed. Gen. 12: 3, 22: 18. The earth was to be filled with the knowledge of the Lord and his glory. Num. 14: 21, Ps. 72: 19, Isa. 11: 9, Heb. 2: 14. All kingdoms of the earth were to remember and turn to the Lord. Ps. 22: 27. Jesus was to see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied, (Isa. 63: 11) or as it is in the German, "because his soul has labored will he see his pleasure and have the fulness," (darum dass seine Seele gearbeitet hat, wird er seine Lust sehen, und die Fülle haben.) These predictions assure us that the kingdoms of this world must become the kingdoms of our God and of his Christ, (Rev. 12: 17) and that we do not pray in vain when we say, "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." But if these hopes are to be realized this side of the coming of Jesus, then his coming would be postponed for ages to come. More than 1800 years ago the Gospel was proclaimed in Jerusalem and is the world converted yet? Before the fourth century, the church was pretty well converted to the world? How is it to-day? Is not the church like the world? To become a church member now, is to deny ourselves of nothing. We can have all the pleasures of the world in the pale of the church. When will the church with her lotteries, bazaars, festivals, shows, tableaux, and gorgeous apparel convert the world? But is there not hope for the world in our humble fraternity? How many generations must pass away before we can tell the story of the cross in the countless tongues of earth?

In a few years we have gathered about seventy souls in Denmark among the teeming millions of Europe. But are we sure that we are always to remain a plain people? Of Israel it is said "The people served the Lord all the days of Joshua." Judges 2: 7. We have faithful men who are fast passing away. Will their successors be as faithful? We hope so, still our knowledge of the past throws doubt on our mind. If our fears are vain all will rejoice. We hear "The Voice of Seven Thunders" threatening destruction to our time honored and God approved customs. We have a spurious progressive Christianity at work among us removing the ancient landmarks our fathers have set. It is a leaven which yet may leaven the whole lump. We may increase in numbers, but will we increase in knowledge of divine things and in piety? How many members have we who never talk of Jesus? How many who talk of the world and the things of the world, but their lips are sealed when the name of Jesus is introduced? How many sisters who meet together and spend hours talking foolishness and vanity out of the abundance of their heart? It is refreshing to meet with those who love to talk on the things of the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus. If we are not able to convert all who come within our borders, how long before every one bows to Jesus? We undertake to convert the world, but it may convert us first. The hope of the world's conversion depends then not on the faithfulness or unfaithfulness of the church, but on the coming of Jesus the second time to bind Satan and to set up the millennial kingdom. When Jesus uttered the great prophecy recorded in Matt. 24, if a converted world were to be a forerunner of his coming, surely he would have informed us in that discourse. The temple was to be destroyed, nations were to rise against one another; the love of many would wax cold, and there would be tribulation on Israel, the church, and the nations; the sun would be darkened, etc., then the sign of the Son of Man would appear in heaven. These series of events preceding the coming of Jesus exclude the hope of the world's conversion this side of the first resurrection and the sounding of the seventh trumpet.

But are we hence to conclude that we are to make no effort to convert sinners from the error of their ways? Not at all. We are to preach the Gospel as a witness. We are to testify to the world and seek out a people for the Lord's name. Knowing that the world is not to be converted by the church in this dispensation, we keep away from it except to win some from its ranks. The manners of the world, polite as some of them are, do not suit the church. We are to be a separate people till the Master comes to gather the wheat and burn the chaff. The tares will continue in the church until the harvest. The world will continue, too, in darkness and be ruled by Satan, till the time of restitution, spoken of by all the prophets. We have plenty of work to do in the church and in the world till the end. In another paper we will point out the saving benefit of this view of the subject.

AN ounce of love is worth a ton of power, violence, or might, for the government of either the individual or the world at large.

For the Brethren at Work.

IN UNION THERE IS STRENGTH.

BY F. E. TRAGUE.

HOW true the subject! But are we all aware of it? It really does not seem so, or why would some of us be clamoring for divisions? Would it not be much better for us all to clasp hands over the widening chasms, and say, as for us we will serve the Lord, than to try to weaken the strength of the church by separating from it? I think we should one and all labor to secure this union of a band which now is seemingly held by a very little thread. Some have so far lost their charitable and Christian-like spirits as to say "Let them go; then we'll have peace in the church!" That is wrong. We need them with us and we need their labors. We want them to stay and help us to save souls. We do not want that great work retarded. But and if they do not separate from us, what good will they accomplish? There will be no lasting union among them. By observing such divisions of the past, we are enabled to judge those of the future. A continual wrangling and quarreling for the high places, etc., while their strength can be set down as naught, except it might be a power to the world to produce haters of all religious bodies, when they see so much strife among those who want to be and ought to be leaders in the grandest cause on earth.

The world looks down (not up) on what might seem an arena for church fights or contests and applauds, for their wished-for belief is coming to pass, inasmuch as Christians and those who have been classed as our best people have fallen from their pinnacles and are struggling and striving as the worst of mortals, seemingly verifying the infidel's proposed belief that religion is but a sham. This is a true picture, and now dear brethren do you wish to be numbered with such? Do you wish to produce the lowest and vilest of sinners instead of saints? Then your way is open before you, only withdraw and behold your work! Oh, how much better it will be if we all cling together in unity! Then there will be strength which cannot be shaken by the whole of Satan's followers.

As long as the world stands and disturbing elements who have never put on Christ. I entered into this body we will have a noble one. But it does not get outside of the church very often, to be rolled around and tumbled under the tongue by the world, so it does what it finds itself in a weak band of followers. Besides the fear we have of the separation of some of our old leaders there are others who intend to remain with us, who also cannot starve, for we know that their works are but feeders to evil and evil ways, who progress in the wrong direction, and clamor for articles of apparel contrary to the approbation of our Savior, in order to progress more and more in His love for Jesus, and beg for the "plain hat," (at Stitz's instigation we fear) and for a general laxity in dress, etc., and a few urgent appeals for discipline here only.

Dear brethren, those of us who have really put on Christ do not want your "plain hat" (or any other kind of hat either). We want Jesus, and what can also be an honor to Him as well as emblematic of His spirit, spiritless, I fit the neat and pure white cap for a covering. If we wear that, His and our good is not evil spoken of, nor is it regarded as same despised, as it is by those who have not put on Christ. The matter where we are, is not a matter of ing light or dark, but of putting out as soon as a candle, and leaving of the wearer who is not a member of the Light. You say "the same is a certain number of hypocrites, and they will be just as long for that reason, but I do not desire to bring forth such a number of hypocrites. When you condemn them, you are a false delay, "that is, they are many hypocrites in the church, therefore I will not join in with you." Truly they have an equal right to be in a church. A large number of the members who are so anxious to get the "plain hat" did not take of it, and I think it will be plead for, and beget for by a number of our women-brothers through the press, who if they could not have found a better foundation to build upon, it is better not have had it at all. Accept of it? What will you propose to do to correspond with it? The "plain hat" follows, frizzled hair, and the devil's innumerable deceptions. Now, you say, and hold up your hands in horror; but my dear advocate, it will inevitably lead to that. As the poor laborer's flag carriage called for anything else that he possessed to be exhibited and rewarded to correspond with it until he became so involved that everything had to be sacrificed to save him from the prison for debt; so will be the end of the church, if we let one of those sins come in, it will lead us on and on, and at last end in destruction. We young members are enthusiastic in the cause of Jesus. We want to labor for him. Will you turn our best powers into working for something that will finally destroy us? Think well, dear brethren, before you advance any more of your bad doctrine upon us. We are willing to adopt the plain cap, the plain dress, etc., for we are not afraid that it will lead us to harm, but we confess we are in doubt as to the "plain hat," etc. Let us all resolve to strive for Jesus, not for the devil from whom all these evils come. We cannot serve two Masters, but we can unite and labor for the good, the strength, the unity of the church, and finally reap our reward.

For the Brethren at Work.

A WHISPER FROM THE WILDERNESS.

BY C. H. RALEBATCH.

To our well beloved Brother Hope:—

ANY ability incapacitates me to write with comfort, but the joy you have inspired by your recent communications to BRETHREN AT WORK, well up and out spontaneously. I am in the wilderness, subsisting on locusts and wild honey; the best place and the best food, no doubt, for my training in the life-wrangling. The dear, blessed Paternity of our discipline, turns the bitter into sweet, and makes the rod of chastising bud and blossom with "the precious fruits of righteousness."

The church in Denmark is the Smyrna of the nineteenth century, blessed with tribulation and poverty that bloom and ripen into joy unspeakable and riches immeasurable. There was no possibility of joy to the world until God Himself assumed humanity and absorbed its miseries and woes by vicarious suffering; no possibility of wealth and exaltation until the All-poor and Lofty One of Eternity became poor and despised and abused and accursed, "that we through His poverty might be rich." For a dandy to preach this Jesus is both ludicrous and wretchedly sad. For a lover of his luxury, a time-server, a pandering to the flesh, an honor-seeker, to preach the crucified Godman, is a contradiction over which devils chuckle and angels weep. Of course angels weep on due occasion, and God, too, only it is a weeping of which our tears are but a gross, far-off type. The great effort of the chief apostle's great soul was to "apprehend that for which I apprehended of Christ Jesus;" "to know nothing but Jesus Christ and Him crucified." "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." For such a man to appear before the public in the paraphernalia of the flesh, and preach the cross and pretend to glory in its reproach would be like preaching mouseticism after the order of Thos. Kumpis, and at the same time be a glutton and a wine biber, and a sybarite, and clutch the shining dust of Cesar with the grasping and greediness of an infernal miser. No, ten hundred thousand nonillion times no, and each no reverberant with God's seven thunders, or seventy times seven: we want Christians to preach Christ, and not such as make a mockery for the cross flaunting all over with the insignia of carnality. The cross is not an empty symbol, and Christ is not the minister of sin, and lust and holiness are not synonyms. To be a Christian is to be Christed, Divinely incarnated, ver, omet. As certainly as the indwelling of God is a reality, and the cross its highest and only saving representation, so surely is a flesh-pampered, lust pleading, pride endorsing religion a fatal delusion. Fashion-trappings can never represent Christ; neither can the plainest exterior serve as a substitute. The Cross means more than thou wood, Christ means more than man, baptism more than water, and dress more than covering. The Christian life will not necessarily unfold in a round coat and broad brim, but it cannot otherwise than express itself. And whether the ears of an ass and neck of a giraffe will grow on a sheep, or the tail of a peacock and the neck of a heron on the dove, is a question which even an idiot can answer. The Divine order is immutable: "everything after its kind." God begets only in the image of Emmanuel. The whole Christ life is one of flesh crucifixion, not for the sake of material maceration, but for the destruction of that deeper self which employs the physical to indulge its depraved propensities. Equally plain it is that our simple costumes will not atone for the many sins it covers.

Preach and live the Logos. Let this suffice for your whole theology, your whole religion, as text for your whole ministry. "Walk as he walked," in the light as God is in the light, and you will live and preach "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." A God-possessed, God-expressing soul will, by manifestation of the truth, command itself to every man's conscience in the sight of God." 2 Cor. 4: 2. This is the testimony of Jesus by the Spirit in and through us. This is Christianity. This is the power that draws all men to Jesus; the power of sacrifice with a God-like motive, and an aim high and broad and grand as His Eternity. For such a Christ, and such a destiny, such an endless rapture and God-sharing exaltation it is well worth while to "crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts," and to glory in every event and providence that helps us to such a sublime consummation.

Brethren and sisters of Denmark, and "all the Israel of God," we have a Redeemer of whom we need not be ashamed, although He is "despised and rejected of men," betrayed, spit upon, and crucified by many who profess to be His disciples. We welcome His humiliation, and "for the joy set before us we endure the cross, despise the shame," sustained by the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," which will overbalance and obliterate "our light afflictions which are but for a moment." "He is faithful that promised;" let us also "be faithful unto death, and He will give us a crown of life." Let us make Heb. 12: 1-11 our life-index, our life-study, and our life-expression.

INFLUENCE.

BY JENKIE MYERS.

PEOPLE sometimes hardly realize what influence they exert, or they forget that their way of thinking, speaking, and acting, can affect others. Very often the intellectual individual does not know the power he possesses in so great a degree until he wakes suddenly, as if from a stupor, to find his opinions, his examples, his actions, have moulded the heart and brain of one or more individuals. Our influence is either for good or evil. What care should a man practice that in an unguarded moment he does not influence the young for evil! We all go to intelligent persons for advice, and listen to their opinions with believing ears. Such persons know everything the young think, and they will for that reason be entirely governed by such an individual who believes as the young. As we grow towards the age when most of our belief melts into this air,—when we have reached the age where no delusory beliefs can cling, O then must we not look back and think of the advisers of our early days—how their examples and precepts have influenced our life? A life that we can only live once; a life that to every individual being is everything; a life which we one and all can make good and useful by our actions; a life which may carry sunshine into many a home and brighten many a heart to whom the word "home" is unknown. Therefore it should be the duty of all who influence to any degree their fellow-creatures to see that they can never be reproached for advice wrongly bestowed, for influence wrongly exerted.

When we look at the different opinions of men we sometimes perceive that that which we took to be diamonds is but paste. Paul says: "Let no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers in word, conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity." 1 Tim. 4: 12. Let us strive to influence others in the ways of truth and be the means of bringing souls to the knowledge of the truth, and may we so live that when we have passed it in this stage of action, our words may be inscribed in the hearts of others that their time cannot erase, and that we may be permitted to enter the gates of the celestial city that is prepared for all the sanctified and redeemed.

ABOUT FEET-WASHING.

BY J. T. SEHR.

THE following conversation took place a few days ago, between the writer and an aged brother, who speaking with regard to the ordinance of Feet washing the following questions were asked:

"What plea do the different denominations set up for not observing this ordinance?"

"Pardon me, but I can give no answer to your question, except a few:

"How is it that you are united with the Brethren?"

"Altogether united."

"Did you ever leave your church before you united with the Brethren church?"

"Yes, for almost forty years I was a member of the Presbyterian church."

"Did the church which you held your membership in, observe the ordinance of Feet washing?"

"No, it did not."

"Will, now, what plea did you then set up for it?"

"I had no objection, and I did not read, or get one, nor was I ever preached at; consequently I did not know that such a thing was needed in the New Testament until I loved it preached by the Brethren."

Had the minister of his church (like Paul) "set himself to deplete the whole counsel of God," he would have been better pleased. But there are hundreds of churches who profess Christianity who do not equally love it. Then why were any of our greater efforts made to make known the gospel, in countries where it is so much more extensively needed?

WORSHIP.

BY D. ROWLAND.

WE are taught to admonish one another in in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs. Col. 3: 26.

Since this is the instruction of Holy Writ it is a part of divine worship, and to be practiced in the congregation of the saints when they assemble to worship the great God of the universe.

We are instructed to praise God for all the gifts we receive from his bountiful hand, and as some are gifted with tongues, let them speak with known tongues, so that at the giving of thanks, the unlearned can say amen.

Paul says, "I had rather speak five words with my understanding, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue. He also says, 'I will pray with the spirit, and I will pray with the understanding also.'" 1 Cor. 14: 15.

If anything is revealed to one, let him speak, for the spirits of the prophets are subject to the prophets. 1 Cor. 14: 32.

We are taught if we desire wisdom, to perform God's will, we shall ask Him who giveth liberally and upbraideth not. We need not come to God with excellency of speech, with our language spoken according to the rules of our best grammarians, to be acceptable with God; but we must come with the spirit of holiness, desiring the blessing we ask, and God will hear us.

We have a case of a Pharisee going to the temple to pray. He fluently thanked God that he was not as other men are. He even thanked God that he was not as the poor publican who was worshipping at the same time. Hear what Christ said, "I tell you the latter went down justified rather than the other."

The publican prayed with the spirit. So it is in all our worship. Our singing is to be done in the spirit and in the understanding also. We need not argue that all who sing in our meetings, sing with the spirit and the understanding; for spiritual things are spiritually discerned. It is needless for us to say that the unlearned in the classics of modern music, (but who are born of the will of God, hence children of God,) cannot sing with the spirit and with the understanding also.

We dare not argue that Paul and Silas did not sing with the spirit and the understanding, when they were cast into prison; but we can say they were unacquainted with our modern styles of singing and music. Neither can we say that the old fathers in our Brotherhood did not sing with the spirit and the understanding, for if we do, we say they did not worship God acceptably, hence were not the children of God. While it is not objectionable to understand the dividing of music into measures, and pitching tunes just right, in fact, being acquainted with all the conveniences of modern singing; we claim it is not essential to salvation.

Paul says, "speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." Eph. 5: 19.

At the present day much of our singing is done to make melody in the hearts of others. But Paul says it is to make melody in our own hearts. If singing with the understanding means that the music must be according to note as composed by our modern singers; then there are but few who praise God acceptably in their worship.

Paul to the Colossians tells us to sing spiritual songs, singing with grace in your hearts to the Lord.

This is the true idea to have grace in our hearts. Paul and Silas had grace in their hearts, and were worshipping God acceptably. And so at the present day, if we have the grace of God in our hearts, we will understand what the design of the sentiment of the song means to teach, and will worship God acceptably whether or not we understand what is meant by a sharp or a flat.

Singing with the understanding has more in it than mortal man can reveal. Just as the spirit intercedeth with God in groanings that cannot be made known, let us remember that the height and depth of God's love is for the unlearned as well as for the learned:

USING TOBACCO.

BY OLIVER SIMS.

THE habit of chewing or smoking tobacco, is generally formed when young. This is the time of our lives when Satan succeeds best in alluring us into sinful habits.

Boys, somehow, get the impression that tobacco has some merit in it; or that it will in some way have a beneficial influence on them, or make them more manly.

This is a delusion, for its effect to the contrary is too visible to be contradicted. I do not believe there are many who, after using tobacco any length of time, will deny its injurious effects.

Tobacco plays upon the nerves, and anything that artificially excites them will, after the effect of the stimulant is removed, leave them in a weaker state than before. No doubt old tobacco users enjoy a good smoke or chew of tobacco while its effects last upon the system; but the penalty of its use is too severe to justify any wise person in indulging in the habit.

I believe it is sinful for Christians to use tobacco; because it is contrary to the whole tenor of teaching of the Bible. You cannot harmonize it at all with the pure and holy precepts of God's word.

The Lord cannot look upon His children, with complacency, while indulging in so filthy and useless a habit. May we not quote some words of Paul, as arguments against the use of tobacco, which he used in denouncing certain sins of the Corinthians.

He says, "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's."

We see by this that Christians, like Christ, are to be the embodiment of all goodness and righteousness. It is not righteous for us to use tobacco, and thereby injure the body God has given us to protect and care for, and in which to glorify Him.

It is not right for us to spend the Lord's money, which he has intrusted to our care, to satisfy the demands of hunger and other necessities of life, for tobacco to get our carnal appetites and to satisfy the demands of the lusts of the flesh.

It is not right for the father to mar the sacredness of the household by entering it with an example so unworthy of his children's imitation—not saying anything about the hereditary influence transmitted to his children.

We cannot use tobacco to the glory of God, and therefore ought to give up a habit which we know to be bad, which is contrary to the principles of the holy religion of Jesus. Surely it is the will of God that we should abstain from so vain and useless a habit. He cannot be well pleased with those who dedicate the temple of the Holy Spirit with tobacco.

We must give up the use of the coveted weed, the same as we would give up anything else that we know is wrong. To those who have become strongly attached to tobacco by habitual use, and desire to give up the habit there is promise of strength from one who is able to save, and strong to deliver. Many have been delivered from the craving appetite of tobacco and its twin brother—alcohol, by this Mighty One, and many more can be delivered by asking of Him in faith, believing that He is a rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.

PRAYER.

BY LIZZIE DENLINGER.

IF we would pray more for the upbuilding of the church, and the saving of souls, we think there would be a great deal of good done among us.

We read that the "prayer of the righteous availeth much," and we think there are many righteous among us. We read of some of the Brethren who think it would be well for all to fast and pray at the same time, for the same purpose. We believe the world would see the effect of it, and join in with the people of God.

When we do not eat, we become hungry, and thirst after righteousness, that we as a body may be filled with spiritual food from on high, that we may grow in grace and truth as it becometh us.

We would that all would pray for the upbuilding of Christ's church here upon earth; that many may turn in with the offered terms of mercy, and obey Christ's commandments and his holy words, is the wish and prayer of your unworthy sister in the Lord; for God is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God.

To live without doing good is to live to no purpose; and whoever lives thus, will die without hope. God wants us to live that we may be helpful to others, and thus glorify his name. In helping others we help ourselves, and thus rise up higher and higher in the scale of manhood, and become more like Christ.

MEekNESS is not weakness. A man may be weak and meek, but he is not meek because he is weak.

BRINGING IN THE SHEAVES.

BY JAMES H. FILLMORE.

Sowing in the morning, sowing seeds of kindness;

Sowing in the noontide and the dewy eve;

Waiting for the harvest and the time of reaping.

We shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves.

Chorus—Bringing in the golden sheaves, bringing in the golden sheaves.

Go and tell the nations now in heathen blindness;

Tell them Jesus died—now no excuse he leaves;

Bid them come to Jesus, thus prepare the harvest,

You shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves.

Sowing in the sunshine, sowing in the shadows.

Fearing neither clouds nor winter's chilling breezes;

By and with the harvest and our labors ended,

We shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves.

to them, even weeping, sowing for the Master,

Thou' the loss sustained our spirits often grieve,

When our weavings o'er, He will bid us welcome,

We shall come rejoicing, bringing in the sheaves.

ALL FOR CHRIST.

WE noticed a few remarks made by Bro. S. Z. Sharp, in B. at W., No. 28, in reference to the "Sign of Authority" worn by our sisters.

My views upon that subject are precisely like brother Sharp presented it. The reason I view it in that light is because the divine Word presents it so. Hence, I believe it, and accept it; but what that sign should be, I am not prepared to say; for the written law of God does not specify what kind of a covering should be worn. But one thing we do know, that it is not fashionable hats ornamented with superfluities, neither is it plain hats; for plain hats are just as much of the world's fashions, as far as the hat is concerned, as a hat loaded down with ribbons and flowers; if you want a part of the world's fashions, you may just as well have all. It were possible that a hat could be employed as a token of authority, which we do not believe can be done; it would have to be as the brother said, "unlike those the men wear, and unlike those the worldly ladies wear." For my part, I do not see what the fashion thereof would be, for Satan, in his craftiness, has sought out all the different fashions for hats that can be imagined.

The reason we are against the hat, is because we do not believe it to be in harmony with the Gospel order. It is more in harmony with the fashionable world, and shows more of pomp and display, than it does of simplicity—like Christ.

Again, we do not intend to set ourselves up against the church as a body and condemn her, should she grant sisters the privilege of wearing plain hats; for we believe she would be justifiable in doing so for the sake of peace. We learn in divine Revelation that Paul was compelled to circumcise Titus, because of false brethren, who came in privily to spy out our liberty, which we have in Christ Jesus, that they might bring us into bondage. Gal. 2: 3-4.

We will venture to say, should the church grant sisters the privilege of wearing plain hats, providing the cap be worn also, that not one half of our sisters would accept it; for they will know that the hat and cap would not go together very well. There would certainly be quite a contrast between the two. For my part, I would not care to conform to such a style. The plain bonnet and cap are more in harmony with each other, and also fulfil the command of the apostle, that "women adorn themselves in modest apparel." Certainly the hat and cap together would be immodest, and doth not become women professing godliness, with good works. 1 Tim. 2: 9-10.

We wonder, why all this contention and grumbling about the wearing of bonnets? Sorry brethren and sisters, there is utterly a fault among you.

It is no use to say that you cannot endure to wear it; for if you can wear your bonnet every day at home while at your work; you certainly can wear it from home to church, and while at church you can remove your bonnet from your head, and then, I am sure you are perfectly comfortable with your cap on; much more so than if you hid on a hat made of straw, or some other heavy material.

Should you adopt the wearing of hats in the Summer for the sake of comfort and coolness, what would you do when the cold Winter approaches? Certainly you would not wear the hat then, for it would not keep cold out; hence it would be very uncomfortable.

Our opinion is that this grumbling about the wearing of bonnets, is more for the want of being like the fashionable world, than it is for comfort.

If there were more genuine religion of Jesus Christ in the heart, there would be less trouble about what should be worn and what should not; but all would believe and be together respecting those points and have all things common.

INSTINCT OF IMITATION.

"CHILDREN are what the mothers are." Have you ever walked through the dirty, dismal part of a city, and heard little lips utter oaths and profane words in their childish way? Dear children, are they alone to blame? Who is to blame? Little ones have sharp eyes.

A lady was speaking in a light playful way to a motherless one, of something noticeable in her father's looks. The child mistook her manner for jesting and "making fun." The little face grew sadder and sadder, soon she covered it, crept under the table, gave way to violent tears, and nothing could pacify her, for her father was as dear to her as her life.

"My teacher does so," said a child, illustrating a habit. When the teacher was informed of the scholar's remark, he was not aware of his conduct in this respect, and was glad to correct the foolish, nervous habit. Have you never seen children of different schools "playing school" together, and each one wants everything done just as "my teacher" does it? Who of us cannot remember the words and ways of our teacher? Parents, teachers, are we not eyes and ears to the little one around us? Each reader may make the application of the truth. (N.)

AN AIM.

THERE is nothing more essential to success in life than method. The young man who starts out in life without an aim, is like a ship without a helm, and likely to strand upon the first rock in his path. Method in farming is all important. There is scarcely a branch of agriculture if not pursued methodically but would prove a failure, and much of the ill success of farming is attributed to that cause. The successful farmer must have in his mind's eye the crop that he is going to raise, and the method he is going to use to produce the same, and also the kinds of stock he is going to raise, and the means he will take to accomplish his object, and the same through all the countless industries connected with the life of a farmer, without mental as well as physical application to all the details of labor on the farm, his efforts are likely to end in failure, and this doubtless applies to every other branch of business. But with well directed method, accompanied with industry, integrity, honesty, and integrity, there is, under ordinary circumstances, a fair chance for success in any legitimate occupation. (N.)

HOW TO BE NOBODY.

IT is easy to be nobody, and we will tell you how to do it. Go to the drinking saloon to spend your leisure time. You need not drink much now; just a little beer or some other drink. In the meantime, play dominoes, checkers or something else to kill time, so that you will be sure not to read any useful books.

If you read anything, let it be the dome novel of the day; thus go on, keeping your stomach full and your head empty, and yourself playing time-killing games, and in a few years you'll be nobody, unless you should turn out a drunkard or a professional gambler, either of which is worse than nobody. There are any number of young men hanging about the saloons just ready to graduate and be nobodies. (N.)

"WHO CARES FOR ME?"

A POOR lone woman sat one evening, thinking how sad and lone was her condition. She was old and almost helpless, with little of this world's goods which she could call her own. "Who cares for me?" thought she. Suddenly this verse came to her remembrance: "For we have not an High Priest, which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities."

It was like a flood of sunshine. Her doubts and fears were all gone. What need of earthly friends to cheer and soothe her declining year? Jesus knew her every care and sorrow, and He, "the Lord of glory," was touched with the feeling of her infirmities. How precious is the thought that we can all have such a friend in every season of trial and distress! "I will not leave you comfortless," said the Savior's gracious words. "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." (N.)

PEELING SAFE.

UNDER the head, "An Inquiry" a writer in the Christian Standard of Aug. 13th, says:

"Dear Bro. Errett—I am afraid we have overlooked many important items in fully restoring the church to its primitive purity and holiness. There seems to be a retrograde in place of progression in the spiritual life of the churches at present. I think it is wholly on account of our not having done our duty as we should; it seems that politics, the fashions and maxims of the world, are choking out spirituality and causing a downward tendency. Christian women are taught how to adorn themselves in the second chapter of Timothy and third of James, and we fail to come up to its requirements. We are also taught to greet one another with a kiss of charity, and that feet-washing was counted as a good work in the days of the apostles. We fail to do either of these. We may talk about the church converting the world, but it looks as if the world was converting the church at present. It is strange to me that we plead so strongly for a return to Primitive Christianity, and fail to reach the perfect standard ourselves. Would to God our brethren would lay aside the first principles of Christianity and go on to perfection, as Paul teaches! In my reading of the Standard, I have not seen anything for or against these things; most all our brethren say they ought to be done, but saying and doing are quite different. Now, Bro. Errett, do you think we are safe without teaching and doing whatsoever is required of us? I don't feel safe, and I am not by myself. If our Brotherhood would put God's law in force and practice, it would do more good in one year than our preachers can do in ten years, or I may say in twenty, in the organized state of our congregations at present.

I know these things should be practiced among us, and I think you, as our editor, should speak in behalf of truth, and set on foot the things that are wanting in the churches.

Many are wanting liberty at present to do whatsoever they have a thus sayeth the Lord for, and if you or some one else of our brethren would approve of it, it would satisfy the longings of many hearts and promote God's kingdom in the earth.

To this the editor of the Standard replies as follows:

"The writer is, we think, entirely mistaken in supposing that the declension complained of is traceable to unfaithfulness in the particulars mentioned. The proof of this is found in the fact that the people who practice these things—the German Baptists, for instance—are as full of complaint about spiritual declension as any other, and quite as much troubled as any with dissensions and alienations. As center the situation nor the washing of feet is enjoined as a church observance or ordinance, but both are left to be obeyed at such times as circumstances justify their observance—the former on such occasions as found in Acts 20: 36-38, and the latter whenever it is called for as a good work or a rite of hospitality (1 Tim. 5: 10), we have no authority to place them where they do not belong—that is among church ordinances. The letter and spirit of New Testament instruction on these questions may be duly honored by the writer of "An Inquiry," and by all others, without introducing unauthorized observances into the public meetings of the church."

REMARKS.

First, permit us to say that a command of God cannot be set aside because the people murmur and desire something else. Should some among a people even abuse an ordinance of God's house there would be no excuse in any man setting it aside. The command—the ordinance must be obeyed by the faithful, no difference what others do.

Second, the German Baptists as a people are not complaining about "spiritual declension." A few may incline to that view, but nowhere has the church expressed herself as declining; but on the other hand she has endeavored to strengthen and increase in spiritual power and true holiness.

It is a pretty broad assertion that "neither the salutation nor the washing of feet is enjoined as a church observance or ordinance." Does Mr. Errett require the Scriptures to say, "This is an ordinance" before he will obey it? Does he maintain that before he will observe feet-washing as Christ did, the words, "This is an ordinance" must appear after John 13: 14-15? Before he will salute his brethren with a holy kiss, does he require the words, "This is an ordinance" after Rom. 16: 16, 2 Cor. 13: 12, 1 Thes. 4: 26, 1 Pet. 5: 14? Will he be so kind as to answer? No doubt the individual who made the "inquiry" would feel safe if he were to comply with the commands of the Gospel, and a compliance with the commands means spiritual growth. Thousands, if they were not shackled with the notions of preachers, would turn to the Lord and obey him in feet-washing as they do in repentance. They see the command, and believe they should obey it, but the preachers are opposed to it, hence the inquirer passes into a sort of seclusion behind the preachers and all go on in their usual condition. But every effort is made to turn aside the plain commands on the salutation and feet-washing. Mr. Errett regards feet-washing as a "good work." Certainly it is a good work—we have never insisted that it was an evil work. Breaking bread and dividing the cup are "good works"—not evil works by any means. Every institution of the Lord's is a good work. This is no excuse for not doing as Jesus did—washing the brethren's feet in the church. We pause to hear from Mr. Errett. M. M. E.

TRACTS AND PAPERS.

ON page 538 of next issue brother James M. Noll under the head of "Missionary Work" will strike an important batch at that subject. That good literature—doctrine and the promises of God through Christ, can be made to reach the heads and hearts of many people, is undeciable. I often wonder why we leave so many golden opportunities slip through our fingers. The Brotherhood has the doctrine—the great power of God unto salvation. It has the talent to put it into force; the means to get it ready to send out; and we believe willing hands to distribute the truth. One thing is lacking—the will to contribute the necessary money.

When we began the publication of the B. AT W., we organized a "Gospel Tract Society" and invited everybody to come and help. Many responded so that now there is an interest about $400 for the purpose of distributing tracts and papers free. The annual interest is $32. Already we have announced our readiness to send out free tracts; but the fund is wholly inadequate to the demands. Instead of $400 the fund on interest should be increased to $4000 or $5000. The interest of this amount would send tens of thousands of tracts all over the broad land. Many a soul could be brought to the knowledge of the truth and the love of it, by this means.

While at the late A. M., a dear kind brother informed us that he intended to liquidate something to the Society. Those contemplating doing this, may confer with us, and we will give all the information desirable. We should also be pleased to receive suggestions as to the best course to pursue in carrying out this work.

If the fund is increased and pamphlets given away so that we need not hold the stock, we can print tracts and pamphlets much cheaper than we now offer them for sale, thus doing more good with the same amount of money. Speak your minds freely, brethren and sisters; and help us to sow the good seed by means of the press.

Elsewhere you will find the result of giving away your papers. Friend C. is rejoicing over good literature; and the way was opened for him to rejoice by a brother handing him copies of your paper. We say your paper; for it is yours as well as ours; and it is desired that you use it as yours.

It came a friend wrote us that he incidentally came across the first and second pages of B. at W., and he became so interested that he subscribed for the paper, and he now rejoices in the truth. These results demonstrate the wisdom of making greater efforts to distribute tracts and papers in defense of primitive Christianity. Knowing the power for good in papers, it is hoped that every paper representing itself as teaching the doctrine of Christ as held forth by our people, will be conducted on Christian principles, and send out nothing that will disgrace our noble profession. Strife, bickerings and quarrels among brethren and churches are not calculated to win souls to Christ, and as Christ has not commanded that we preach each other's failings to the world, all our readers will please excuse us if we refuse to do so.

TRINE IMMERSION.

A WRITER in The Signs of the Times says: "I do not know how it will strike others, but I do not see how we can send men out to preach who are not sound on the baptism question. For my own part I think trine immersion as much of a corruption of the ordinance as pouring, when we take into view the design of baptism, and the event of which it is a memorial. Of course it does not seem so to our Dunkard friends; they are sincere as many advocates of sprinkling are."

The writer is not certain about trine immersion being a corruption; he only thinks it is. Paul, before his conversion, verily thought that he "ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth;" but in due time he repented and had no more such thoughts. We believe the writer of the foregoing item will think differently when he repeats and is baptized "for the remission of sins," "into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

The editor of The Times adds some assumptions to the item. The following is his closing paragraph:

"If they had the strength of argument with them on history, that would not convince us that they had the truth, because church history proves no obligation in the absence of Scriptural evidence. As the writer above says, their view is clearly shown to be erroneous, 'when we take into view the design of baptism.' No individual can consistently hold that view as a Seventh-day Adventist."

The Times will not be convinced. It is determined to blunder on in error. Does it still maintain that there is no "Scriptural evidence" for "baptizing into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost?" It may be that a man cannot consistently hold the view that he should "repeat and be baptized for the remission of sins" (Acts 2: 28) and be a "Seventh-day Adventist;" but a man can hold that view and be a Christian. If a man cannot believe that part of the Gospel which says baptism is for the remission of sins (Mark 16: 16, Acts 2: 38) and be a Seventh-day Adventist, then it follows that to be a Seventh-day Adventist is one thing, and to be a Christian another thing. If these are not identical, one must be a heathen; and will the Times declare "Repent and be baptized for the remission of sins," spurious? There must be no shifting around, let the issue be met squarely. Can a man be a Christian while still believing in Seventh-day Adventism? Will the Times shed some light on this?

WHAT PAPERS ARE DOING.

THE following shows what a religious paper conducted on Christian principles will do.

I am living where no "Dunkards" preach,—in fact never heard one preach; but happily met with a "Dunkard" who gave me two numbers of the BRETHREN AT WORK, which after reading, convinced me of their great moral and religious teachings. I am now a subscriber to your paper, have gotten one or two more for you—I think I will be able to get you ten or twelve in a short time. I am not working for money; but for Christ, and I feel that I am doing a good work when I labor for the circulation of the best moral and religious paper I ever read.

Yours Truly,
C.

Our friend seems in excellent spirits and manifests a true working head. He goes into the canvass, not for money, but for Christ. This is the proper motive. He has been properly equipped, and we pray God to help him in the campaign against sin, and in behalf of good literature. We commend his zeal to our brethren everywhere.

Bro. J. Funk, of Ripon, Cal., writes: "In answer to Bro. Hyton's query in reference to the church of Indian Brethren, I will say that I have only found one who claims to have a personal knowledge of a baptized Indian and no definite knowledge of such a church. I am inclined to the opinion it is only a 'fair story,' or, perhaps a dream, and if a dream perhaps Bro. Bashor can 'let 'em' lit."

RECENTLY a number of Indian Chiefs were taken to Washington to confer with the government in regard to their reservations. When Secretary Kirkwood inquired whether they expected the government to give anything in the Sioux for the permission given to the Poncas to live on their lands, White Thunder drew himself up proudly and said: "No, my friend, that is not what I want. You told me yesterday I ought to have pity upon these poor Poncas. If I have pity upon them, I am not going to take their money. We give them the lands they need." This was the savages' idea of pity.

A NUMBER of counties in the Southern part of this State have been unfortunate in losing all their corn. The chinch-bugs, assisted by drought, have literally swept all from that usually prosperous region. The brethren here have been requested to aid by furnishing corn for feed so that the farmers can put in their Fall grain, and it is hoped that our members will respond in their usual liberal manner. The command "Give to him that asketh thee" can now be obeyed from the heart. There is a blessing around that command for him who obeys it; and as we are for the commandments of God, let us show our love by obeying them. It is our reasonable service.

The meeting at Arcanum, Ohio resolved to go by way of the Miami Elders' Petition. We learn Bro. Daniel Brewer, J. Kaufman and S. Mohler put themselves on record as staunch for the Brotherhood. The meeting was large, yet those who stood up (a vote by standing up was taken) were few compared to the multitude. Some who voted to go out, regretted it and wept bitterly after the meeting. Ah, yes in a few years some will return to the loving embrace of the church and repent the step now taken. Others will die sad and sorrowful, looking back on this mistake of their life and see what joy and comfort they have lost. Those who call such meetings and cause divisions must take the responsibility. We know of no church in Illinois that will be affected by the meeting.

Bro. John, the apostle, made very few crooked furrows with the Gospel plow. He was always on the march with the rest of the Apostles; and if perchance, a wicked person crept in unawares to spy out the liberty of God's children, he raised his voice in thunder tones, and warned his brethren of the danger. Of Diotrephas, who loved to have pre-eminence—whom loved high positions and made "tools" of men to help him up, brother John said: "If I can I will bring to remembrance his works which he doeth, prating against us with wicked words." You see Diotrephas prated against him with wicked words; for this and other reasons, Bro. John would have no fellowship with him. "He that doeth evil hath not seen God."

Bro. Timothy was commended to stir up the gift that was in him. He was to do the stirring himself. Now 3-days some wait for the Holy Ghost to stir up their gift; some wait for the college to stir them up, while other some think the Sunday-school should do the stirring. A few are stirring up the gift themselves. Let there be a general stirring of gifts to the honor of God and the praise of his glory.

It is said that D. and Stanley's penmanship was worse than Horro's Greeley's, and that there were comparatively few compositors that could set up his manuscript without making errors. It appears that the majority of the best thinkers have been poor writers. It is a consolation to some editors.—Primitive Christian.

Very consoling to us.

"LYING A MAN DOWN."

BY D. P. SAYLOR.

Notes Brethren at Work:—

COPY from the Christian: "One of the oldest instrumentalities of evil in the world is a lie. Satan entered into the garden of Eden with a lie in his mouth, and through that lie brought ruin to our race. Following the example of their father, who was a liar from the beginning, the children of the devil have from that time dealt largely in lies.

As Satan lied to introduce sin into the world, so Cain, the first murderer, lied to conceal his blood; crime; and when asked, "Where is thy brother?" replied, "I know not; am I my brother's keeper?" From that time, lies have been favorite instrumentalities in the hands of the devil and his children. Men have gone astray from the word, speaking lies. Instances of falsehood are abundant; and whether we consider the heathenish prophets lying to God's messenger to induce him to disobey the divine commandment (1 Kings 13: 18); or Gehazi lying to Naaman, to obtain silver and raiment; or Ahab, concealing lies to accomplish the death of Naboth, that her husband might have his vineyard for a kitchen garden; or the spruce Israelites, who taught their tongues to speak lies, and wearied themselves to commit iniquity (Jer. 9: 3); or the Jews seeking false witnesses to be against Christ and accomplish his overthrow; or the priests and rulers who hire the soldiers to lie, and deny his resurrection; or the false apostles, who sincerely report that Paul was willing to do evil that good might come of it; or the ecclesiastical dignitaries of later days, who have slandered and maligned those who refused to yield to their sway; or the office seekers or politicians who by falsehood told down patriots and exalted demagogues; or tricky traitors who seek standards to bind and reticence and advance themselves; or basely litigants, who trump up false accounts to effect the just claims of those they have wronged and defrauded; or writers and editors who garnish their papers with lies and false accusations; or investigating committees who pick up their own petitions and black wash every body else; or rabid sectarians who slander those who will not follow in their lead, or bigotry, who believe a man who clings to the Word of God, and will not abandon it to adopt their opinions; or lie-impeccable office holders, who, ignorant of their proper duties, keep their portfolios by manufacturing votes and committing election frauds, misrepresenting and trying to crush those who are trying to expose their crooked ways; or secret quines and combinations, that as all honest and open-hearted men with sly insinuations, until the air is thick with whispered falsehood; or gossips who seek to make their neighbors as disreputable as themselves; or crones, who lie and deceive to spite and injure those who may rival them; or false brethren in the church and ministers who whisper what they dare not speak, and insinuate what they are afraid to assert; all these seem to proceed upon the understanding that falsehood is a legitimate weapon, and that the safest way to get rid of a person whom they dislike is to LIE THEM DOWN. "Such persons do greatly err. It is one of the hardest things in the world to lie a man down. A man is the workmanship of the Almighty; a man is God's child; a lie is of the devil's work, for he is the father of it. A lie is but a breath, and it has nothing behind it but a liar, whose breath is in his nostrils, and who, unless he repents, is doomed to the lake of fire. A man who has laid hold upon eternal life is not to be killed by a lie, no matter how smoothly or plausibly it may be told, whether by one man or by ten men. It may be whispered in private, or proclaimed in public; it may be uttered by a gossip, reported by a committee, published by a society, adopted by a conference, and scattered all over the world; it may be promulgated where no reply is permitted, it may be voted to be true by forty men who know nothing about it, and who refuse to hear the testimony of faithful witnesses who are ready to affirm that it is false; it may be centered where it cannot be followed and contradicted; and what of it? IT IS SIMPLY A LIE. It has no life in it, and it cannot have permanent power. It may do great harm; it may divide families, ruin homes, separate friends, derange business, and make the hearts of the righteous sad, but after all it can have no permanent effect. A lie is doomed. Man fights it, God fights it, angels fight it, heaven fights it, earth fights it, time fights it, eternity fights it, and the judgment day dooms it, and the fires of hell will swallow it up with whoever loveth and maketh a lie, from the first liar, whose breath poisoned the air of Paradise, to the last liar who lies and dies impenitent and unsaved. It is difficult to lie a man down. A man who is lied up must fall; a man who is lied down is very likely to rise at last."

For the Brethren at Work.

PREACH THE WORD.

BY GRANVILLE NEVINGEN.

"As the Lord Breth, what the Lord saith unto me that will I speak."—1 Kings 22: 14.

ALIVE above language was used by the prophet Micah to the officer that informed him that Ahab, king of Israel, wanted him to inquire of the Lord whether he should go up to Ramoth-gilead to battle; he also told the prophet that the other "prophets (about four hundred) declare good unto the king with one mouth: Let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good." Nor are the men, of like disposition of the officer, confined to that age alone; we find them in this much-boasted nineteenth century. Yes, dear reader, they are in all walks of life; they pervade every society, and they contaminate our holy Christianity with their pernicious ways.

Some people want the Gospel preached, but they want the preacher to be very careful not to offend any one by telling them of their sin, especially if said sins happen to be very popular. Some are so sensitive that the poor minister dare not, if he wants to please some of our modern Ahab's, say anything about the useless habit of using tobacco, nor preach non-conformity to the world in conversation, action, and dress. Neither do they want the minister to say very much about eternal judgment and the horrors of hell, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched. But to please some won't do. Christians the minister's word must be like the word of some of the world's false prophets.

I hope our ministering brethren will be like Micah of old, "What the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak;" or, in the language of Paul to Timothy, "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine."

Also, to the editors of the BRETHERN AT WORK I would say, though you may publish things that are not desired by the carnal mind, and they may say, like Ahab said of the prophet Micah, "I hate him, for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil," go on in the even tenor of your ways, and publish the truth, even if some flesh-pampered soul does write and groan under the sturdy strokes of the sword of the Spirit. It is better for them to groan now, in this day of grace, than "when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Thes. 1: 7-8.

A PETRIFIED BODY.

BY LEWIS M. KOD.

IN answer to your request, in B. A. W., that those of your readers who knew of petrified human bodies would give a statement of the case, I will say that in the spring of 1859 I saw such a sight. A young lady, aged about eighteen, had died and been interred in the Leon Cemetery some five or six years. On account of the extension of the town plat, the cemetery was moved, and I witnessed the reburial of the above, and the body was, or at least seemed to be, a solid stone, while others, reinterred at the same time, were entirely decayed.

Garden Grove, Iowa, Feb. 25, 1861.

One of the ancient sayings was: "Everything in life has two hauds, but it must be a bad disposition, indeed, which will ever (through prejudice or jealousy) be seizing the wrong one." Jeremy Taylor says: "Esteem not thyself to have profited in religion, unless thou thinkest well of others and measly of thyself; therefore never accuse any one but thyself. He that diligently watches himself will be willing to be silent concerning others." But a greater than he hath said: "He that exalteth himself shall be abased."

BAPTISMS AGAIN.

Please explain Heb. 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should do go unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different. "Von der Taufe, und der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLER.

IN answer to J. H. Miller's query, as given above, we offer the following:

The point in the query is, how to harmonize the German with the English rendition; since the English refers to baptism in the plural, and the German, seemingly in the singular. By a careful examination, however, we learn that the English and German texts perfectly harmonize.

Nouns in German, ending in e, have the same termination in the plural as in the singular. Lehre, Taufe, Waerze, are all nouns ending in e and may be either singular or plural. The sense or adjectives with which such nouns are identified, must determine their plurality or singularity. In Eph 4: 5, we have "Eine Taufe," this, of course, means, "one baptism," but it is not the ending of the noun Taufe, that determines its singularity, but the adjective eine—one. Where no adjective is used, the sense of the language determines the character of the noun.

The result is that the German translation is correct; so is the English. There is no conflict in the translations of those two languages.

It occurs to our mind that the term "Baptisms" as used by Paul in Heb. 6: 1, 2, finds its location as follows:

1st. Baptism by water.

2nd. Baptism by the Holy Spirit.

Here are two baptisms, which all Bible readers know, are indispensable requisites to our induction into the kingdom of heaven. "Born of water and of the spirit," means the same thing, and pertains to the "first principles."

Peter, on the day of Pentecost, substantiates the above view of the subject as follows: "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost."

Here also are two baptisms, one by water, for the remission of sins; the other, the baptism of the Holy Ghost—clearly implied.

John the Baptist bears witness to the same effect where he says, "I indeed baptize you with water; but one mightier than I cometh, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose; he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost and with fire." Luke 3: 16.

Here we also have one baptism by water; another by the Holy Ghost. We might cite the reader to other passages of a similar character, but deem those already off-red as being sufficient to show that "baptisms" belonged to the Christian dispensation, and were among the first requisites in the kingdom of grace. Paul wanted the Hebrew brethren not to stop at a mere introduction into the kingdom, but to go on to perfection. J. S. M.

"Not always do " nouns in German, ending in e have the same termination in the plural as in the singular." We do not like to differ from our esteemed correspondent, but how about such words as, Geschichte, Heine, Phantse, etc.? See Meutz's German-English Dictionary. L. A. FLATZ.

SPEAKING IN AN UNKNOWN TONGUE.

HE who looked down from the heavens upon the poor lost and sinful man with pity and tender compassion, left the shining courts of the "Beautiful Temple," and the glory which he had with his Father since the world began; took upon himself the form of a servant, made himself of no reputation and at last was nailed to the cross, suffering all the excruciating horrors of an ignominious death.

Behold the incarnate Son of God, suspended between heaven and earth, smiled there by cruel hands. The sun refused to look upon the scene and veils his face with darkness; the earth heaves and trembles; the veil of the temple is rent in twain; angels weep; a dreadful, death-like silence reigns. He has cried: "It is finished," and lost man is redeemed and saved through him.

O faithful, scientific theologian! how can you meditate upon these things and leave man's whole duty untold? Prepare to meet thy God. Lay aside your garb of ostentatious self-esteem and buckle on the armor of humility and faithfulness.

Is pure, undistorted religion a scientific delusion? Are lectures, three or four hours long, upon the nature of sound, feasts for the soul that is hungering and thirsting after righteousness? Does the anxious and inquiring sinner find peace and consolation in this?

"Know ye not to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death or obedience unto righteousness." Is God mocked?—Are his revealed laws written in an unknown tongue?

It would appear so, to hear some of our modern theologians explaining them. When the weary and sin-burdened soul is about to fall beneath his load of guilt and despair, the sweet voice of that Holy One whispers, "My grace is sufficient for thee."

What comfort! what consolation! Can tongue utter the praises due such a kind and loving friend? His ways are not our ways. At the close of many religious services, can the Great Judge look with pleasure upon the ministers; and say, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast not shunned to declare the whole counsel of God?"

How very discouraging to us of truth as well as seekers to go up to the house of God, expecting to hear what the Master would have them do and to receive encouragement, but instead of this, the minister describes some tree that grew on Olivet's summit, how beautifully its branches waved in the gentle breeze; or how some clear, sparkling stream coursed its way from the mountain to the sea; and here leaping some mighty precipice; there quietly and gently moving on, quenching the thirst of a tired pedestrian as he travels on, or eulogizing some living or departed millionaire, or using language that is not in common use.

Unless the meanings of the words used, are understood by the hearers, it is all one, as though not a word or syllable had been uttered.

Brethren, he not deceived; see to it that your religion is grounded and founded upon the truth, with Christ for your Guide, Counselor, Teacher and Companion. If you do, you cannot remain in error, nor go far wrong.

True religion is not a cloak to hide our faults behind, nor cover up our sins; nor is it a means by which the arrogant or haughty theologian can secure happiness here or hereafter.

"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any man minister, let him do it as of the ability that God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise, honor and dominion forever.—AMEN."

S. O. LARKINS.

To be perfectly just, is an attribute of the divine nature; to be so to the utmost of our ability, is the glory of man.

BE calm Trust in G. d. He will deliver you. "The whirlwind shall scatter" your enemy. There will be "open rivers in high places, and fountains in the midst of the valleys" (Isa. 41: 18) for all "them that make genes" and seek "th' righteousness of God."

RELIGION claims the body. St. Paul constantly insists on the sanctification of "the body." The body as well as the soul and spirit is to be preserved blameless. "Thou shalt love the Lord with all thy strength." Not that some half-grown, sickly boy should imitate the restless labors of a full-grown, firm-knuckled, able-bodied man. "All thy strength." That much—no more—no less. Let lazy, sleep-loving, indulging Sybarites know, that they cannot be followers of Him who bore the cross. As regards the body, the Bible requires that we keep it pure, keep it healthy, keep it at work, keep it under, keep it on the altar. When thou hast loved and served the Lord with all thy strength, worry not. "It is in vain for you to rise up early, to sit up late, to eat the bread of sorrow; for so be ye with his beloved sleep."

Correspondence.

Census; Distribution.

A circular will soon be sent from this office making certain inquiries regarding the schedules sent out. In order that the recipients may understand what is wanted I make the following explanation. In the compilation of the returns made per the schedules it is intended to do it by counties. Now the prelator or organization of the church is such that to tabulate any church as belonging to the county from which it is scheduled would be very unsafe. Thus the Buffalo Valley church is in the heart of Union county, and numbers, say two hundred. To credit two hundred to Union county would be an error because about forty of them belong in Clinton Co., Pa. In the blank sent there are appropriate lines for the statement as to where the returned population of the church belongs, by counties.

Another most important thing will be the inquiry as to the ministers of the church. A clergyman, by the ruling of the office is our authorized by the rules of his sect to solemnize marriages. This cuts out our first-degree men. On the circular sent is a statement as above and on the blank lines for the purpose write out the names, post offices, counties, and States of each and every preacher of every degree belonging to the congregation with the statement of his grade on the same line. Do it something like this:

Bishop John Smith, Laurel P. O., Union Co., Pa.
2nd. Deg. John Brown, Crossroad P. O., Clinton Co., Pa.
1st. Deg. Wm. Jones, Hillside, P. O., Union Co., Pa.
Do not on any account omit a single name or a statement of his rank. This will give us a correct list of preachers which does not now exist. Many a minister is not down on the almanac list; many of those down are a thousand miles away from their credited places of residence and I found one case the owner of which had been dead for nine years. The rest of the circular explains itself.

There are a few churches in each State which will furnish their reports imperfectly because of a failure to observe the few instructions given. The circular will be sent to any name on the schedule, and in many cases those who did not write up the schedule will receive the circular. In all such cases all there is to do is to fill it all the same, observing exactness and plainness. The envelops sent is a free one and no stamp is required. In some cases stamps are put on official business. This is a useless expense. Oae thing more. When you write me about any church, begin your letter something like this: "In regard to the German Baptist church, Buffalo Valley, Union Co., Pa. in the Middle District of Pennsylvania," etc. This enables me to locate the point under discussion without trouble.

I will be glad to answer any questions within reason, and close by thanking the brethren for their almost universal courtesy and promptness, and will be glad at any time to hear of their spiritual or temporal affairs by letter.

CENSUS.

To the officials of Harrison county Church, Iowa:—The whole Middle District of Iowa has her returns waiting on the receipt of your church schedule and you have been repeatedly asked to respond. Your delay is causing great trouble, and we would be glad to hear from you.

HOWARD MILLER

Lewisburg, Pa.

From Lydia C. Newcomer.—I am particularly pleased with what has appeared of late on the covering. It, among other things, gives me a decided preference to your paper over others. I also feel to give a hearty Amen to sister G. Colby Clarke's article on "Why So Much Trouble?" May God bless her. Thank God for those soul-cheering words by C. H. Balbaugh to brother Eshelmas. It did my heart good to read them. It not out of place, I want to give words of warning to some dear mothers in Israel, who strain at a gnat and swallow a camel, look well to your hearts, and those whose notice this may reach through others, who go so far as to say they would not have a pencil in the house, can you listen to an editor's preaching, then? . . . We have invited brethren Quinter and W. Herber to our meeting in the new house near Mountville. May they come in the full power of the spirit of God, and wear common clothes, made in the order, to do the most possible good in our neighborhood; that they may be prepared and not their sermons. . . . I will state that we have not more than about thirty members within a circuit of three miles, beside a River Brethren, United Brethren M. Societies, and other sects in large numbers.—Mountville, Pa.

From L. Burke.—I have been very sick for a week, but as we must have sickness and trials in this world we pray the Lord that his grace may be sufficient for us. . . . We have a small church at this place; we have two ministers and two deacons who attend to the work of the Lord. People in this part of the country think the B. A. W. a very good paper. I think there will be more subscribers for it soon. May God bless the editors.—Saline City, Mo.

From Henry Shidler.—Father and I left home on the 8th of Aug, en route for Cherokee and Crawford counties, via Vaudelin R. R. to St. Louis, thence via St. Louis and San Francisco R. R. . . . Crops have a gloomy appearance all along the line. If it were not for the wheat I think the people would not fare well. I have heard so much about drouthy Kansas; but I can say this for Cherokee county, that it will stand more drouth than Indiana or Illinois. If it had not been for the chuch bugs they would have had abundant crops. As it is, they will have plenty in the Northern part of Cherokee and Crawford counties. . . . The prospects for the Brethren here are quite encouraging. They are emigrating from the other States quite lively. But for fear I may deceive some, I will just say, those that don't like work very well had better stay away from Kansas. Men that have a little money can do well by buying them a home. Land ranges in price from five to twenty dollars per acre. Any brethren desiring to go West, please call and see this part, and I would refer you to Jacob Crips, three miles south-west of Monmouth; also brethren Adams and Solomon Eby. You will find these brethren gentlemen out and out. I bought a farm two miles south of Monmouth. Expect to move there next April. Hope other brethren will settle there and help build up the church.—Clay City, Ind.

From T. C. Wood.—On Saturday before the fourth Sunday in July we had a large and attentive meeting in Bedford county, and pleased to say, found all in love and peace. The church made a call for a preacher and two deacons. The writer had the privilege of preaching to a quiet, orderly, and attentive congregation. On the 10th inst, the Franklin brethren met in Pittsylvania county, where they received four precious souls, who made good confessions and were admitted into the church by baptism, and three more have asked for admittance into the fold. We expect more to come soon. Thank God that the old ship Zion moves onward. . . . Saturday, before the first Sunday, we had the pleasure of meeting our esteemed and beloved brother Moomaw, who preached the Word with power at this place, from the time of his arrival until the following Friday night, when our worthy and beloved brother Beahm closed the meeting at this place. Then we proceeded on our way to the Forest school-house, where we had a good and attentive congregation Saturday night and Sunday morning, and where brother Moomaw preached his closing sermons for us. Monday we had to part with him, as he turned his way homeward. May the Lord bless him in his labors. We feel that many at this place were made to think of their ways of living. Oa, that they may change, is the prayer of your brother in love.—Lynchess, Va.

From C. C. Root.—We are just now having our annual awakening, being the week of our annual visit and council preparatory to Love feast and also to District Meeting. In addition to this, brother E. A. O. R. is here delivering a series of discourses on the birth, childhood, manhood, mission, and character of our Saviour Jesus, in such a manner as to have completely arrested the attention, interest, affection, and sympathy of all who came under hearing. O brethren, since we have the talent to present Jesus in every phase, as to show him in natural life, may God help us to show to the world his likeness in our own persons and life and character. Then, and not but then shall we persuade men.—Mirabile, Mo., Aug. 20.

From J. R. Miller.—This morning I went five miles east, to council-meeting at the Brick church, which was recently struck by lightning; but happily not much damage was done, and I trust we still are all willing to trust in him who has all power for its future protection. He who will not suffer a sparrow to fall to the ground without his notice, and who has even the hairs of our heads numbered, will certainly not suffer his children to meet with great misfortunes, unless he in his great wisdom sees that it is for their good, in some way, in which case we should meekly submit, and assize trust him for our future subsistence. . . .

A number of brethren and sisters having assembled, the 8th chapter of Romans was read, and commented upon by the brethren, showing us the great importance of being spiritually minded, "For to be carnally minded is death, but to be spiritually minded is life and peace." Rom. 8:6. When looking over the audience I was made glad to see several there who had never before been with us upon such occasions, having lately come into the fold. But while our thoughts were mingled with joy, another subject was presented, when, after powerful consideration, it was thought proper to disown two of our number, which caused deep sorrow, to think that the adversary with his cunning craftiness, had caused them to break their solemn happy covenant which they made before God and many witnesses, and has them to honor and reverence a part of the Mosaic covenant, and disregard a part of the new. This being disposed of, next in order was to set the time of holding our Love-feast, which was decided to be the 4th of October, commencing at 4 P. M. to which all true reformed pilgrims are cordially invited. Those coming by rail will stop either at Gravelton or Nappanee on the B & O R. R. . . . At the close of our meeting, a brother had some papers to distribute, which, I am fearful, are doing too much seed of discord to be profitable to the church or approved of God, at least I am loth to patronize such, fearing I might be "bidding them Godspeak," and thereby become a "partaker of their evil deed." . . .—Aug. 21. At the same place of meeting, Sabbath-school in the morning. Address by Levi Heke, of Goshen. Public preaching at ten by Peter Stuckman. Funeral service at 11 o'clock by I. H. Miller. At home again. Thankful to God for the blessings I enjoy, wishing mercy, grace, peace, and love to all the faithful.—Locke, Ind.

From F. C. Myers.—We, as a little body of followers of Christ, have agreed to meet every Thursday night at 8 P. M. and Lord's day at 2 P. M. in order to have singing, prayer, and the reading of the Word of God. There are nine members in this vast city of corruption, and all apparently babes in Christ. We need the Word of God preached to us every Lord's day by some true shepherd, and hope the time is at hand when the Lord will open the way so that we can have our men's more regular. We have not had any preaching here by brethren since about the 15th of June, and if that had not come from a watchful and kind shepherd, I do not know how we could have got along so long without the spiritual food. . . . This is a beautiful Lord's day, and if the Lord will, we expect to meet at sister Pratt's house at 2 P. M. Our lesson for to-day is from the 3rd chapter of Matthew. We hope the spirit of St. Louis will guide us into all truth and light.—St. Louis, Mo.

From John Frits.—Health is good. We have had dry weather for a while, still crops look pretty good. . . . Bro. Martin Meyers from Lankark, Ill., and his son-in-law from Brown Co., Kan., came here to take a look at our country. They seemed to be well pleased. The old brother thinks of moving West in the Spring. All that come West, come and see us. I have over 13,000 acres of land for sale, raw and improved.—Diller, Jefferson Co., Neb.

Health and Temperance.

CHEERFULNESS NECESSARY AS A HEALTH PROMOTER.

THE journey through life has many rugged paths for the traveler to encounter. And nothing smooths the rough ways of the world or the rugged paths in more than a smiling, cheery, happy expression upon the face. It is a sunshine falling in upon the heart expelling feelings of sadness. It is a refreshing shower scattering us from the burning of a Sahara. It is a moisture thrown upon the soil of man producing a luxuriant growth. And as a summer shower to the dry and thirsty ground so wonderfully recuperative is the sunshine of the heart. The burden of life, though great, by the aid of a cheerful disposition and a willing heart, can be borne more easily, the load becomes lighter and we experience a prompting to encounter all that may obstruct our pathway.

The inner life of most families or of individuals reveals many trials, and it may be vain to look for one family or group of individuals without one trial. In one there may be a wayward son or an erring maiden, a husband given to vice or a wife who has left the path of virtue. In another is a life-long siege of sickness or a sweet little flower whose sun went down while it was yet day. All seem to be compelled to bear a burden in some form or another.

Dis-appointments are various. By arduous labors and careful economy a large competence has been accumulated. The accident strikes or the fire kind devours, and all is swept away; here is gloom and sorrow. In the midst of all this gloom of the mind or sorrow of the heart what shall be done? Fold the hands and give up? Place yourself away into a fraid disposition and sow the seeds of disease in your vital? Or no. Now is the time you should be cheerful and calm. Now is when you should have a cheerful temper. It is just the time when you should have a happy face and cheerful words to assist you in your trials. You yet have activities lying dormant. Boost your self and bring them out and facilitate them to the bettering of your condition. There are yet many happy strings to your being that have not been drawn out as no time was opportune, and would yet remain dormant but for something cordal to draw them out. Avail yourself of your remaining abilities and renew your joy, and you will finally override every mountainous height of opposition knowing to the great comfort of your heart that your "Father is at the helm."

Be cheerful and look upon the sunny side of all the conditions of life. It will insure good health physically and with that fortress of power all of success in the way of success must of necessity vanish away.

The condition of the mind has a great influence upon the body, has much to do in promoting or impairing the health of the body.

And the condition of the body has a great influence upon the mind. Hence, as twin sisters should the mind and body be brought up in the way of health and be so linked and interwoven in such beautiful relationship as to be one in power, free from all ills.

Let cheerfulness, therefore, be the nation's song, a guardian for the day, the opiate for rest, and thus the burden of life will be lighter, health promoted, happiness increased and life a joy instead of a burden.

TRAINING CHILDREN.

BY G. NEVINGER.

THE importance of training children for usefulness, in this life and in the life to come, has engaged the mind of the pious for many generations; and as far as fitting these moral tenements of usefulness in this life, that their offspring might be qualified by virtue and honesty to fill, with credit, the various positions in society, has had the attention of all moral-loving people, considering the great minds that have pondered this deep, yet to some extent unsolved, problem. I do not expect to unravel all of the practical workings of "Train up a child in the way he should go and when he is old he will not depart from it," (Prov. 22: 6) yet I wish to add my mite to the wholesome instruction that we have received from time to time through the worthy columns of the BROTHER. Knowing that a great many virtue-loving persons who do not claim Jesus as their personal Savior, are readers of the BROTHER, I would say to such: though you may use your utmost endeavors to keep your children out of slum-joints and vice-fostering company, (and this as far as it goes is good) yet if you only prepare them for this life and they do not "choose that good part" in time, they will have to spend the countless ages of eternity with those very characters that you do not wish them to associate with here. And how can a parent while out of Christ show their child the way of eternal salvation? To do so, he would be whispering in the child's ear the need of a Savior and at the same time by his actions, proclaiming in thunder tones: "Do not accept of Christ." So in like manner a Christian parent, if a slave to any useless or vain practice, can do but little, by precept, in keeping their children out of the errors they had fallen into, as long as their actions do not correspond with their words.

Paul says: "And ye fathers, provoke not your children to wrath; but bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord" Eph. 6: 4. Part of the admonition or instruction of the Lord is to "love the brotherhood." 1 Pet. 2: 17. Therefore children should be early impressed that the church is "the pillar and ground of the truth," (1 Tim. 3: 15), and that they should look upon it with love and respect, that they may not in riper years consider it an iron-clad organization and despotic rule of tyranny. While Paul, in the above instruction speaks to fathers; mothers, you can wield an influence over the minds of your sons and daughters that will be seen long after that body of yours, that spared no pains for their happiness, is confined to its narrow house.

Yet the admonition of the Lord, in regard to dress is, "modest apparel," and such saint-like cherubs should wear modest apparel as well as the saint-like mother. Some say that so few, in some localities, dress their children plain, that it is a hard task to carry out the above instructions. This is all true, yet I wish not to falter when arrayed against eight hundred and fifty false prophets. Neither should you be controlled by popular opinion; for they will want costly array soon enough. But while you have control over them, let their little bodies remain unflattered by the fashions of the world.

Another silent, nevertheless sure, agent in the hands of Satan, is bad company. It may consist of immoral companions, or of trashy literature. Great care should be taken that the youth have suitable reading matter to engage their minds at home, to keep them out of degrading society and to keep them from under as bad an influence,—that of sinful and useless reading; for young people will read, and if they do not have good reading matter they will read the reverse, and thus instead of reading "being a savor of life unto life," it will be rendered "Of death unto death."

The Sunday-school, if conducted in order, is a great help in keeping young people out of bad company, and at the same time giving them good instruction. Where is there a moral man, to say nothing of a Christian, that would sooner his boys would ramble over the fields hunting or by the brook fishing, or perchance in some nook playing cards on Sunday than to send to Sunday-school, where they can sing the songs of Zion and learn of Jesus' redeeming love?

MODERATE DRINKING.

"I DRINK a little occasionally for my health," says the moderate drinker, and feels that he has will-power sufficient to resist the tendency to drunkenness. But while you may have the power to resist, yet by your example you lead another into the same line of "moderate use," and he cannot resist and becomes a confirmed inebriate, and you are the cause of his destruction. Are you not your "brother's keeper?" Moderate drinking has a tendency to drunkenness. How many commence with opium drops or pills that do not become confirmed opium inebriates? While in my days we lost their self control yet thousands of individuals here, and all can testify that the tendency of alcoholic drinks is to create a desire for its continued use and the end is an alcoholic inebriate. These are facts which cannot be denied. And the only safe way to live is not to create an acquired taste and an attachment for stimulants is to observe the rule "touch not, taste not, handle not, which is in short total abstinence."

A YOUNG man having called in his physician, said, "Now, sir, I wish no more trifling. My desire is that you at once strike at the root of my disease." "It shall be done," replied the doctor; and lifting his cane he smashed the decanter which stood on the table.

TRUTH is the property of God; the parcel of truth is what belongs to man.

The Old Testament in the Jewish Church.—By W. Robertson Smith, M. A. —Cloth, 446 pages; price $1 75. For sale by D Appleton & Co., 1, 3 and 5 Broad Street, New York.

The mechanical part of the work is neatly executed, and the type bold and clear affording those of a visage much pleasure in reading. The author treats his subject with marked ability, carrying the reader through the age of the Jewish church, with feelings of love and sympathy for that people. Christian interpretation and Jewish tradition are compared. There is a chapter on "The Scribes," another on "The Septuagint," "The History of the Canon," "The Psalter," "The Traditional Theory of the Old Testament History," "The Law and History of Israel Before the Exile," "The Prophets," "The First Legislation," "Civil and Levitical Law," with "Notes and Illustrations," make up the remainder of the book. —The Law and History of Israel before the Exile is alone worth the price of the book. Many new facts are brought out, and the old clothed with a freshness and beauty that makes the reader long for more when the end is reached. The book is worthy a place in every Christian household.

The North American Review for September opens with a profoundly philosophical article on "The Church, the State, and the School," by Prof. Wm. T. Harris. M. J. Savage treats of "Natural Ethics," showing that the principles of morality are rooted in man's nature, and are the products of evolution; consequently they are not affected by the vicissitudes of dogma or religious creeds. The Rev. John A. Kason gives a history of the "Monroe Declaration," and proves that the credit of formulating that cardinal doctrine of American state-manship is due to John Quincy Adams. The Rev. Everett Hale writes of the Taxation of Church Property. He would have all churches taxed in form, but would exempt in practice those which by their charitable work help to lighten the public burdens. Other articles of rare merit make this magazine very interesting and readable. Fifty cents per copy Five dollars per year. Address, "The North American Review, New York, N. Y."

A Very Shrewd Swindle.

The Dubuque Times exposes a new dodge which is being extensively resorted to by shrewds, to swindle the farmers hereabouts. The modus operandi adopted is as follows: The farmer is first, of course persuaded to take the agency for the sale of a certain reaping machine, of a standard make, after which he readily signs such a paper as the one below, which is apparently but a fair contract. In order to see the gist of the swindle, fold the paper where the dotted line (which, of course, is not on the paper the farmer signs) appears across the paper, and it will be seen that all the agent has to do, is to cut it in two here and he has a genuine note of hand, which he can get discounted at any bank, where the farmer is known to be responsible. We advise our farmer readers to look out for such catches as this:

One year after date I promise to pay to J. C. Sharp or to order, Ten Dollars, when I shall by order, One Hundred and Twenty-Five Dollars, worth of Patent Reaping Machine, for Value Received, at six per cent, per annum, until Ten Dollars when due, to be payable at.....1881.County
------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------	------------	-------------

It is a very neat device, well calculated to deceive the farmers. Our country readers should be on the guard against its operation.

BRETHREN AT WORK.

Set for the defense of the Gospel.--Philipp. 1: 17.

Sixth Copy, Fifth Issue.

Vol. 6.

Mt. Morris, Ill., Tuesday, Sept. 6, 1881.

No. 34.

Editorial Items.

PLACE be to the brethren, and love with faith.

STATES are represented at the Mt. Morris College, and still they come.

Bro. London West recently visited brother and sister May, and found them in moderate health.

Bro. James Evans expects to hold a series of meetings in Saline Co., Mo., some time in October.

On account of the scarcity of water the Communion in the Blue Ridge church, Ill., has been postponed.

Bro. Christian Hope's address is changed from Fredonia to Foxendale, Denmark.

The Brethren at River Falls, Wisconsin, desire some general aid at their Love-feast Oct. 1st. "Who will give?"

For 600 man Minutes, send all orders to Dev. Brethren, 600 man Centre, Iowa, Single copy 10 cts.; per dozen $1.00.

Bro. Sharp is here and hard at work at school. Hope his new home may afford him many pleasures and much joyful comfort.

PRESIDENT Garfield cost much to improve slowly. The prayers and sympathies of the nation are still going up to him in his behalf.

A THUNDER storm passed over parts of Georgia and South Carolina Aug. 27, causing great destruction to property.

Bro. J. H. Worn, formerly editor of the Preacher, has moved to Lancaster, Ohio, and is at work on the Worshiper Free Press.

Writing under date of Aug. 18th, our friend Will Hall says, "This day is memorable to me as my sixty-ninth birthday."

NINETY arrangements for Fall Love-feasts have appeared thus far in the B. AT W. What a vast amount of holy joy at these meetings!

The September number of the Micromeris is at hand. It is full of rich thought, and appears neat and clean. The editor's scientific puzzles are worth the price of the paper.

Bro. Moore's labor as Managing Editor of the B. AT W. has closed, and he will, in the next issue, give the subscribers a parting address as such, but shall continue to edit for the paper.

Bro. Martin Meyer, of Lanark, returned from Kansas work before last. He reports crops in a fair condition in some parts of Kansas and Nebraska, and in other parts badly damaged by the drought.

This Issue Micromeris which has been printed and mailed in the B. AT W. office, the past year, will soon be sent to Huntington, Pa., where brother J. Howard Floy will give it his personal attention.

The Progressive is also in favor of uniformity. It publishes review letters that are uniform in style and tone, and neither has the name of the writer. This looks as if Henry Stone believe in sections after all.

WHILE in Iowa a few days ago we called on Mr. Loren, editor of the Star, and found him happy and cheerful in his cozy and well arranged room.

The Brother published at treaty Centre, Iowa, by brethren Wetzel and Snyder is on our table. They issue a good paper. Now let them have a large list so they can continue their laudable enterprise.

ELDEN M. S. Newcomer, Assistant Editor of the Church Advocate, gave us a pleasant call the morning of the 2nd. He is now located in Mendota, this State, where he is actively engaged in the ministry.

BRETHREN frequently write to this office to ascertain where Brethren's hats may be had. For the information of all we say, address Bro. J. R. Big, Lanark, Ill., who is the inventor of said hat. He can supply you.

TO DAY (Sept. 1-8) is the 37th birthday of the editor. How sweetly have the thirty-seven years flown by, and how little has been done in behalf of suffering humanity!

"The flood of time is setting on,
We stand upon its brink."

We have a card from Howard Miller the county-taker, stating that all the churches in Southern Illinois except Portland, or Moundin, or Woodland (cannot tell which as it is written so poorly) have repented. Who can unravel this?

No doubt many have wondered why the close of a College school-year is called "Commencement." The name as applied to the school is a misnomer, but when applied to the student's intellectual career is correct. "The life of school ends, but the school of life commences."

We spent the night of the 27th ult., with brother Eschey and family at his residence in Lena. Brother Ely has a pleasant and comfortable home in one of the prettiest and best-located towns in the State. The Brethren should have a meeting-house there and regular appointments.

SCHOOLS opened Sept. 1st, with a full corps of teachers and a large number of students. Many who were here last year have returned. The familiar faces and gentle voices enliven all of us, and joy seems to characterize every heart. We hope both teachers and students may find their stay among us pleasant and profitable.

It is said that there is a secret organization whose object is the killing of Gideon in case the President dies. Gen. Sherman has ordered several companies of soldiers and four batteries of artillery to Washington to prevent any violence in the event of the President's death. About 1,000 soldiers are held ready to guard the jail where the assassin is confined.

JONAH, instead of obeying the voice of the Lord to preach to the people of Nineveh, went on board a ship, paid his fare to Tyre, and determined to leave his countrymen. But while the ship was tossed by the sea and the waves, the mariners became alarmed, and every man cried unto his god and threw his goods and chattels overboard. But the winds ceased not for Jonah was there contrary to God's decree. So you, beloved Christian, may have unladed all your goods--self, will, covetousness, maliciousness, wickedness, hatred, variance, strife, and insolence, you are not on an ark sea if you go where there is reveling, banqueting, and amicable industries, as in a Masonic Lodge. Jonah's companions called upon the gods of stones, silver, sticks and stars to save them; and you better stay out of places where this is denied.

THE Progressive in an ill-timed perestroika takes Bro. R. H. Miller to task on proof-reading, and in the same article says of the Preacher: "Under the editorial charge of brethren Bashor and Worst their paper was gaining recognition among the leading papers of the country." Gaining recognition? What is that? The critic away from home and the bottom fell out of his barrel. It looks as if Henry had fallen under 1 John 2: 11. God grant that he may see his error and admit to the whole truth.

Our tailor, from Pennsylvania, (brother L. S. Andler) is newly covered up with work and is still in the same groove. He has secured help, but still no more steady employment and would receive the same from Brother Andler who go East about the 20th. He has left his family to take care of him. Perhaps he will not come here, saying he could not pay for his board. He expects to return about Oct. 1st.

FROM a letter by T. W. Drennan to Elder Fennimore, we learn that the former has concluded to leave the given pastures of the Lord for the dry banks of Adventism. This has so stimulated Eld. Fennimore that he challenges "any man of the Umker school or any other body" to meet him on the kingdom question. There are plenty of un-suspicious men over in Indiana that can accommodate him. It is the old story of Goliath defeating Israel repeated. The elder evidently has not read 1 Samuel 17.

We are frequently asked by contributors to other papers to copy, and so far as we could, have done so and shall do so in the future, but it should be remembered that original articles have the preference, and so long as there is an abundance of these, the B. AT W. must be content with copying. Death notices and Love-feast announcements, of course, will be attended to as usual; but memorials and church news should be sent direct to the Wagon to insure insertion. And please send down and hold down memorials unless the subject of your writing be widely known; for it is hardly fair to ask thousands to read what may be of interest to only a few. Please bear these things in mind when writing for the press.

On the 7th of September, if the weather is favorable, and if not then on the 8th, Prof. King will leave Minn.apolis, Minn., in a balloon for the Atlantic coast. It may pass near this place, and we suggest to our readers in Northern Illinois and Indiana to be on the lookout for the "air ship," as it will be very large and well seeing. If he succeeds in making the trip in safety, it is his intention to cross the Atlantic Ocean in the near future, believing that at a certain height there is a strong current of wind sweeping outward which will carry him safely over the mighty deep. The actualizing follows in such quick succession these days that we are prepared to accept them on short notice.

IN another place in this Issue will be found an extract from a letter written by brother Stein to his wife. It is of interest, and we hope a plentiful supply of correspondents may be received from his son. The long delay in obtaining anything from him is unaccountable to us; but knowing how easy it is to be prevented from writing by illness, or having written the letters to be lost, we make due allowance and patiently wait. To be alone in a foreign land, where the customs, habits, and religion are so very different from our own, is certainly not very pleasant. We hope, however, that our brother may be blessed of God in his lonely condition. He expects to continue school work on his return.

LITTLE SAMUEL.

BY JAMES Y. HECKLER.

When Samuel was a little boy,
He had to learn to stand and walk;
A pleasant little chap was he,
When he began to lisp and talk.

His mother's name was Hannah; she Greatly desired to have a son,
And then she prayed unto the Lord
Until he kindly gave her one.

A pretty little boy was he,
With curly hair and pleasant eye;
He used to look so smilingly,
But seldom turned his lip to cry.

His mother loved him tenderly;
But then she gave him to the Lord;
She parted with her only son,
To keep unbroken her plighted word.

She took him to the house of God
Where Eli did officiate,
And left him there in Eli's care,
When he became a prophet great.

Oh! it was hard to give him up,
To part with him, to leave him there,
When she herself would be away,
And could no more his meals prepare.

His mother to her home returned,
But left her little boy remote;
And when a year had passed away,
She went to see her son again.

For him she made a little suit
Of clothes, to clothe him, every year.
And every Spring when Easter came,
She in the temple did appear.

She always brought a little coat,
So long as he had need of one;
And every year when Easter came,
She went to see her darling son.

How many mothers in our day,
Who have an only child so good,
Wou'd not withdraw their promises
And keep their darling if they could?

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AND MILLENNIAL REIGN.

BY JAMES EVANS.

NUMBER V.

IN our previous articles we have endeavored to account for the widespread indifference that has obtained on the subject forming the caption of our articles. The religious press hardly ever mentions it except to involve it in hopeless obscurity or to clothe it in such attire as the ancient monks used to deck the persons of heretics with when led to the funeral pile. Since the middle ages, a sermon on the coming of Jesus was a description of the annihilation of the universe. The Judge appears and the heavens are clothed in black, the world from Adam to then are assembled there. Then we hear strange noises on every side. Devils howl, and hell opens and discloses its awful depths. The eternal fire roars from the abyss louder than all the thunders of the universe. These representations of the coming of the Redeemer doubtless were one grand reason why the subject was so seldom dwelt on. It afforded no comfort to preacher or hearer.

In the days of Peter, Paul, and the early Christians, it was otherwise. Then men turned from dumb idols to serve the true and living God, and to wait for Jesus from heaven. 1 Thes. 1: 10. This is what Jesus taught the disciples. Their loins wore to be girded about and their lights burning like unto men who wait for their Lord. Luke 12: 35. They were not only commanded to wait but also to watch for the coming of the Son of Man, who would come in an hour that they knew not. Two classes of servants were to co-exist, viz.: good and evil. The good servants or ministers of the Word were to be giving the household, meat in due season. They would be earnest and timely in their efforts to keep the church unspotted from the world. Non-conformity would be meat in due season, for no one practicing it in obedience to the will of Christ, would be overtaken unawares. The other class would be overtaken unawares. The other class would be eating and drinking with the drunken, and saying, "My Lord delays his coming." Such ministers of religion doubtless will be popular in their day and great advocates of fashion, under the plea of keeping up with the times. They will be promoting popular amusements for the members of their charges, and they will sneer at and despise those who leave all for Christ, and whose conduct is not according to the former lusts in their ignorance. Such self-denying followers of the Lamb will be smitten with evil words by the well-paid, ease-loving professed watchmen who are at ease in Zion, and who like dumb dogs, cannot bark, but recline on flowery beds of ease, but know not the day of their visitation when the Lord shall spoil their pastures in the day of Babylon's fall, to rise no more. Their end is to be numbered with hypocrites and unbelievers.

The prayer that Jesus taught his disciples to offer, refers to the coming of Jesus and his millennial reign. A late writer has denounced this hope of a kingdom under the whole heavens to be set up when the Redeemer comes to Zion, as absurd, and of the essence of materialism. The charge is unjust. What has materialism to do with the expectation of a kingdom beyond the resurrection? The Microcosm defines materialism to be life as the result of innate motion among the atoms of the bodily organization. They say that force and motion are identical, and that all things arose originally by spontaneous generation. Do such atheistical writers look for the return of Jesus to rule the world and subdue all things to himself? Were such men as Newton, Canning, Rutherford and many others, gross materialists? No man who believes that God created all things out of himself and that the force that gives motion, life, etc., is not the motion of atoms but the operation of the all-pervading and wondrous substance called ruach in Hebrew and pneuma in Greek, and spirit in English. All who believe that there is a spirit in man, a soul that enemies cannot kill and a life bid with Christ in God are not materialists, but believers in the all-present power of God.

Peter declared in Solomon's porch that the heavens would receive Jesus until the times of the restitution of all things, and that God would send Jesus. "The restitution of all things" is in the future and cannot be accomplished so long as the heavens retain Christ, because the wheat and tares are to grow together until the end of the age or aion. During the Gospel age the net is cast into the sea and gathers good and bad. At the end of the age the good are gathered into vessels, and the bad cast away. Then the work of restoring all things takes place. Human rule and the Prince of the power of the air or Satan ceases, and the saints of the first resurrection live and reign with Christ a thousand years. All the good done and accomplished now will flow into the millennial kingdom, so none need relax their efforts for good, even if they know they cannot convert the world in the present age. The kingdom or world to come that Jesus taught is not to be substituted by a kingdom in the heart as some imagine, but it will come with power, irresistible, when the work of taking out of the nations a people for his name is finished. Acts 15: 14. Notice the order of events in this passage:

1. God visits the Gentiles and takes a people out; that is, separates a people from the world. They are called the church, or in Greek ekklesia, which means called out ones, from kesis called, and ek out of. The whole world can never be called out ones or separated.

2. Jesus returns and builds again the tabernacle of David or restores the house of Israel after the flesh, which will be the kingdom on the earthly plane, but the glorification of those who have fallen under the power of death, and their exaltation to thrones will be the kingdom of God on the spiritual and heavenly plane. We now walk by faith and not by sight and are made meet for the inheritance of the saints in light, when we are translated into the kingdom of God's dear Son, by becoming related to this glorious kingdom and submitting to be governed by him who is the appointed Judge of living and dead, whom he will judge at his coming and kingdom. 2 Tim.

3. In the proper sense of the word the kingdom of God was not set upon the banks of the Jordan by John, nor by Peter on Pentecost, but is to be set up gloriously when Satan is cast into the abyss and Jesus reigns from the river to the ends of the earth. And yet in a very important sense the kingdom of God has been among men.

CHRIST THE POWER OF GOD AND THE WISDOM OF GOD.

BY M. C. BOGLER.

THE Jews require a sign and the Greeks seek after wisdom but we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness, but unto them which are called both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God and the wisdom of God. The Jews required a sign, a miracle, and a wonder, and the Greeks sought after wisdom and philosophy. In Paul's travels when he came into Greece and began to proclaim the everlasting Gospel of Christ, he found himself surrounded by great men and in the midst of literary institutions that taught philosophy, the sciences, poetry, and art; when he entered the magnificent and brilliant city of Athens, the headquarters of all the scientific institutions and began to proclaim the Gospel of Christ it was foolishness to them; their worship and philosophy were not in juxtaposition with the Gospel of Christ; but he would preach Christ and him crucified and raised from the dead. Paul was full of enthusiasm and felt triumphant and victorious. He was certain that the Gospel of Christ would overwhelm the earth. His mortal life was nothing, and his earthly comfort was nothing. His mortal afflictions were nothing in comparison to the eternal weight of glory he anticipated in the spiritual kingdom of Christ.

It was the distinguishing characteristic theosophy that Paul preached of justice, of righteousness, of temperance, and of judgment to come. Paul soon found that he was in jeopardy, but he did not soften judgment nor substitute mild words for hard words. He hewed to the line and let the chips fall where they wanted to, and proclaimed the Gospel of Christ boldly.

Paul stood in the midst of Mars Hill, and said, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious, for as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, 'To the unknown God.'" This gave Paul an important text to declare that God whom they ignorantly worshipped, that God who made the world and all things, is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands. Nor ought we to suppose that God is like unto gold or silver or stone graven by art and man's device.

Paul was not a builder of rainbows or a piper of soap bubbles; nor did he employ a galvanic battery to collect a congregation whether in proud pharisaical Jerusalem or in luxurious cosmopolitan Antioch, nor in dissolute commercial Corinth, nor in lordly pagan Ephesus. When Paul proclaimed the Gospel to a congregation at Lystra there sat a complete cripple from his mother's womb before him, who had never walked. Paul perceived that he had faith, and said, "Stand upright," and he walked. When the people saw the almighty power they wanted to worship him, saying, "The gods have come down in the likeness of men." The heathen idols, mythology, and fables were cold as moonbeams. They could not thunder in the heavens.

Paul taught that Christ came as a Savior and the power of God for the purification, amelioration, exaltation, and glorification of the human race, and that he revealed and manifested himself to be a Savior. Paul taught that man inherited a double nature; first a fleshly or animal nature and in the second a spiritual. He says, "That was not first that was spiritual, but that which is carnal," and afterward, "that which is spiritual," that it was the carnal law that he contended with. He sees that there are two bodies in one. Who shall deliver me from the body of this death? How shall I get rid of that nature into which I was born, which is continually tempting me and pulling me down, which I can only overcome by the spiritual. The spiritual law overwhelms the lusts, appetites, and satanical passions, and renders them subject to itself.

The Gospel of Christ is generosity, benevolence, justice, mercy, redemption, exaltation, and glorification. This is the constitution of the divine mode of bringing life into existence in the first condition, carnality, infirmity, imperfection, and transgression. God saw that the human family needed emancipation from their thraldom or lower nature, and to draw them upward He gave himself for them (to a certain degree the adaptability of the divine nature manifested and revealed a God of power, order and justice alone the adaptation of Christ to the actual wants of the condition of the human beings, the exercise of pity, of commiseration, of helpfulness so as to adapt them to their necessities) the infusion and development of the divine nature unto the human nature, and the spiritual nature in superiority to the fleshly nature, the forgiveness of sins, the inspiration of boldness, that forbearance which is essential in raising the human family from the lower life to the higher. That was the mission of Christ. He is the indwelling divine influence to exalt to a higher spiritual life. Without him, man's carnal body is predominant. Without him, the spirit in man is a babe that whimpers in its cries and jerks in crying. But with the power and indwelling of Christ that babe or divine nature is brought to perfection, and triumphant and rejoicing over death, sin, hell, and the devil. Christ lead a captivity captive, and gave gifts unto the human family.

The spirit of Christ is to exalt them to the heavenly kingdom, saying, "Ye are lost, ye are bound in captivity, and I am the ransom." He is the Savior of all. Now we have not a high-priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Christ came not as a transparent crystalline-perfected God, and as cold as crystals of ice; not a God that stands outside of the world, cursing it because it is a sinful, but a God that created mankind to run through a series of probations or problems that involve imperfection, infirmity, and sin in every human being; and created them thus knowing what he was doing, and putting himself into personal relations with them. The knowledge of that constitution that is adapted by the divine nature to the race as they have been, as they are, and as they will be, filled Paul with enthusiasm, rapture, and joy proclaiming the Lord Jesus Christ. "Thou, O Lord, art no longer a man of sorrow and acquainted with grief. Thou art advanced to the right hand of the majesty on high, and art a prince and a Savior;" but we yet walk in this mortal sphere, that casts its lights and shadows over the checkered scenes and pathway of our human existence. We are weak, tempted, and filled with trouble and sickness. When thou wast with us thou didst heal all our infirmities, and hast promised us to seek and we shall find, ask, and it shall be given. We praise and adore thee that thou hast opened the way for us, by which we come unto the father with enough understanding of the divine nature to encourage us to leave our burden here and seek our treasure in heaven. We pray thee that whatsoever is sinful and odious in thy sight that it may become sinful and disgusting in our sight, that we may have no more desire for the sinful lusts of the eye, flesh and pride of worldly fashions. And when the time comes for us to change this mortality for immortality, save us with an everlasting salvation. Amen.

MORE important than the thing you do may be the discipline of the doing.

THE GOOD SHEPHERD.

BY JOHN HARSCHBARGER.

THE Shepherd spoken of in the 10th chapter of John is Christ, and the fold the Jewish church; the only one ever erected on earth. In the parable in the first five verses the Savior principally referred to himself: "Verily, verily I say unto you, He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." 1 ver. "But he that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep." 2 ver. "To him the porter openeth, and the sheep hear his voice; and he calleth his own sheep by name, and leadeth them out." 2 ver. "And when he putteth forth his own sheep he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him, for they know his voice." 4 ver. "And a stranger will they not follow, but will flee from him; for they know not the voices of strangers.

Here in the first verse the Savior's language also includes those false teachers and false prophets and false Christs that came before him who claimed to be in the fold. He gave them to understand that they had been climbing up some other way. His language is, "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold but climbeth up some other way is a thief and a robber; but he that entereth by the door is the shepherd of the sheep." This represents the Savior. He entered the Jewish church by the door at the proper time. The Father (the porter) opened and the sheep heard his voice, and he called his own sheep by name and led them out. "He came unto his own," etc. John 1: 11. And as many as received him he put forth and went before them, and they followed him, for they knew his voice. All those that had come before Christ were strangers. The sheep would not follow them. They did not know their voice; but when the good Shepherd appeared he called his own sheep by name and put them forth; viz.: Peter, James, John, Andrew and Philip, etc., and he went before them. They now constitute a flock, of which Christ is represented to be their Shepherd.

There is a vast difference between a fold and a flock; a fold in the sense in which it is spoken in this chapter signifies an enclosure—house or sheep pen. Now it would not make sense to speak of Christ being the shepherd of an enclosure, or sheep pen. Mark the language.

2 ver. He that entereth in by the door is the shepherd of the sheep; not the shepherd of the fold, but the shepherd of the sheep or flock. The term flock signifies a collection of living creatures, or a company, or etc.

In the 7th verse Christ says, "I am the door of the sheep; that is, alone through and by him we enter this flock or company, and that the names are put upon the roll. "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out and find pasture." All that properly enter by Christ into this flock or company are bounded or limited just as the natural shepherd who has guard of a certain boundary. His sheep are then at liberty to graze anywhere inside of these boundary lines; they may go to and fro, in and out, and find pasture; that is, they can go into the midst of the flock and out again, just so they remain inside of the boundary marked out by a shepherd. Though a sheep might be found grazing by himself outside of the flock yet upon examination if his mark be found to correspond with that of his flock authorized by the shepherd there would be no difficulty to decide where he belongs. So in like manner we are at liberty to transact business,—attend to the temporal as well as the spiritual calling anywhere inside of the limited boundary marked out by Christ our Shepherd in the New Testament. Though a brother may be found outside of the flock upon the highway or in the town or village upon an errand of Christian duty, yet if his mark of profession be found to correspond with the mark of his flock as taught by the Shepherd in the New Testament, there will be no difficulty in deciding where he belongs. But if he is ashamed of the mark, and will undertake to cover it over with borrowed fleece or furs, this would at once deny the principle and prove to a demonstration that such a one is no sheep. "And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: these I also must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold and one shepherd."

The term sheep in the sense in which it is used here by the Savior includes such who were ignorant of the things concerning him; for they had not yet followed him. He had not led them out of the Jewish fold, yet he spoke of them as being his sheep. From the fact that they were honest and ready to receive the truth concerning him so soon as presented to them, they were sheep at heart,—innocent and harmless; not malicious and rebellious, but possessed the principles and disposition of sheep, which to-day are the true characteristics of a Christian. Consequently when he put them forth and went before them, they became his followers. The others which were among the Gentiles he says he also must bring, and they shall hear his voice, though he did not call them by name and lead them out or put them forth as he did those among the Jews. The Gentiles were brought by another process; yet by the authority of Christ they only had his voice through the Gospel—were brought by the disciples; and that kind of work has been going on, and is still continued; ultimately there shall be one fold and one shepherd. Out of the old Jewish fold Christ started the flock, and its numbers have been increased to a large amount, though I fear that there are a great many wolves in disguise.

I have frequently heard the term shepherd applied to preacher, pastor, and bishop. There is only one shepherd, and that is Christ. I think the term herdsmen would better apply to those above mentioned, yet from observation we are led to conclude that many of them are even poor herdsmen; they surely must have fondled and petted the wolf—allowed him to come into the flock until it has resulted in amalgamation and the flock most terribly degenerated.

THE SPIRIT OF SONG.

BY M. F. LIBERTY.

"Be filled with the spirit, speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."—Eph. 5: 18, 19.

THE Hebrew race, God's chosen people, were supremely fond of music, both vocal and instrumental; and why should they not have been so, when we cannot help it, but feel, that the song of praise is an act of devotion so becoming, so delightful, and so excellent that we find it co-eval with the sense of Deity.

The song of praise is authorized by the example of all nations, and it is universally received into the solemnities of public worship. It seems that under the Jewish Dispensation, the Holy Spirit of God directed this expression of homage, as peculiarly becoming the place where his honor dwelleth. The book of Psalms, as the name itself implies, is adapted to the voice of song; and the author of those pretty odes well knew the sweetness, the dignity, and the animation that was thereby added to sacred service. David most rapturously describes the beauties of song, and calls fervently upon his fellow-beings to join in the delightful duty. Hear him say—"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord, and sing praises unto thy name, O thou Most High. Praise ye the Lord, for it is good to sing praise to our God; for it is pleasant and praise is comely. O sing unto the Lord a new song—sing unto the Lord all the earth—sing unto the Lord—bless his name: shew forth his salvation from day to day." Nor has Christianity dispensed with such excellent sacrifice; it commands us to address the Father in spirit and in truth. The apostles very frequently exhort to observe this duty. The Saviour concluded the Lord's Supper with a hymn of praise.

Brethren, let the Word of God dwell in us richly in all wisdom, teaching and admonishing one another in Psalms and hymns, and spiritual songs, singing with grace in our hearts, unto the Lord.

POWER AND NECESSITY OF LOVE.

BY C. H. BROWN.

THE apostle Paul in his letter to the Romans (12 chap. 9 ver.) says, "Let Love be without dissimulation." Love is the grand and vital principle of Christianity. It was love which caused our Saviour to leave the shining courts of glory and give his life a ransom for us. And he demands that we love one another even as he has loved us; not in word neither in tongue, but in deed and in truth. We should be very careful and not pretend to love a brother or sister when we have bitterness in our hearts against them, for we thus practice deceitfulness, and are in danger of the lake of fire. My desire and prayer to God is that we may all have that perfect love that casteth out fear

ORDER IN THE FAMILY.

BY F. C. MYERS.

HOW pleasant it is to one when he enters into a house and sees all things decent and in order, and to see the inmates have love one to another. I have already noticed that there is as much difference in the way that people have to raise their children as there is between night and day. One parent balloons only with a loud and threatening voice to the child, which is not heeded, the next minute jumps up, gathers hold of the cowhide and begins to whip. I have noticed that they have not accomplished anything for it; is the same to-day as it was when I knew them ten years ago. Another family will scold the children, but the scolding is repeated over and over. Another one says, "I will whip you," and when they are gone that is the last of it. Another will say nothing, which does as well as the above mentioned. Some fathers or mothers, whichever the case may be, are all the time scolding, and when one of the parents does undertake to correct the child, the other interferes. This proves a weakness in the one who interferes. Another family that I know who is raising its children with kind and loving words, has gained more than all the rest put together. Don't scold; for the sake of your children don't do it. It is a great misfortune to have children reared in the presence and under the influence of a scold. The effects of the everlasting fault-finding of such persons is to make the young who hear it unamiable, malicious, callous hearted, and they often learn to take pleasure in doing the very thing for which they receive such tongue-lashings. As they are always getting the blame of wrong-doing, whether they deserve it or not, they think they might as well do wrong as right. They lose all ambition to strive for the favorable opinion of the fault-finder, since they see their striving is in vain. Thus a scold is not only a nuisance, but a destroyer of the morals of children. If these unloved, dreaded people could only see themselves as others see them, they would flee to the mountains in very shame.

GAMBLING.

BY ISAAC D. HARRIS.

EVERY device that suddenly changes money or property from one person to another without a quid pro quo, or leaving equivalent produces individual embarrassment—often extreme misery. More pernicious is that plan, it changes property and money from the hands of the many to the few. Gambling does this, and often inflicts a still greater injury, by poisoning its victims with vices that eventually lead to crimes of the darkest hue. Usually the money, barely fished from its victims, is the smallest part of the injury inflicted. It almost invariably leads to intemperance. Every species of offense on the black catalogue of crime may be traced to the gambling tables—the entering wedge to its perpetration.

This alarming evil is as wide-spread as our country; it is practiced, from the humblest water craft that floats on our canals up to the majestic steamboat on our mighty rivers; from the lowest groceries that curse the community up to the most fashionable hotels that claim respectability; from the hod carrier in his bespotted rags, up to the honorable members of Congress in their ruffles, like a mighty mad-storm, its motion at the outset is scarcely perceptible but soon increases to a fearful velocity; suddenly the awful center is reached—the victim is lost in the vortex. Interested friends may warn, the wife may entreat with all the eloquence of tears; children may cling and cry for bread. Once in the fatal snare, the victim of gambling is seldom saved—he combines the deafness of the adder with the desperation of a maniac, and rushes on, regardless of danger, reckless of consequences. Beware, young men, of such places.

To the fashionable of our country who play cards and other games as an innocent amusement, we may trace the most aggravated injuries resulting from gambling. It is there that young men of talent, education, and wealth, take the degree of entered apprentice. The example of men in high life, men in public stations and responsible offices, has a powerful and corrupting influence on society, and does much to increase the evil, and forward, as well as sanction the high-handed rubbing of fine-dressed blacklegs. The gambling-hells in our cities, tolerated and patronized, are a disgrace to a nation bearing a Christian name, and would be banished from a Pagan community.

Gambling assumes a great variety of forms; from the flipping of a cent in the bar-room for a glass of whisky, up to the splendidly furnished Euro-bank rooms where men are occasionally swindled to the tune of "ten thousand a year," and sometimes a much larger amount. In addition to these varieties we have legitimized lotteries and fancy stock-brokers, and among those who manage them, professors of religion are not unfrequently found.

Let me entreat all to shun the monster, under all his borrowed and deceptive forms. Remember that gambling for amusement is the wicked gate into the labyrinth, and once in, you may find it difficult to get out. "Ruin" is marked in blazing capitals over the gambler's door. His hell is the vestibule to that eternal hell "where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched." If he does not become a bankrupt in property, he is sure to become one in character and in moral principles; he becomes a debauched, debased, friendless vagabond.

JOYS TO THE CHRISTIAN.

EMILY R. STEIFLER.

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given; and the government shall be on his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." Isa. ix. 6.

GOD created man for a wise purpose. He breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and formed man after His (God's) own image. Man was placed in the garden of Eden to subvert upon the fruit thereof, except at the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which God forbade him to eat; but not regarding the counsels of God, Adam and Eve did partake of the forbidden fruit. Thus man fell into sin and degradation. Hence it was necessary that a Son should be born into the world, that man might be redeemed from his sad and lamentable fate. More than eighteen and a half centuries ago this wonderful King was born in the city Bethlehem, in the land of Judea. Matt. 2: 1 Through the birth of Christ—this Wonderful Counselor, the Prince of Peace, man was to be redeemed from the everlasting curse into which he had fallen. It certainly must have been unspeakable joy to those shepherds, who were feeding their flocks, to learn of the birth of the Great Governor who should rule and govern all Israel, and not Israel alone, but the entire universe. No wonder that they followed the star until they reached the spot where the child was. No wonder that they presented unto Him gifts of such an intrinsic value as gold, frankincense and myrrh. But had the shepherds any greater reason to rejoice at that time than we should at this present century. Although hundreds of years have elapsed since the birth and death of Christ, yet His name, His precious name resounds and the echoes vibrate as sweetly to-day as they did at that time, and His statement for me stands as adamantine to-day as it did for those who many centuries ago were placed in the tomb to moulder back to dust. But do we fully appreciate the great and intrinsic value of His atonement for us? Can we fully realize that although many hundred years have elapsed since His severe trial in Gethsemane, His agonizing prayers, groans, and sweat-drops of blood as they fell from that sacred brow, that eventful night when He implored His Father that if it were possible, the bitter cup might be removed. Can we fully comprehend that Christ endured all this lamentable agony that we might enjoy the fullness of that heavenly glory?

Gentle reader, let us ponder well the subject before us. Think of that delightful Christmas morn, when the bells chimed the story; and the glorious news was proclaimed that a Babe was born into the world who should be "Lord of Lords and King of Kings," who should lead captivity captive and give gifts unto men (Eph. 4: 8), who should hold all power in heaven and on the earth in His right hand, and at the end of time call the saints whom He redeemed by His precious blood, to stand at God's right hand and obtain the crown of righteousness that fadeth not away.

May we all be so unspeakably happy as to enter the portals of peace and sing the songs the angels sing:

Now let us join with hearts and tongues,
And imitate the angels' song:
Yes, sinners may address their King,
In songs the angels cannot sing.

HOW AND WHY.

BY GEO. A. SHAMBERGER.

HOW and why! What stumbling-blocks! The "what" is more necessary. I am urged, by a feeling, I trust, of brotherly kindness, to call for a pause. In No. 30, Bro. Orr expresses, I think, some pertinent thoughts; but, at the same time, there seems to be an impression left upon the mind not intended by the writer. I am aware of the sensitiveness of brethren who do not favor what is known as "an educated ministry;" and, when their objections are properly stated, I agree with them; for they are usually not understood.

"How can I stir the energies of another soul when I do not know the how of the operation of my own?" Is this possible? Can it be that I must know how? If so, I shall never make much of a stir.

When I look at the false theories that have obtained, I feel amazed to discover that a few have been stirred; for surely, if we have a false notion of the operations of the soul, and work upon that method, we could never stir a soul—let us pause. After all, the conclusion is not so clear; many who are well versed in mental science, say they have no soul. If I should call for brethren to give a plain disquisition of the soul's operations, how many would stand up? Of those who rise, how many are present as soul-stirrers? The truth is, most of the great persuaders are not best posted in the sciences. They have received a divine impetus that far outstrips the most labored deductions of mortals.

"The world by wisdom knew not God." By all means, brethren, let us pause. What! have the floodgates of light just beautiful? Jesus says, "I am the light of the world." I thought he was manifested long ago. Let us not leave the sunlight and run after a juck o' lantern. I believe that I am a friend to proper education, but do not induce this great uprising because one of the pillars of vain philosophy is taken away. The errors of one age are disclosed by its successor. There is no reason to be alarmed. The floods and suddenness and immensity, I fear, will be long on the way. It will be surprising, if some of the brethren are not drowned in a dead sea of terms. We should think. But "let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." It would be no sed thing to hear that we knew more about our own minds; but, joy unspeakable to hear that we are all filled with the mind of Christ. Let us pause.

EVENING

FOLLOWING PEACE.

FOLLOW peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see God. Heb. 12: 14. The holiness of the Gospel has for its grand objects God and our neighbor. To love God supremely is the first and great concern of the believer; hence, he makes it his ambition to please God. That yoke, which others account heavy, he deems light, and thinks one of his commandments grievous. The worship of God, instead of being burdensome to him, is his pleasure.

We see little practical religion among many nominal Christians and unstable professors; hence, there is a want of mutual affection. This is manifested by their contentions and proneness to separate on trifling occasions; we should rather bear injuries than resent them; rather recede from our rights, than contentiously to maintain them. But never sacrifice the holy principles of God for man.

We should forgive our greatest enemies. "If thy enemy hunger, feed him, if he thirst give him drink," and thus heap coals of fire on his head and melt him down by kindness.

Active benevolence is a necessary fruit of holiness. Dear Brethren, make the Word of God the rule of your actions, instead of your feelings.

It is the solemn determination of heaven, that without holiness no man can see the Lord. Let us not be deceived, what a man soweth he shall surely reap. An un sanctified soul can never gain admittance into heaven.

Therefore immediately flee to the Savior, and implore the aid of his spirit to make thee holy.

Amidst temptations, sharp and long, let thy soul to this dear refuge flee. M. C. N.

ERRORS IN MARRIAGE.

MANY of the errors of life admit of remedy. A loss of business may be repaired by a gain in another. A miscalculation this year may be retrieved by special care next year. A bad partnership may be dissolved, an injury repaired, a wrong step retraced; but an error in marriage goes to the very root and foundation of life. It is said that no man is utterly ruined until he has married a worthless wife; and so every woman has a future before her until she is chained in wedlock, which is a padlock, to a wretched and unworthy man; The deed once done cannot be recalled, the wine of life is wasted, and the goblet broken and no tears and looks can bring back the precious draught.

Let the young think of this, and let them walk carefully in a world of sorrows, and take heed to their steps, lest in the most critical event of life they go fatally astray.

But here we must guard against another error. Many people think they have made a mistake when it is only in their own behavior since they were married.

Good husbands make good wives, and good wives make good husbands, and the scolding, or immoderate, or slatternly partner often has but himself or herself to blame for the misery that clouds the life and desolates the home. Multitudes who feel that their marriage was a mistake, and who make their existence a life-long misery, might, by a little self-denial and forbearance and gentleness and old-time courtesy, make their home brighter like the gates of Eden, and bring back the old love that blessed the happy golden days gone by.

Suppose the wife does not know quite as much as you do, well, you showed your great judgment when you thought her the chief among ten thousand; or, if your husband is not the most wonderful man in the world, it simply illustrates the wit and wisdom of the young woman who once thought he was and would not be convinced to the contrary; so, perhaps you are not so unevenly matched after all, and if one has had better opportunities since married, then of course, that one should teach, and cultivate, and encourage the other, and so journey on together; but if one has grown worse and sunk lower than at the beginning, perhaps even then, patience and toil and sunshine may bring back the erring one to duty, lift up the fallen, rescue the perishing, and save the lost. How glorious for a wife to pluck her husband from the jaws of ruin and bring him safely to the heavenly home. How blessed for the husband to bring back to the gates of paradise the woman who, through weakness, may have been led astray. (N.)

YOUR BOY.

YOU do not know what is in him. Bear with him; be patient; wait, feed him, love him. He is a boy, and most boys are bad. You think him light-hearted, and fear he is light-headed as well. But remember he calls you father. When he played in your lap you fondly hoped he would some day be a great and useful man. Now that he has grown larger, and his young blood drives him into gleeful sport, and makes him impatient of serious things, rattling, playful, thoughtless, you almost despair. But don't be snappish and snarlish and make him feel that you are disappointed in him. He is your boy, and you are to live in him. He bears your name, and is to send it down the stream of time. He inherits your fortune and fame, and is to transmit them to future generations to come.

It cannot be otherwise. A daughter divides your fortune, transmits less of your fame, and loses your name. A boy is more nearly yourself than anything else can be. It is through your boy you go down in history; through your boy you are named upon the generation that is to come.

It may be difficult to govern him, but be patient; he may seem averse to everything useful and good, but wait. No one can tell what is in a boy. He may surprise you some day. Hope. Let him grow. While his body grows larger and stronger, his mental and moral nature may expand and improve.

Some boys are men in stature but are still boys in mind. It may be so with your boy; and if so, there is reason for hope. In such cases there is often a great outcome. The body is the tree, the mind, the fruit. It is well for the tree to take deep root before it is loaded with fruit; then the fruit will be the more and better.

Educate your boy. You may think money spent in that way is money spent in vain. There is nothing in him; he has no pride, no ambition, no aspiration. You don't know. No one can tell what is in a boy. Besides, there may be an unkindled spark, an unfanned flame, a smouldering fire, a latent energy, which the teacher's rod may stir, the association with books and men may develop and direct, and thus start your boy a-going, with such energy and determination, that no power on earth can stop him short of the topmost round in the ladder of fame.

If you cannot educate him, let him educate himself. That is the best way. That will make him strong, a giant with whom no one dare to interfere. Such are the best men in this world. The greatest benefactors of the race have stooped their shoulders to bear hardships, have carried hands bandaged with rough labor, have endured the fatigue of toil. Many such are in our minds now. Labor omnia vincit. "Labor conquers all things." The old Roman was right. We see it in a thousand instances. Labor makes the man. No boy ever came to be a man, the noblest work of God, without labor. This is God's great law; there is a divine philosophy in it. Let your boy work; if he will not work, make him work. There is no progress, no development, no outcome, no true manhood without it. We must work.

A wild, rattling, thoughtless boy of the days of yore is in our mind's eye. Who would have thought it? He is a strong, active, efficient, untiring Baptist preacher, of large influence in another State. A another, a successful physician, occupying a good position in this city, and a Christian gentleman.

Father, be kind to your boy. We know what a mother will do. Thank God, a mother's love, a mother's prayers follow us still; and the memory of her anxious tears shall never fade out during the succession of years. Finally, but not least, pray for your boy. God hears prayer. Do the best you can, command all that you cannot do, to God, and hope. Never despair, for no one knows what is in a boy. (N.)

THE carpenter man measures the same each way, and he hasn't any wavy edges or shaly lumber in him. It is his rule from knots and sap, and won't warp. It is level stuff, and I don't care what you work him up into, he won't swell, and he won't shrink. He is amongst men what good kind-dried boards are among carpenters; he won't season-crack. It don't make any difference which side of him you come up to, he is the same size each way, and the only way to get at him any how, is to face him. He knows he is square, and never spends any time in trying to prove it. The square man is one of the best shaped men the world has ever produced; he is one of that kind of people who can't alter the spot to fit a spot, but you must alter the spot to fit him.

This is one of the sad conditions of life, that experience is not transmissible. No man will learn from the suffering of another; he must suffer himself.

CONSOLIDATION.

It would give great power and more union in the church, if all our papers were consolidated into one, and that under the control of our Annual Conference. We would all then be much more likely to speak the same thing, and be of one mind; because in that respect we would have but one teacher. Divisions or schisms would not occur, if the church were under the influence of but one paper. We have many brethren like Brother Quinter who work for union, while we have other brethren who work for some peculiar notions of their own, more than they do for the union of the church. If we had but one paper, and under the control of the church, men who work for the union of the church would be kept at the head of it, in order that we have the church solid and firm, we must have union or consolidation in our papers; with a number of papers maintaining different views among us, we will have division as the natural result sooner or later. This fact is plain before our eyes, and we should make a greater effort than we have done to have some control on our papers. Every personal interest should be sacrificed by our editors and brethren. If there be anything in the way of consolidation it should be removed, and the one great object of making a more perfect union, should be paramount to all others. There are objects and difficulties brought up against consolidation, but we see none that are insurmountable. It is said that other papers may be started. Well we think a brother has no more right to start a paper independent of the Brotherhood, than he has to start out preaching independent of it. We can keep our paper on the principle of uniting in it and making it strong in every way, that others like it in sentiment cannot afford to start, and any different sentiment were not.—R. H. M. In Gospel Preacher.

Bro. Miller urges power and union as his plea for consolidating our papers. They are both good, if they be the divine power and the heavenly union. These, we think, Bro. Miller urges, advocates and maintains. One paper, conducted in the interests of the Brethren's church would be a blessing. The B. AT W., is therefore willing to yield itself as a member of the union, and suggests that a stock company be formed to purchase all the papers now published by the Brethren, and make of them one grand publishing concern at some central point. This publishing house should be at some good railroad centre, and where every facility for good and rapid work is afforded. Chicago is a fine point. It might be thought best to locate where there is a church, but this we think not one of the essentials. Transportation on paper, printing material, etc., is an important item, and by locating in Chicago all this could be saved. It may be urged that rent is too high there. True, rent is high, yet the savings in freight and express will more than counterbalance the rent, and besides the mailing facilities are very superior there. But we will submit to the decisions of a committee which would necessarily be chosen to locate the institution.

Our idea is, that 1000 shares of $50.00 each should be sold, and that the Brethren generally should subscribe to this stock. Holder of stock would be entitled to as many votes as shares held by him. The Stock-holders should elect Trustees, and these Trustees appoint editors and Business Manager, and have a general oversight of the Publishing Business. These Trustees should be amenable to Annual Meeting, and be men sound in the faith and established in the doctrine of the Lord Christ. The term of trustees should be limited as also of editors and business manager. Of course in this brief outline, many details cannot be noticed. These would necessarily come up at a conference of the proprietors of the papers.

Now that the charge of selfishness may not be lodged against us, we respectfully submit to our readers this, our willingness to abide by the work of the trustees. If we are relegated to the farm, or school-room or the work-shop, all will be well. If on the other hand we be given a position on the new firm, we shall be contented. What says our readers on consolidation? The interests of our readers shall be protected if we do. Shall we go into it? If, however, we fail to consolidate, please remember that we shall go on as we have been doing, with the hope of growing in grace and the knowledge of the Truth. M. M. E.

OUR TRIP TO MISSOURI.

HAVING a few weeks leisure, we concluded to visit a few points in Missouri, hence, in company with Bro. Aaron Warble, of Lanark, and Mr. Henry Stover of Polo, we left Lanark at 3 P. M., Aug. 16, and without change of cars, reached Kansas City the next morning at ten. Part of the day was spent viewing this thriving city of the West. It was the warmest day we had experienced this season, causing us to suffer considerably from the excessive heat. The roads were dry and dusty the dust at times flying most furiously.

At 3:30, we started for Lexington, Mo., on the narrow gauge road running from Kansas City to that place. The ride was not so pleasant on account of the heat and dust, otherwise it was rather amusing at times. We do not hesitate to say that the conductor was the most accommodating gentleman of the kind we ever met. As the train came in sight of some cozy country residence, the children would start for the road with all the energy they could command. Presently the train would stop and let their mother off. On we would go a few miles and suddenly stop at some cross road to let a passenger off or take some one on. This thing was repeated until it finally became a little amusing. We concluded that if we lived in Missouri we should certainly want to live near this road; for it would then be so easy to get on and off the cars without going to the depot.

From Lexington we passed on to Brownsville, Saine county, after night, being could see but little of the country. The next morning found us on our way to Eld. D. L. Williams', six miles in the country. We had come to look for Saine county, and some of the curiosities of it, so Bro. Williams gave us to understand that he was at our service, and took special pains to show us all we wanted to see. We first visited the noted Salt Springs, four and one half miles from Brownsville. There are two large springs of salt water, as salty, we presume, as the ocean itself. The water, running in a trough from the springs, looks clear as crystal. It runs into a large pool used for bathing purposes. When in the pool it looks blue like the ocean, and affords one of the most delightful and refreshing baths we ever enjoyed. It is said to be as refreshing as the waters along the sea shore. A large engine, at this point, forces the water of these springs through a five-inch under ground pipe, one-four miles to two large bathing pools, one at Brownsville, where the noted Sweet Springs are located. Here we enjoyed another bath of the salt water, still more refreshing than the one at the Salt Springs a few days before. At this point is a large health institution which seems to be doing a good business. The water of the Sweet Springs possess rare virtues for the healing of the sick. It is an excellent point at which to locate a Health Institute for the benefit of members and others afflicted, who would like to attend a properly conducted institution having access to the best of mineral waters, and salt water bathing pools. Were we in possession of the necessary means for that purpose, we certainly would do something in that direction. We also visited other points of interest, of which we would like to speak but time and space forbid.

We found the country in the midst of a most severe drouth—the most severe, it was said, for many years. Much of the late-planted corn was dried up so that it will make little else than fodder. Corn that was planted early, and properly cultivated, is doing well and will make a fair crop.

In this country we found some good land that would prove profitable to the owner any season, and we would advise Brethren seeking homes in the West, to give Saline county a good look. We chanced to visit it at a most unfavorable time.

While there we preached twice for the Brethren, and had the best of interest at both meetings. The membership is not very large, but earnest, and very anxious to have members locate among them and build up the church. Bro. Williams is an earnest minister, fully consecrated to the work, and at present devotes much of his time to the ministry.

We next visited Plattsburg, about one hundred miles North of Brownville, and were immediately taken into hand by Mayor Linsey, who took us into the country two miles and a half to visit the Plattsburg Mineral Springs, which are also said to possess rare healing properties, at least the use of the waters has effected some most remarkable cures. The surroundings did not just suit my eye for a Health Institute, nevertheless the healing virtues of the waters, properly used, struck me as possessing commendable merit. We were then taken one mile to the Peerless Springs. These have pleasant surroundings and water much the same as the Plattsburg Springs. These springs are visited by hundreds of afflicted people who receive great benefit from the use of the waters. We would like to live near these springs in order to enjoy the occasional use of the water.

We spent the night with Eld. D. D. Sall, who resides one mile from town, pleasantly located near the Brethren's meeting-house. We found him hopeful and full of zeal for the Master's cause. The next day we spent looking at the country, and a few hours with Bro. E. A. Orr, a minister and an earnest worker in the cause. By occupation, Bro. Orr is a school teacher of good reputation and scholarship. He has it in his power to do much good for humanity. The night and next day were spent with Bro. Joseph Shoemaker, who has the reputation of being the best farmer in North Missouri, and I doubt if you can find a nicer and better arranged farm in the State of Illinois.

We like this part of Missouri, and believe that the land is just as good as that in Illinois. Besides they have plenty of timber and an abundance of stone. Much of the corn here had been cut short by the drouth, but those who planted early and cultivated properly, will have good crops. In fact we believe that the entire State of Missouri will this year raise enough to do her and a little to spare.

Our stay was too short to have any meetings, as we could give no notice of our coming. We would have been pleased to visit several other points, but our time was limited and we were compelled to return home. It was also too hot to travel with anything like comfort. When we reached our home at Lanark we found vegetation in a very refreshing condition.

We should be pleased to spend several weeks among the churches in Missouri, but cannot do so at present, but hope to do so sometime in the future.

The living Christian finds grace sufficient for all the duties of life.

FROM J. W. STEIN.

FROM a letter written at Vienna, Austria to his wife, we glean the following from our brother J. W. Stein. We have daily looked for something from him for the BRETHREN AT WORK, and we are inclined to believe he sent communications and they are lost:

"Expected ere this to have something for B. AT W., but owing to my condition, was only able to gather the outlines of my travel and thoughts, and must post from the preparation of my M. S., for the future. Time forbids any attempt to describe my short visit and its attendant circumstances, etc., in London, Paris, Berne and Vienna, at present. Suffice it to say that the whole has been attended with much very highly instructive, edifying and entertaining, the account of which I will reserve for my more general correspondence.

I stop here a few days en route for Constantinople—at which point I may be addressed from America—as I am particularly anxious to know something from personal interview and correspondence of the people, religious customs, etc., of Turkey and Asia Minor. How much time I shall spend in Eastern Europe, it is impossible to say. Will probably defer my visit to Asia Minor until I reach Athens and cross the Archipelago to Smyrna unless the intense heat of the season compels me to abandon my Southern enterprise or defer it until September.

J. W. STEIN."

The Church Advocate contains some very able and interesting articles on "Tobacco Slavery." They are written in moderation, and present some of the best reasons we ever heard why the use of tobacco should be discontinued by all men and Christians in particular.

The "Church of God" Society is laboring to open and carry forward a college at Finlay, Ohio. The citizens of that place have contributed $25,000, towards the institution, and the members of the church are asked to raise $75,000. With $100,000, they should be able to put up very good buildings and start a first class school.

LAST week we noticed the reply of White Thunder to Secretary Kirkwood in reference to pitying the Ponca Indians. On the afternoon of the 29th ult., on our way to Lena, we had the privilege of seeing the great chiefs who had been to Washington, and were returning to Dakota. There were eighteen of them, and better specimens of the "noble red man" perhaps could not be found. All were large, muscular, hardy, well-developed men, fine features, and intelligent looks. There was very little savagery in appearance, unless it was Crazy Horse, who seemed somewhat sullen. Red Cloud is not a ferocious-looking fellow, but appears homely and intelligent. Among them were the chiefs of the Sioux, Omahas, Ponca, Winnebagoes and others. Of course at all the stations they attracted the attention of many, and men, women and children crowded into the car and passed through it to see them. What a pity that these fine-looking men have not been brought under the benign influences of civilization in its brightest aspects. But they cannot find the great blessings so long as they are surrounded by speculators and border desperadoes—the enemies of true civilization and religious culture.

THERE must be a difference between Christians and the world, in the whole plan of life. How are we to maintain this difference? Will it not be harder to maintain it without conspicuous and recognized peculiarities than with them?—Primitive Christian.

Truly, beloved brother; and here is our hand to help you maintain them, from faith on through to the end of every item in the Christian system. A holy life will express itself in a divine form; and the divine form is not of this world. Let no man be deceived by thundering appeals to the Gospel. Too often the appeals consist of noise only. "The light of the world" cannot be extinguished with the breath of a Korah.

By some means, unaccountable to us, the request of our last District Meeting that each church in Northern Illinois should contribute $25.00 for missionary and general purposes, was omitted from the published minutes. We call attention to this, and trust that each congregation will not delay to contribute, that the same may "be ready as a meter of bounty, and not as of covetousness" (2 Cor. 6: 5) when the servants of the Lord have need. To our beloved brethren we cheerfully say we "know the forwardness of your mind" how that heretofore you have been ready to do every good work, and "your zeal hath provoked many."

If Christ were to come upon this earth personally and say to his people, "Beware of false prophets, which come to you in sheep's clothing," some of his disciples would likely tell him that he talks too much "order," etc. What! "sheep's clothing?" This sounds as if the clothing of the sheep were different from wolves, bears, owls and huns! O how they would beg Christ to put away the dress of the sheep so the dear sisters who are without might come in! The sisters without—who are they? But He insists that "false Prophets" will come in sheep's clothing—a dress that is respectable enough even for ravenous wolves when they seek to devour the sheep. Beware of false prophets!

INLE men are dead all their lives.

MISSIONARY WORK.

BY JAMES M. NEFF.

ALL the readers are aware that there have been a great many theories, methods and plans on missionary work, presented to the Brotherhood for consideration; but there is a plan that has not received due attention, and it is a plan that I consider of great importance.

There has been some writing upon this subject, but I do not think that it has received sufficient thought. Yet the object of this article is not so much intended to awaken the thoughts of the reader on this subject, as it is for information and advice. I only wish to draw attention to this, that older and more able writers may present their ideas.

I believe that a great deal of good could be done if each member would carefully preserve every number of his church-paper after reading it through, and if it is thought that more good could be done in some other locality than in their own, the papers should be sent to friends to be distributed among people out on the frontier where they seldom hear the Gospel preached. I think this would be a very good plan, and the cost little or nothing.

Perhaps it is remembered by most of the readers of the B. at W., that there was an article, in No. 8, written by sister Emily R. Stoffer, about this branch of missionary work. When I saw that article I thought it to be a subject of importance. I sent ten copies of the B. at W. to be distributed among the Mormons. I received a response from these not long since. George E. Jayne, the missionary of that place, expressed himself very thankful for them, and said that he could use all that I would send him.

Though I consider the conversion of the Mormons to be of great importance, yet I believe that there are other people in the United States whose souls are just as precious as those of the Mormons, and there are other places where our church-literature will have a better effect, and will do more good. If we had brethren out there among the Mormons to teach the faith and doctrine as it is set forth in our church papers, it would all work together for good; but when our church-literature is sent out there to be distributed among the Mormons by the missionaries of the Methodist Episcopal church, we are inclined to think that the doctrine of the Brethren, that is taught by our church-papers would be more than counterbalanced by the doctrine and teachings of Methodism. But do not understand me to say that these people had better remain where they are and practice polygamy, than to become members of the Methodist Episcopal church. I believe that they are doing a good work there, as far as they go; but I do not believe in helping them in their way of teaching. If we want to do anything there, let us send brethren, and send them all the church literature they can find time to dispose of; and while we are trying to persuade them to abandon their so-called religion, let us also teach them the religion of Jesus Christ. Yet I believe we had better send our papers out there than to burn them up or otherwise destroy them.

But I believe that there are other places in the Brotherhood, in which more good could be done by the distribution of tracts and papers. And I should think this plan to be the most efficient in towns or cities where they could be distributed without so much inconvenience. I am satisfied that if our dear young brother of St. Louis, or any other part of the Brotherhood, would apply for church-literature, through the Brethren's periodicals, many would cheerfully heed the call and respond.

I would like to hear from the editors, or any other brethren, upon the subject sometime in the near future; because I consider it as one of importance.

"FEED MY SHEEP." John 21: 17.

BY F. C. MYERS.

WE find in the Word of God, the followers of Christ or the church, frequently compared to sheep. 2 Sam. 14: 17; Psa. 74: 1; 79: 13; 95: 7; 100: 3; Mic. 2: 12; Mat. 5: 24, 25; 32. John 10: 2. Pet. 2: 25, etc. Christ speaks of himself as the "G of Sthenberd." John 10: 14. Heb. 13: 20. He also appointed certain of his followers to act as assistant shepherds, exhorting them to fulfil earnestly and carefully their duties in this capacity. 1 Pet. 5: 2. Also, speaking of the reward at the coming of the Chief Shepherd, 1 Pet. 5: 4. I suppose this figure is so frequently used because the people were acquainted with the habits of sheep and the duties of shepherds. Early in the world's history, we read of keepers of sheep, shepherds, etc. Gen. 4: 2, speaks of Abel as a keeper of sheep. The Patriarchs were shepherds. Gen. 13: 5. 1 Sam. 19: 11.

The duty of the shepherd is to seek good pasture for their sheep. 1 Chron. 4: 39. To number them. Jer. 33: 13. To watch over them. Gen. 13: 40, Luke 2: 8. To defend them 1 Sam. 17: 34, Amos 3: 12. To cherish the feeble. Gen. 33: 13, Psa. 78: 71. To seek the lost. Eza. 34: 12, Luke 15: 4.

If then, the welfare of the flock depends so greatly upon the vigilance of the shepherd, how sad must be the condition of a feeble little flock, if left without a shepherd. Having no one to seek for them good pasture, how easily and almost unconsciously might some of the flock stray into forbidden pasture and eat the food which would be so poisonous to their souls. Without one to number them, how easily might one absent himself from the fold, and perhaps no one would miss him, and as there is none to watch over him, who is to warn him of dangers which beset his pathway, or seek for him if lost? Who is to defend a flock without a shepherd, from wolves and bad lions? For we are indeed as sheep in the midst of wolves. Matt 10: 10, Luke 10: 3.

What shall become of them when "dogs" shall compass them about? Psa. 22: 16, Phil. 3: 2.

A little flock of Christians, feeble and weak, yet striving to do what lieth in their power to further the cause of Christ; working alone (at first) for need of spiritual food, becomes, perhaps, somewhat despondent after a time, and the arch-enemy of souls who is ever on the alert seizes this season of weakness to sow in their midst some little seeds of discord. This seed is so small it can hardly be noticed, yet as there is no watchful shepherd to pluck it from the pasture and cast it out, how rapidly it takes root and grows to be a mighty tree bearing fruit described as "Ungovernableness, Maliciousness," etc. Rom. 1: 29. Surely the flock if left to itself will be scattered and perhaps destroyed and utterly lost. We trust ere long our Lord will send a vision to some of the brethren as he did to Paul, and that some one may be influenced to "come over into Macedonia and help us." Acts 16: 9.

GOD OR MAMMON.

THERE is nothing more deceiving than the idea of gaining the esteem and good opinion of the world by familiarizing ourselves and mixing often with it. The more the world sees us, the more it will hate or despise us. It hates us from the instant it feels that we will not put up with its manners. Let us very rarely have anything to do with it, and we shall appear in its eyes with greater dignity, and be treated with greater respect. Let us attend to every due and proper call which the world may justly require of us, as well as all the demands of charity and good works, but let us always conduct ourselves as the ambassadors of Christ, as in some sense filling his place. It is then only that our character, under the grace and providence of God, will be to us a safeguard against temptation. But if we seek the world, we must conform to its tastes and its manners. We should be badly received on the pleasure ground were we to carry there that holy gravity which should never forsake us. We should derange its pleasures, discount its liberty of speech. We should be an intolerable burden to it. Our presence alone would be horrible, and it would say to us as the enemies of holiness say of the righteous man in the Wisdom of Solomon, "He is grievous to us to behold!" There is no alternative. We must die in the world or partake of its spirit. We cannot serve God and mammon.—Dr. Coke.

This believer is like a light put on a cork and put out to sea, and there, in the midst of the ocean, it is preserved. Wonderful as it may appear, the light cannot be extinguished—it is invincible. There is now a greater light in the world, than to see how religion is upheld in the hearts of God's people.

GRATITUDE is the music of the heart when it chords are swept by kindness.

THE SEVENTH DAY THE LAST DAY OF THE WEEK AND OUR CHRISTIAN SABBATH.

I FEEL satisfied that I can convince the intelligent reader, that the Christian Sabbath is the seventh day of the week and the last day of the same.

To prove that we are correct, you will multiply 5884 years by 365 days and you will have 2,144,660 days. Then the fourth of 5884 years = 1471, which are leap-year days; added together, then divide by seven, and you will find that the remainder, five, indicates the number of days of the week that the year goes out on. Now the remainder five shows that the year 1880 of the Christian Era went out on Friday, and the first day of 1881 is Saturday.

I find by this rule, and rule of the grand cycle of twenty-eight years, which keeps time in years with as much accuracy as a clock, the Jews lost the 7th day, (I suppose when Joshua commanded the sun to stand, and the earth obeyed, counted that long day for two days, which would make Saturday the 7th day.)

The Savior reserves to the world the true 7th day by rising upon the seventh day, by rising upon the Jewish Monday, which really was the seventh day and the last day of the week, as the Lord God had ordained it in the beginning.

At some future time by the help of the Lord, I will give you the grand cycle with grand leap-year at the head and figure 28, which only occurs once in 28 years. Yours Truly, C.

FEAST.

FEAST is a word our brethren often use in a sense that the world does not acknowledge. In writing of a communion, they call it a feast, probably meaning it as an abbreviation of Leviticus. But the world does not take it in this way, and understands a feast to mean a sumptuous entertainment, a carnival, a place where eating and drinking is done to excess. No wonder we are accused of committing a solemn mockery, when we claim to celebrate the suffering and death of our Savior with a feast.

We are to let our light so shine that men may see our good works and be constrained to glorify God, and we desire that many may change from nature's darkness to the true and marvelous light; therefore it is highly necessary that we appear to the world as we are and that we make no wrong impressions upon them concerning our ordinances.

While we are in the world, we should use worldly terms to express our ideas, but we should be careful to use them in the same sense the world uses them, and to convey such as are custom has established they should convey. Brethren, if you must call a communion a feast, tell us how to reconcile the difference between the English definition of feast, and the sacred ordinance of communion.

THE MARK OF THE BEAST.

What is the mark of the beast?

I THINK the mark of the beast is hatred to God and the Lamb; while love to God and the Lamb is the mark of the Father. Rev. 14: 1. "Now if any man worship the beast and his image and receive his mark in his forehead or in his hand." Rev. 13: 14, 15, 16. Here is the interpretation of 13: 9, "in their right hand or in their forehead."

Now read Rev. 17: 5, "And upon her forehead was a name written, 'Mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots.'" Now bear in mind there are two mothers, one is spoken of in Gal. 4: 26, or the mother of all the true believers; also Isa. 2: 2, "And it shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountain, and it shall be exalted above the hills; or above all the earthly powers in the last days.

So we can look for God's power by judging to bring about a destruction of all "Babylon," or "the mother of harlots," hence, "Now man creates man's discipline, man's church; man's marks for man's orders, the Old Fellows, the Free Masons, the Catholics, the Spiritualists, are all marked with the sayings of man, but not the "thou saith the Lord."

Now God's works, Jesus' truth, the true Bible, the mark of Jehovah, the true marks of love, Jesus the lamb of God, in us the hope of glory, are not these God's marks?

THE BIBLE.

THERE are four grand arguments for the truth of the Bible. The first is the miracle on record, the second the prophecies, the third the goodness of the doctrine, the fourth the moral character of the penman.

The miracles flow from divine power, the prophecies from divine understanding, the excellence of the doctrine from divine goodness, the moral character of the penman from divine purity. Thus Christianity is built upon these four immovable pillars—the power, the understanding, the goodness, the purity of God.

The Bible must be one of these things, either an invention of good men, or good angels; or revelation from God. But it could not be the invention of good men, or angels, for they neither would nor could make a book telling lies, at the same time saying, "Thus saith the Lord," when they knew it all to be their own invention. It could not be the invention of wicked men and devils, for they could not make a book which commands all duty, which forbids all sin, and which condemns their souls to all eternity.

The conclusion is irresistible. The Bible must be given by divine inspiration.

CLEANLINESS NEXT TO GODLINESS.

IT is supposed by many that these words are to be found in the Scriptures, and often very intelligent writers have alluded to the phrase as if it were of Bible origin. In Chambers' Book of Days, the second volume, page 296, in an article on Ryeland Hill, the following is attributed to that noted preacher: "Good Mr. White told us to say, 'Cleanliness is next to godliness.'"

The grandest victories gained by mortal men are those which cost most, those which are achieved on hard fought battle grounds. That which costs little is generally without much value. A life for Christ without sacrifice, and even suffering, is a tame, worthless thing. If we suffer with Christ, we shall be glorified with him.

Do doubts rise up and confront you? Is the pathway dim and uncertain? It is because your life is not what it ought to be. You have not done well what has been given you to do. Duty has been neglected, and you have been going in the wrong way. Come back into the full sunlight of God's truth and your doubts will all be gone. Try it and be convinced.

REMOVING the sandals was as much a sign of respect, as removing the hat is now. The Almighty was unwilling to speak to Moses, until he should remove his sandals. The signs and the conveniences of his daily work must first be laid aside. Even a visitor left his sandals at the door. Let our world-marked thoughts, and our secular-colored words be left out of the divine presence.

THROUGH all these centuries Christianity has been steadily advancing. The kingdom of the Crucified One, founded on his death and not supported by armies, overrules all obstacles and invades every nook and corner of creation. You see this religion was originated by a few illiterate fishermen? If so, whence its power? It is from heaven and God is its author. To account for it in any other way is folly and madness.

A DELAWARE superintendent gives a noteworthy example of regular attendance at Sunday-school. He says: "In the Sunday-school of which I am Superintendent, there is a little girl fourteen years old, who has attended promptly every Sunday for seven years with only two exceptions, one of which was on account of sickness, and the other was absence from town, and on that Sunday she attended a Sunday-school in the city where she visited. So that really she has only been absent from Sunday-school one Sunday in seven years."

Correspondence.

From C. H. Balsbaugh.

M. M. E., Dear Brother:—

I think of you often. Your work is a great life-waster, and yet a grand life-coserver for a higher and eternal sphere. God overshadow our faithful editors with His power, and make them "mighty to the pulling down of strong-holds."

May you gloriously realize the fullness of grace treasured up in Philpp. 4:19. Remember, beloved, it is God who supplies, and it covers "all your need," and it is according to his riches in glory by Jesus Christ." It would be enough to make a poor mortal crazy with ecstasy did not "the Holy Spirit help our infirmities," and sustain our equipage. Let us have only one thought, one aim, one joy—how to "walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing." May the constant beholding of the cross and the crucified fire our hearts evermore with the one motive to glorify him who died for us.

Committee Work.

I left home on the 1st day of Aug., en route for Ashland, Ohio. At Urbana I joined brethren J. N. Kaufman, and at Man-field brethren E. Eby and I. J. Rosentger swelled our number, making the committee to Ashland City complete. Arrived at Ashland at 9: 15 P. M. Lodged with my old friend John Willis.

Met in council the 3rd, and completed our work on the 6th, with apparent satisfaction to the church. We were under the painful necessity of relieving brother S. Z. Saarp of the eldership. Insert this for the special information of the last Standing Committee.

Left Ashland the 6th at 8: 40 P. M. Missing connection at Pittsburg we were delayed nearly twelve hours. And taking the night train we could not reach Berlin, Pa., there being no train on the Berlin Branch, hence we passed on to Meyerdale.

On the 8th were taken to Berlin by private conveyance. Were cared for during our sojourn in Berlin at the home of H. R. Holsinger and his son-in-law—Nowag.

We completed our work in the Berlin church on the 10th. The result of this meeting was the separation of H. R. Holsinger from the Brotherhood. The few members of the Berlin church present did not accept of our report; there being only forty-seven members present of a membership of one hundred and fifty. It may be said in this connection that all the members present from other congregations, who are in favor with the general brotherhood and expressed their mind in my presence, were satisfied with the work of the Committee.

Was conveyed to Meyersdale same evening; and on the 11th boarded the train for Huntingdon, Pa., where (E. Eby and I) arrived at 6: 45 P. M. and were met at the depot by brother J. Quisler and conducted to his home. Enjoyed good rest.

Remained in Huntingdon over Sunday. Enjoyed the hospitality of other families; among them the Clarke family, of which our esteemed sister Wealthy Clark is a member.

Met with an infant singing class in College

Chapel, of which sister Eda Brumbaugh is teacher. There were eighteen small children in this class. This is a good work, sister; persevere and you will reap your reward.

On Sunday morning met the Sunday-school. An interesting Sunday-school. I didn't note the number of scholars, but I think there were seventy, besides visitors.

Had meeting at 10 A. M. and 7: 30 P. M. Very good attention, but audience small for a city with a population of 4177.

On Monday visited the "Orphans' Home," being especially interested in the interests of this unfortunate class. They have nine inmates. May God bless the work.

On the 16th, in company with Bro. J. Quisler, boarded the train for New Jersey. Reaching Lancaster City we were joined by brethren D. P. Saylor and R. H. Miller, and reached Riugoes, N. J., in the evening. Were met by brother I. Paulson, who took us to his hospitable home and cared for us.

On the 17th met the church in council. Found the members well represented, and interested in the work before us. Had a pleasant meeting. Closed with general good feelings. Report accepted by all but two members present.

Arrived at Johnstown, Pa., on the morning of the 21st. Was taken to the large Horner meeting-house. Had a pleasant meeting. Dined with brother John Scrayner, an old deacon of this (Conemaugh) congregation. Lodged with Bro. Solomon Benzhoof, elder of the church.

On the 22nd met the church in council, and closed our work here on the 23rd. Affirmed the work of the former committee from A. M. of 1880, as far as the church permitted us to examine it, and being the second committee from Annual Meeting on the same case, our decision was final.

At 4: 30 P. M., boarded the train at Johnstown for home. Arrived at home the 24th at 9 P. M. Found all in usual health. Our son who was sick, had gone to his work again.

And now I express my thanks to the many dear friends who bestowed their kindness, and cared for us so tenderly while on our journey.

On this journey, I traveled 2,900 miles. Enjoyed good health all the time of my absence. And in view of God's tender mercy and care for me, I can truly say, "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all of his benefits. Yea all that is within me bless his holy name."

The weather continues very dry and hot. The corn is literally dried up. Many fields will not yield one bushel of good sound corn to the acre. Old corn is held at seventy-five cents per bushel. Some wells have gone dry. Water in places is becoming scarce. But in love we trust.

A Grand Funeral Display.

On Sunday, Aug. 21st, a Mr. Allen Smith, commissioner of Keokuk Co., Ind., was buried in Masonic order. I was there to witness the scene, and never in my life felt more mortified and disgusted. A funeral discourse was delivered by a Methodist minister, which was well calculated to suit the occasion. The subject was, "True moral courage and a strong heart." I had no objection to the funeral discourse, but after it closed; this was a performance, which made some of the weaker sex shudder, leaving the house and saying, "Ain't that awful?" having reference to four brother Masons standing and crossing the coffin with their swords while a short prayer was offered. A man who had been in the late civil war told me he was strongly reminded of the scenes in the South, where bloodshed was the order of the day. Then quite a number marched, two by two, to the cemetery, and we were reminded of Catholicism, in their way and manner of burying the dead. With the crosses hanging about their persons, made the writer wonder if this could be a little horn of that old Roman power rising up in America to cause trouble amongst God's children. And the most of all, at the closing exercises they all at the same time repeated the Lord's prayer. Among them were infidels and skeptics. Of what mockery. Consistency, where art thou? Since the funeral I wondered whereunto this would grow and what would become of our nation. My dear brethren and sisters, let us strongly warn our children against the evils of secretism. M.

From John Dunlap.—It is very dry; but the most of corn will make a pretty fair crop, notwithstanding the drouth. Wheat was very poor; oats, fair; not very many potatoes. We are having very pleasant weather. Health in general good, with the exception of a few cases of diphtheria and whooping-cough among the children.... We were blessed with the privilege of meeting with the dear brethren and sisters in church council on the 20th, where we made the necessary arrangements for a Love-feast. It will be held at brother John Hollers', Midland, Colfax Co., Neb., commencing the 7th of October and continuing over Sunday.... There is great need for more laborers here, as the harvest is great and the laborers are few. Therefore we trust the Lord may send more laborers into his harvest.... There are a great many people here that don't seem to think of anything but getting more of this world's goods. They don't seem to realize that they will have to leave all when the great Master calls for them. We desire an interest in the prayers of all our heavenly Father's children.—Bell Creek Church, Colfax Co., Neb.

From A. B. Holl.—B. at W.: May we ever give you a hearty welcome, and hope your weekly visits will bring us the only true principles of law and spirit and life of our Savior Jesus Christ.... We are moving along slowly here at the so-called Beech Grove church with some opposition of worldly nature, consisting of fashionable dressing. Oh may the time speedily come that the outward adorning may be more according to the teachings of Jesus.—Madisonburg, Wayne Co., Ohio.

From A. W. Reese.—The little flock comprising the Warrensburg church is in peace, union, and love. We are deeply grateful to the Great Head of the church for all His goodness and love to us. New members are being added by brethren moving in among us, and the prospects are encouraging that this little vine planted in the wilderness and watered by the hand of God may be instrumental in bringing many sinners out of nature's darkness into the marvelous light of the Gospel. . . . On Sunday, 14th inst., we baptized one dear soul into the communion of the church. Hops that others may be led to follow her example. . . . We have good congregations at all our meetings. The people are attentive to the preaching of the Word, are respectful and decorous in the House of God, and seem interested in the Brethren's doctrines. We have had considerable help from the ministering brethren of the Mineral Creek church; and altogether we feel much encouraged in the good work. . . . Brother Jacob H. Crauthamel, from Half-field, Montgomery Co., Pa., has recently purchased a fine farm of 260 acres in our neighborhood, three and one-half miles south of town, and a mile and a half south of our meeting-house. Brother Jacob gave $18.00 per acre for the place. It is the same place mentioned in the "Macedonian Cry," and is decidedly a bargain. . . . We, like other sections of the U. S., are now suffering from the effects of a protracted drouth.

From E. W. Flory. — The weather has been very dry for some time. The chinch bugs have injured the corn crop very much. They and the dry weather have cut the corn crop down to one-half or less. Wheat was light; oats and flax and grass quite good; early potatoes, good, but late not so good; fruit crop rather light, but plenty for home use. Spiritual crop rather light so far this Summer, but we feel that thank the good Lord for what we have. I feel rather more thankful for the light crop of the fruits of the earth than when we have a full crop, for we can see our nothingness more. . . . The B. at W. still comes to hand. I am better pleased than ever. — Willow Springs, Kan.

From Landon West. — Visited Fairview church, Fayette Co. Had council meeting, and preached twice. Then went to Frankfort, Ross Co., and preached three days and nights for the colored people, and baptized one sister. Should have staid a week longer, as others now say, they will come too; but I could not stay. On Thursday, Aug. 11th, went West to Lexington, Highland Co. At 5:30 P. M. of that day solemnized the marriage of a young ministering brother, Lindley A. Davis and sister Emma Moberly of the family of brother John Ockerman. . . . From here I went east to Athens, Ohio; and was met by brother Henry Coats of Meigs Co., who took me to his home sixteen miles away. With the people here I had eight meetings, and all seemingly of interest, although at times I was very unwell. I am now this far back to the work at home, and it is all work here. — Greenfield, Highland Co., O.

From F. B. Wine. — About eight years ago the church of the Brethren was organized at Boon's Creek, Washington Co., Tenn., with nine members. The first speakers were Bowman and Crouse. They held their meetings in their dwelling-house for several years after they were organized. About the year 1834, the first meeting-house was erected on Knob Creek, which is still standing, and has a membership of about seventy or eighty members. From Knob Creek church eighteen churches of the Brethren have sprung up, and now the East Tennessee District numbers 2,000. Pleasant Hill church (from which I write) was built in the year 1850. They organized with twenty-three members. John A. Bowman was their pastor, who was shot and killed at home during the late war. The church now only numbers sixty members, and should be noted for its quietude. But had we better not be quiet and doing nothing, than judging one another? for when this is laid aside all is in harmony. And if we all were to look more inward and pray for the conversion of sinners, would it not be more acceptable in the sight of God? Our Love-feast will be held at Pleasant Hill, beginning Sept. 17th. The District Meeting of Tennessee will be held at Knob Creek church November 4th, 5th, and 6th. — Bountville, Tenn.

From J. Mongold. — We had our annual visit-week and our church meeting on Saturday 20th. The church was in peace and union as far as I know. Have several applicants for baptism which will be attended to shortly. The funeral services of Jeremiah Riggleman's son, who departed this life some time ago, will be preached at our school-house. Our Love-feast will be held Oct. 4th. . . . I long to see more accounts from brother Stein in Europe. . . . The corn crop will be cut very short. — Mountain Home, W. Va.

From Daniel Whitmer. — Dr. Flowers and wife, of Grand Rapids, Mich., have just closed a very excellent course of nine lectures in our meeting-house, on the "Cause and Cure of Diseases," "Character," "Evils and Remedies of Tobacco," "The Physiology of Immortality and a Future State." The brethren, sisters, and neighbors have generally attended, and as far as we can judge, they were well pleased with the lectures. As the Doctors intend to visit Elkhart, Goshen, and other places for the purpose of giving these lectures, we cheerfully commend them to our brethren and sisters, believing they are worthy of their confidence and respect. They came to us fully endorsed by elders, deacons, and members of our church fraternity in Michigan, and we are glad to say the Doctors have fully sustained the recommendation since their sojourn among us. Go and hear them and learn how to live healthy. You will be greatly benefited, as "Knowledge is power." — South Bend, Ind.

From William Edgecomb. — We met in church council at Sunnyside on the 6th of August for the purpose of doing work in the house of God, and there we met with that unruly element that is among the brethren. There was a bishop present that said he could not give his consent to expel a sister that wore a plain hat. Considerable was said, and the voice of the church was taken whether we would stop this disorderly movement or not, and a large majority of the church said "Stop it at once." It seems that the brethren and sisters, or the majority of them, are in favor of the order of the brethren, and that nearly all of this church is willing to stand to the discision of the Annual Meeting, and we are glad that it is so, as we think and do believe that it is the Annual Meeting that holds the brethren together in government, and we do think that it is right, and believe that we should live up to the counsel of our brethren who have fought hard for plainness. The Gospel holds forth plainness, and Christ and the apostles taught plainness, and said that we should be a "peculiar people" from the world. So if we are the true followers of Christ we certainly must be so that we can be told from the world wherever we may be. I, for one, feel like living up to the order of the church, and think that it would be well for all of us to do the same, as we all promised so, when we came to the church. Let us all look well at our own words that we have prom'ed before our God. Will he not hold those prom'ed against us if we do not come up to them? — Parsons, Kan.

From A. Hutchison. — Brother Jacob preached his introductory discourse at Centerville, Mo. He had undivided attention from his audience. Brother Jacob comes to us bearing a good name, which is better than great riches. We are glad to welcome him and his kind family to our field of labors. And while the church from which they came will doubtless feel the loss, we trust the Lord's work will be greatly benefitted in this country. The ordeal through which they must pass, coming to a new country in the heat of Summer, will no doubt be pretty hard on them. But up to the present, they are braving it a storm of heat as well as could be expected. We are having an unusually dry and hot August. We welcome them to our ranks (1) because we believe they mean to work for the maintenance of Gospel principles, both in their life and in their teaching. (2) Because of Bro. Jacob being in the full ministry, for we need many such, and we need only such as will be true to the interests of the church. — Centerville, Mo.

From Northern Indiana.

We, the Brethren of the Home Mission Board, elected by our last District Meeting, have this day met and organized, by electing Daniel Shively, Foreman; John Nusbaum, Clerk; John Arnold, Treasurer. The first proposition was to urge every house-chapier of the Northern District of Indiana to solicit at their regular church meetings, and strongly urge the members to pay in for the Home Mission, and at once send the funds to the Treasurer, at Miford, Kosciusko Co., Ind. All calls for missionary preaching should be directed to Daniel Shively, New Paris, Elkhart Co., Ind. Those wishing to correspond with the clerk should direct to John Nusbaum, Walkersville, Ind.

From S. J. Peck. — Falls City church is in a prosperous condition, though some troubles arise occasionally, yet she meets them Christlike with the Gospel as understood by the church of the Brethren. The new meeting-house is almost completed. The members are lively in the Gospel. Meetings every two weeks in the new house. Weather extremely warm, being from 90 to 108° the past two months. — Falls City, Neb., Aug. 29.

THE DRUNKARD'S DREAM.

The drunken dreamer of his old retreat,
 On the easy plane in the topsy room sat.
 The liquor gleamed in his glowing eye.
 As his lips to the sparkling glass drew nigh,
 He lifted it up with an eager grasp,
 And he laughed as he saw the bubbles dance.
 Here is a trace to cure, an adieu to pain,
 No more sick heart and weary brain;
 Welcome the cup with its creamy foam;
 Farewell to woe and a money loan,
 With a jolly cheer and a flowing bowl,
 In the top-room pleasures I live to sell.
 Like a fish that's above at the drunkard's table,
 His own child who that night had sold,
 With a look so gentle, mild and fond,
 As he tapped his glass with her little hand,
 And off as he tossed that glass to drink,
 Saw silently tapp'd on his quivering link.
 Tell the drunkard, back from level to crown,
 And out the outside goblet down,
 "Hey, son," cried the host, "what meaneth this,
 Is the man sick, or the damn amiss?"
 Cheer up, my lad, quick the lump o' quartz,
 And he elbowed around with scintillating laugh,
 The drunkard raised the glass once more,
 And looked in its depths as oft before,
 And started to see on its pelted form,
 The face of his dead little child at home.
 The landlord once again at him sneered,
 And the crowd of waggering drunkards jeered,
 But as he tried that glass to drink,
 The wind of the dead one toppled the brick,
 The landlord gasped, "O swear, my men,
 You shall drink every drop in that flowing cun."
 The drunkard bowed to the very beam;
 He sat on his feet and his eyes grew dim,
 But the wind backed louder than ever before,
 And he dashed the cup to the bare-room floor,
 And all around the fragments lay,
 And the passionate current rolled away.
 The drunkard awoke; his dream was gone;
 His couch was bathed in the light of morn;
 And as he shook with pale cold fear,
 A beautiful angel hovered near.
 He arose; his seraph was with him still,
 Subduing his passion, counselling his will,
 It dashed from his lips the maddening bowl,
 And victory came to his ransomed soul,
 And ever since that night he dream'd
 The drunkard has been a man redeemed.
 And this is his prayer, that on that dawning day,
 And this is the prayer he yet help him pray,
 That angels may come in every land,
 To dash the cup from the drunkard's hand.

GRATIFICATION.

FROM youth to old age, the mind seeks personal gratification, and if not in a lawful manner follows that the pleasure sought is illegally obtained. Repose and gratification are necessary to form energy for labor. It is said that "old boys have their playthings as well as young ones; the difference is only in the price," which must be admitted to be a fact. The things used, or the time or place in which recreation is sought, vary according to the taste or desire of the individuals. Youth seeks that of mirthfulness, while more advanced age that of more permanency and solid pleasure. Lawful enjoyment is no sin, and should be had with gladness and universally permitted. This enjoyment held within the bounds of law and order would be a sure preventative of any engagement in unlawful gratifications.

Labor demands repose, without which fatigue is the result. Repose lightens labor, it beautifies the heart and nerves the body to greater attainments.

Recreation in innocent amusements for children is a great health promoter, and educates the mind in industry. Their homes should be made attractive, playthings in abundance, and while they should have hours of labor they should be held at intervals with hours of pleasure and healthful recreation. This will bring to its train health, happiness and permanent enjoyment. Rest from labor can be obtained by reading useful books and papers. How is that library of yours? Are the children reminded? What a mint of wealth to stamp is a library of useful knowledge, the product of some useful and entertaining authors. The young and the aged, what contrast! The former find rest in tramping a bag, the latter in repose on the old rocking-chair. Here comes middle age. On the powers of his march! His strength in his glory. He enters the arena of business. On the perplexities of his calling. If he will not break down constitutionally he must rest, must recreate. We do not mean he must be a sport. Men that follow sports generally make them a principal part of their life, thus throwing away their time, which is as fatal. Recreation in the neglect of family or of business relations is also wrong. But the brisk, bustling business man needs rest. The farmer needs recreation. A few weeks' ramble among the mountains or watering places is not always an absolute necessity, though highly enjoyable, but labor systematically arranged may present hours, if not days, to recreate, to rest, lawful pleasure and the opportunity will come. A few minutes in your library or reading room is a grand amusement, it inspires the mind and rests the body. Your many divisions in life produce many empty spaces, all of which can be filled up by useful amusements and nothing is brought into requisition more properly than to read some entertaining author. Thus the mind and body grow up healthfully. We are blessed, God is praised, and happiness flows a channel uninterrupted in its course.

Youth's Companion.

TOBACCO HARMFUL.

SOME religious sects are making the use of tobacco a bar of entrance into the ministry; no candidate can receive ordination from them, who is a slave to the weed. The French military schools are adopting a similar rule of admission and some of the universities as well. It has been found by careful observation that those students who use tobacco freely, seldom stand in the front rank of scholars. A distinguished teacher in a professional school near Boston says that after two weeks' acquaintance with his students in the lecture room, he can mark those who indulge in smoking or chewing. They show a decided inferiority in insight and mental force. Physicians are beginning to be alarmed at the mischief done to the physical system by excessive smoking. It occasions paralysis, which ends fatally. When a habit so useless and expensive is also dangerous to health, young men ought not to form it. It stunts growth, weakens the appetite, disturbs the nerves, and unfit for a long intellectual strain. It is greatly folly for boys thus to inflict permanent injury on themselves. The use of tobacco is not a sign of manliness.

MAN'S PHYSICAL MACHINERY.

THE average weight of an adult man is 140 pounds, six ounces.

The average weight of a skeleton is about 14 pounds.

Number of bones, 240.

The skeleton measures one inch less than the height of the living man.

The average weight of the brain of a man is 3½ pounds; of a woman, 2 pounds, 1 ounce.

The brain of a man exceeds twice that of any other animal.

The average height of an Englishman is 5 feet 9 in.; of a Frenchman, 5 feet 4 inches, and of a Belgian, 5 feet, 6½ inches.

The average weight of an Englishman is 159 pounds; of a Frenchman, 136 pounds, and of a Belgian, 140 pounds.

The average number of teeth is 32.

A man breathes about twenty times a minute, or 1,200 times in an hour.

A man breathes about 10 pints of air in a minute, or upward of 7 hogsheads in a day.

A man annually contributes to vegetation 12½ pounds of carbon.

The average of the pulse in infancy is 120 per minute; in manhood, 80; at sixty years, 60. The pulse of females is more frequent than that of males.

The weight of the circulation blood is about 25 pounds.

The heart beats 73 times in a minute; sends nearly 10 pounds of blood through the veins and arteries each beat; makes four beats while we breathe once.

Five hundred and forty pounds, or 24 hogsheads and 4 gallons, or 10,752½ pints, pass through the heart in 24 hours.

One thousand ounces of blood pass through the kidneys in one hour.

One hundred and seventy million holes or cells are in the lungs, which cover a surface 30 times greater than the human body.

(B).

"Some are without arms; they have never helped any one over the rugged places in life. Some are without feet; they have never gone an inch out of their own way to serve others. Some are voiceless; they have never, even by a word, encouraged any one who was cast down. Some are deaf; they have never listened to the voice of suffering. Some are without hearts; they do not know what sympathy and generous feelings are. What an appearance a procession of such characters would make if they could be seen as they are on the street!"

DISSIPATION is a swift and sure destroyer, and every young man who follows it, is as the early flower, exposed to untimely frost.

OUR PLEA.

THE BRETHREN AT WORK is an uncompromising advocate of

1. Positive morality in its sacred truths.
It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice.
And maintains that the serene, unswerving, unalloyed grace of God is the only source of pardon, and
2. That the vicarious offerings and meritorious works of Christ are the only price of redemption.

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and hence for the remission of sins:

That Trinitarianism, or styling the confidant three times first-forward, is Christian Euhemerism.

That First-Worship, as taught in John 15, is a divine command to be observed in the church:

That the Lord's Supper is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or at the dawn of the day.

That the Sabbath of the Holy King, or King of Kings, is a binding upon the followers of Christ:

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and all-dying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ:

That a Non-Conformity to the world in dress, customs, daily walk, and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 14: 26.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of assisting the sick with all in the name of the Lord.

To those it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amidst the conflicting theories and discordant Christianisms, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Single subscriptions $1.50 in advance. Those sending single names and $12.00, will receive an extra copy free. For each additional name the agent will be allowed ten per cent., which amount will be placed retails and sent to the subscriber. Money sent by Post-office Order, Registered Letters, and Drafts properly addressed, will be at our risk. Do not send checks, as they cannot be collected without checks. Address,

Lack of convenience at Grove prevented Bro. Wetzel giving Lanark a call in the evening. It is about seven weeks since we have had a soaking rain. Vegetation is mostly dried up. Feed will be high; fruit is scarce; Bro. J. H. Moore, it is rumored, is going to move about a mile out of town, into a nice country-house which he has purchased. So Lanark will not have a death of preachers yet, anyhow. S.

Larkin's Factory, Va., Aug. '81.

Streams and springs drying up. Corn almost a failure and prices rapidly rising. The Lord is good and knows what is best for us.

S. O. LARKINS.

Loraine, Ill., Aug. 31, 1881.

Quarterly council the 27th. All in peace and love. New meeting-house nearly completed. Communion Oct. 15th and the next day, dedication. Come and enjoy and assist in the mighty work of the Lord. Prospects bright for an ingathering.

H. W. STRICKLER.

Johnston, Ill., Aug. 27th, 1881.

I left my home yesterday. Came to this place yesterday evening. I have been sent here by the Missionary Board to do some missionary work.—This is a new field, where our brethren have never preached. Meeting last night; good congregation; expect to do all the preaching in town, while here. General health good; weather dry; crops light; earn good very short. Many people have to sell stock on account of lack of feed.

JOHN METZGER.

Cavington, Ohio, Aug. 29, 1881.

Had services yesterday; attendance good, and a warm, brotherly feeling prevailed.

La Due, Mo., Aug. 50, 1881.

Three young members have recently been received into our home church, and we have reason to believe that others will soon follow. An excellent rain has just fallen, replenishing our empty cisterns and wells and cooling the heated atmosphere and giving relief to man and beast. Praise the Lord for his mercy towards us.

J. S. MOHLER.

Franklin Grove, Ill., Aug. 30, 1881.

Council meeting to-day; work all pleasant.—Three received by baptism,—man and wife and mother-in-law at the age of 82 years. May grace and peace be theirs. J. C. LAUMAN.

Fallen Asleep.

Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord.—REV. 14: 13.

Funeral at residence of the bereaved, and sermon by W. C. Teeter, assisted by Eld. D. E. Price. The first jewel in the Savior's diadem from the Editor's family.

His remains were interred in the Brethren's burying ground at Mingo. The funeral occasion was improved by brethren William Nice, James Hasley, Henry Cassel and Isaac Kulp to a large circle of friends and relatives. J. Y. HEUKLER.

The diphtheria has broken out in Eronn Slicker's family, five miles south of Lanark.

Our correspondents in all sections of the country speak of the drought and continued warm weather.

Prof. Sauter has returned from South Carolina with a large box of zoological specimens for the museum.

There are thirty-three churches in the Southern District of Illinois with an aggregate of 2,508 members.

The address of Brother John Harshbarger, after Oct. 1st, will be Girard, Ill., instead of Good's Mills, Va.

Bro. J. H. Moore's address is now changed to Lanark, Ill. See his valedictory on another page of this issue.

Some of our employes in the Job Department have been prostrated more or less the past few weeks by the warm weather.

Bro. D. E. Price left home the 9th to visit the churches in Southern Wisconsin. Bro. Jacob Delp, of Yellow Creek, accompanied him.

At the Lake Bluff Temperance Meeting the question, "How can boys be kept from saloons?" was answered by voting to close the saloons.

In writing up your travels in the Lord's work, please conform as near as possible to Bro. Luke's manner, as found in his Acts of the Apostles.

Our job orders are numerous and pressing. We are turning out some fine work, and doing everything to render satisfaction to our customers.

Bro. Silas Dubbel, formerly of Carroll Co., Ill., but lately of Huntingdon, Pa., has located in Waynesboro, Pa., and gone into the drug business.

Two persons were baptized recently in the West Branch church, Ill. There has been upwards of twenty occasions to this church during the year.

Bro. Sharp will have charge of the B. at W. in our absence next week. We hope he may treat you with fat things,—and things wherewith you may be edified.

Whole counties in Michigan have been swept over by forest fires, destroying about one thousand lives and rendering thousands more homeless and helpless.

Every family in the Brotherhood should have the "History of the Danish Mission—the first history of the West Foreign Mission of the Brethren." Price 20 cents.

A TRAIN on the Chicago & Alton Railroad was robbed fourteen miles from Kansas City on the night of the 7th. That part of the country seems to be under robber rule.

Bro. J. H. Peck took his little daughter to Indianapolis week before last. She is crippled and has gone there for treatment. He will probably move to Kansas in October.

Bro. J. S. Meiker, under date of 5th writes: "Have just returned from a very interesting Love-feast held in the Mount church in northern part of Bates Co., Mo., near Adrian."

Bro. John Metzger baptized three persons in St. Louis the 7th. Brother D. B. Gibson has gone to his aid, and we hope the two may accomplish a good work there in the name of the Lord.

Dr. H. W. Thomas, besides having three of his brethren to aid him, has employed three lawyers to assist in his trial. Christ employed no one when he was tried for not conforming to the Pharisee system of religion.

The Western Book Exchange of this place is meeting with good success. The firm consists of W. C. Teeter, Henry Damer, and A. W. Vaniman—all young brethren who work hard and have considerable business enterprise.

The conduct of the students who are now attending College, is commendable; and we trust they may continue to make good impressions upon their new friends, so that all may enjoy the bond of friendship with all joy and gladness.

We have a number of letters from Bro. C. H. Balsbaugh written to the saints that will find space in B. at W. as soon as possible. Will the good friends exercise patience, and give time for the appearance of the missives of love?

If a paper constantly grumbles it will make grumblers of those who read and imitate its spirit: if it finds fault, maligns character, and misrepresents, then those who read it and partake of its spirit will do likewise. Beware what you read!

CHRISTYBOSTON who lived about A. D. 350 says: "Christ delivered to his disciples one baptism, in three immersions of the body, when he said, 'Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'"

Bro. J. H. Moore would like to have the address of some one from each family in the Brotherhood. He has something interesting to send them. Cannot some one in each congregation send him the desired name and address? Address him at Lanark, Ill.

There are now one hundred and thirty students in attendance at Mt. Morris College, and a number more have applied for admission. All the departments are in charge of efficient professors. The students seem very industrious and orderly, and good work may reasonably be expected.

The President has been removed to Long Branch, N. J., and up to this writing, Sept. 9th, has shown marked symptoms of improvement. He has a good appetite, and seems hopeful of recovery. As we should pray for all men, and especially for rulers, let our brethren and sisters remember the President at a throne of grace.

BEFORE this issue reaches all our readers, D. M. Miller and the editor will be in Le Sueur county, Minnesota, among the Lord's people. As to the discussion we cannot say; the propositions are not yet agreed upon. We are by no means anxious for any kind of work, but shall not flee from defending the truth. God will help us.

The Casel Library is now open to the public. Those in the vicinity can avail themselves of the golden opportunity to read good books for a small sum of money. Those at a distance will have the same chance as soon as the Catalogue is completed, which is being rapidly hurried forward.

By a letter from our old friend Mr. Lawrence, we learn that he is prepared to furnish clothing and hats made after the Brethren's fashion. He says he can furnish a suit for $8.00 to $9.50, and will also send samples of cloth and prices to any part of the country. Address, Geo. W. Lawrence & Co., North Manchester, Ind.

Is the church, as a church, is so bad as grumblers see it, is it not strange that the Lord still leads it? Those grumblers will please excuse nineteen-twentieths of the members for not looking through their glasses. The great majority cannot be led by sensations and misrepresentations. They cling to the truth, and are established on it.

Do not conclude that because the B. at W. has matter on hand for the next paper that you will not write. Though the Work table should be full of the very choicest mental food for those who hunger after it, yet contributors should be getting more ready, and fill up the gaps for the future. Take time, however, to formulate your ideas; and have them well gone before you send them in. Season liberally with grace.

It is with some feelings of regret that the B. at W. says farewell to Bro. Moore; but his labor with it has been pleasant. The W. at W. has only kind wishes for his future well-being, and at all times shall welcome his Christian productions to its columns. The present editor is enjoying good health, and carries on the work hopefully, trusting the Lord for health, the power of a sound mind, wisdom and divine charity. The earnest praying and tender sympathies of all are desired, so that nothing injurious to our holy Christianity may find its way into the columns of the BRETHREN AT WORK.

The communications from brother Silas Gilbert shows that the effort of the late meeting of some of the elders of Miami Valley, Ohio, is not as strong as they supposed. It is well that it is so, for there is not a single good reason for the dissolution effort of some of the elders. The great majority of the elders, ministers, deacons, and members are strongly attached to the Brethren church, and will remain firm to it, giving no encouragement to those who unwisely advise separation. We have kind feelings for those who have gone out from us, (1 John 2: 19) and pray that they may return to the flock of Jesus, and beneath our beloved brethren to treat them with loving-kindness and tenderness; but in the light of the Gospel we can have no words of sympathy for their acts at separation.

On the 17th of May, we reviewed Alexander Campbell on time immemorial. Five weeks afterwards, Isaac Errett, of the Christian Standard reviewed our article. Seven weeks thereafter our second article appeared, though it was written five weeks before its appearance. Mr. Errett says it appeared two months after his review. The general glow of his intelligence just stretched the truth one week. Four weeks have elapsed since our second article went out, and now Mr. Errett comes out in a two-column wide and, with a little tallow slip, tries to drive away the light we shed upon A. Campbell, Mr. Errett, "like the blast of a bugle on the rear edge of battle," has awakened no truth. We shall give him further attention on our return from Minnesota.

For the Brethren at Work:

VIGILANCE.

BY JAMES Y. BECKLER.

How oft I've seen when I rejoiced,
The wily adversary power
Would bring some sad mishap on me,
To cost me down that very hour.

These things may all be good for us
If we would boldly persevere,
By taking courage to press on
Against the adversary here.

It makes us stronger every time
We gain another victory;
Defeat should never once be known,
Nor should we turn, retreat nor flee.

Stead boldly up and fight in faith,
The daring conquest will be thine.
The devil is a coward fiend
Who cannot bear the sword divine.

He knows our weakest points full well,
And when we watch not or look back,
He takes advantage of our ease,
And makes another bold attack.

He is, we all acknowledge it,
The meekest character on earth,
The vilest villain of his kind,
Who fruits of wickedness brings forth.

Then let us arm ourselves with might,
With buckler, helmet, shield, and sword,
To stand against his bold attacks,
To fight the battles for the Lord.

For if we watch and pray to God
For his protection day and night,
And put our trust in him alone,
We soon can put the foe to flight.

Temptations which he brings to us,
Will vanish like the melting snow,
If we persistently refuse
To heed them, but to Jesus go.

But when we slacken in our prayers,
The devil comes to shake our faith,
To fill our hearts with worldly cares,
With coldness, wantonness, and death.

Not always as a lion bold,
Or as a prowling beast of night,
Does he go roving through the world,
But as a messenger of light.

He will deceive us if he can;
At first he comes with little things,
Such as may seem of no account,
If we give way still more he brings.

How many cold, unguarded souls
Are taken captive at his will
To serve him gently by degrees
Until they fall and show the ill.

O, brethren, let us watch and pray,
Like sentinels who stand on guard,
To be on duty night and day,
That we may gain the great reward.

ONE reason why we all grow wise so slowly is because we nurse our mistakes too fondly.

For the Brethren at Work.

LEARN OF ME.

BY C. H. BALSBRADON.

To a Saint in the Mount Behar:—

WHAT! Everything of whom? Him
"in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." Col. 2: 3. The multiplication table as such belongs to God as the Gospel according to St. John, or the Epistle of St. James, or Paul's letter to the Galatians. The numerals are as quick with Divinity as the letters of the alphabet. Twelve times twelve make one hundred and forty-four in Heaven as on earth. Rev. 7. Letters and numerals are an eternal necessity. The Word that was in the beginning with God, and is God, is Alpha and Omega, and all that can be aggregated with the nine digits. The Uncreated lives by seconds as we do, for duration is the same essentially everywhere, and who can enumerate or express "the number of His months," or "declare his generation?" "Learn of Me." Here is the sad and fatal defection of knowledge: it is not Christed. The fruit of the forbidden tree is plucked in rebellion and defiance. That Tree was meant for man's test no less than for his likeness to God. The fruit was eaten before it was ripe. God's time was not yet, nor man's. "And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil." God knew the difference from Eternity, but not the infringement. So might man have known in God's order and season. But he was precipitous and presumptuous. He wanted to be like God in this, not content with being like Him in constitution. His likeness to God in premature knowledge, resulted in unlikeness of character. Rising higher in knowing, he sank lower in life. Knowledge was misery, because gained by disobedience. He knew without experience that there was such a thing as evil, but he must taste for himself. He lusted, sinned, died.

"Learn of Me." This brings life again. Adam and Eve said, "not as Thou wilt, but as I will." Christ the reverse. "Lo, in the volume of the Book it is written of me, I come to do thy will, O Lord." This was spoken when God "brought the first-begotten into the world." And when He left it to return to the Father, when the heavy, foul, bitter dregs of man's misdoing were to be quaffed, He repeated the determination with which He assured humanity: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." This is the pivot of salvation, the corner-stone of Eternity, the pedestal of God's Throne. God's will is God's love in expressions manifold and innumerable.

Loyalty was the sum and substance and totality of the life of Jesus. "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" This is the key note to the Incarnation. The interrogation expressed surprise. "Wist ye not?" To Him it was a matter of course, and he wondered that his parents should think differently. Such a conception, such a birth, such an increase in wisdom and stature, and in favor with God and man," such a dominance of the human by the Divine from infancy to that temple visit—what else could be inferred than that the business of his life was the unfolding of God, very God in the flesh, lifting our sin-poisoned, sin-blasted nature into the lost likeness of its original? He was not one who commenced building a tower without counting the cost. He knew the number and the prowess of the legions of hell. He was aware through what ranks and files of devils, the Sword of the Spirit had to hew its way. He forestayed in His infinite foreknowledge the agonies of the Cross, and had the awful hyphen of his thirty three years of humiliation in the consciousness of all time inclusive Divinity, and yet with infinite enthusiasm He stepped into breach with the body—and soul, Divine-and-human-comprehending dedication, "I come to do thy will, O my God." That will is the grand, sovereign authority of the universe. Not a sparrow falls, or an insect's wing flutters, or a sunbeam darts through space, or a smile plays on an infant's face, or a mill-stone of judgment falls on Babylon the great or Babylon the small, not a world or atom is created or burnt up, independent of the will Christ came to honor. The whole world lay in wickedness; Christ came to redeem it by doing "the will of God on earth as it is done in heaven. Omnipotent will does not represent sheer might, but infinite holiness, goodness, grace. God has not only "power to cast into hell," but he has will to forestall damnation by becoming the sinner's substitute. To resist an Almighty will which is flavored and controlled by infinite love, is not only infinite madness, but infinite wickedness. That will lead right even if it leads to the Cross. "I come to do thy will," and in that to find my Heaven in the midst of Hell. Such was the dedication of Jesus, such is the basis of all life that ends in bliss. "For the joy that was set before Him he endured the cross." "Lazarus of Me." This is the lesson of Christianity; "Know ye not your own selves, how that Jesus Christ is in you, except ye be reprobrates?" 2 Cor. 13: 5.

To know God and His Christ is eternal life. John 17: 3. And we know Him only by willing as he wills. "I come to do thy will" is the sweetest, spontaneity of a God centered soul. The highest liberty is the servitude of love. Not only do we control the work God has given us to do, and bend and concentrate it to loftiest issues, but much more does His work control us. "My meat and my drink"—my sustenance, my life, my energy, my all—is to do the will of Him that sent me, "to finish his work." This is the redemption wrought for us by Christ, in us by the Spirit. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus" His loyalty was constraining. There was an irresistible necessity in it. Everlasting love was the impulsion. The Omnipotent must of a Divine force is in his "Lo, I come to do Thy will." That very "love is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost." "As he is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4: 17. Well may Paul say, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me." Here is "the secret of the Lord." Here is the white stone with a new name inscribed, spelled out of the double consciousness of God and the soul. This only is salvation. There is no getting to Heaven by proxy. Christ is God in man, "the word made flesh," and in us "the wisdom of God and the power of God," and the bond of perfectness," and the open seal of the spirit "unto the day of redemption." Nothing objective, even if instituted by God "Himself can serve us instead. Baptized by Paul, feet washed by Christ, kissed by the whole apostolic dozen, and wrapped in the seamless robe and the unshorn locks of a Nazarite, and wearing Aaron's mitre, or the great Aaron's turban—all these combined will not avail one iota without that God-effected regeneration of which all these external forms are symbolic representations. The imperative of all-sacrificing love lay on Christ, and was inwoven with every fibre of his being "I must be about my Father's business." "I must work the work of Him that sent me." "Other sheep I have, then also I must bring." Love will not let me rest so long as one soul is unatoned. "The Son of Man must be delivered into the hands of sinful men. Twelve legions of angels were ready to fly from the ramparts of glory to minister to flesh-clothed Deity, but how then shall the prenatal dedication of Jesus be consummated? "Lo, I come to do thy will," which demanded his death as a sin-offering for a ransom of the world. "That which is written must be accomplished." "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so must the Son of Man be lifted up." How then shall the Scripture be fulfilled that thus it must be? "And with equal emphasis comes in the inexorable verb in the radical injunction, "Ye must be born again." "Woe is me if I preach not the Gospel." The sweet soul resting must of love, and holy desire, and perfect consecration, is the guarantee of Christ's triumph and ours. "Lo, I come to do thy will," to show earth the heart of God and the harmony of Heaven. Less than this would not have satisfied God's rectoral honor, or man's ethical liabilities and instincts.

We must have a Redeemer, and Jehovah Jesus must come. Ruin cries for help, and Love pants to deliver. This is the Father's business and the Son's. "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." Mark these words: "and I work." This condition is extended from Christ to every soul that is saved. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you both to will and to do." "Learn of me." "I am the way." "Look unto Jesus." He is near enough to God to make imitation salvation; far enough from the world to make its vanities "dung," and its honor a disgust. In Him poverty is riches, and without Him a millionaire is a pauper. "Learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." "I will give you rest—the rest of God; and peace which passeth all understanding." The whole world, and life itself, is a cheap sacrifice for such dignity and glory and felicity. Because of his absolute self oblivion on entering upon the stupendous work of redemption, he had at last a right to refer to his own will and say: "Father, I will that they whom thou hast given me be with me where I am: that they may behold my glory." Let us ever live in the realization of the "wherefore" in Phil. 2: 9. That adverb gathers round it, and absorbs, all the other parts of speech in the grammar of Heaven. Suffering with Him; glorified together." "A far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Rom. 8: 17, 18. 2 Cor. 4: 17.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST AND MILLENNIAL REIGN.

BY JAS. EVANS.

NUMBER VI.

WE will devote this paper to an event on which our eternal future depends, and which is closely connected with the second coming of Christ, viz: The resurrection of the dead. That great expounder of the mystery of the Gospel, Paul says, "What benefit to me if the dead rise not?" 1 Cor. 15: 32. He has reference to all who die in Christ here, for he uses the word nekroi, the plural of nekros, dead. No doctrine is held out more prominently than the resurrection. In spite of pagan philosophy it was the true basis of a life to come. The question of future identity was unanswered by the ancient philosophers. They recognized a divine substance in man, separable from his bodily structure, which was indestructible, but it might be re-absorbed by the Deity, and so all future identity would be lost. But with the resurrection of the dead came the fullest assurance that we would know each other there. If the dead would live again, then there would be no re-absorption of the soul by the great fountain of life. The Christian seeks for no scientific basis of immortality to satisfy rejectors of revelation and Jesus. If we succeeded in laying a scientific basis for immortality outside of the Bible and independent of Jesus, the first-fruits of those who sleep, would we convert the scientific unbelievers of the day? Not at all. We would throw them into the arms of spiritualism, the most daring and blasphemous form of infidelity extant. The Helmholtzes and Haeckles are saints compared with them. These filthy dreamers recognize a scientific basis for their future life, but scant the idea that God will raise the dead.

And what is Sadsuceism, but a denial that God will raise the dead? Spiritualists, Swedenborgians, Unitarians, Universalists, and a vast number of the religious teachers say that dead bodies will never be raised. They accept the scientific basis, but reject the divine one. When science humbly sits at the feet of Jesus, she may be eminently useful. But when she sits in the temple of God claiming to be a goddess of infallible wisdom, we remind her of her mistakes. She works her way slowly, and often has to undo her work. She has taught much that is "science falsely so called" and much that she teaches now for sterling truth, will turn out to be "old wives' fables." If I have only a scientific basis for my eternal hereafter, I would keep on doubting to the last. Hear Peter: "Who raised Jesus from the dead and gave him glory that your faith and hope might be in God." 1 Pet. 1: 21. Who will leave this sure foundation and build on philosophy? No philosopher of ancient or modern time has shed a single ray of light on man's future. Outside of the Bible they know as little of the world to come as a savage of Ashantee.

Man was created for immortality and in the image of God. But science did not teach him this, but the Creator himself. What is the Bible but the unfolding of man's glorious future? Before Jesus brought life and incorruptibility (aphtharisis) to light, God showed us, securely that the dead would rise. Though Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob were dead, still God was their God. He calls the things that are not as though they were. Rom. 4: 17. The thing shown at the bush was "that the dead do rise." Luke 20: 37. If their bodies had returned to dust forever, then no relation would exist between them and God and there would be no resurrection. In a very important sense these bodies live. They live in the divine purpose just as Abraham was the father of nations when he had no child. "I will be a God to thee and to thy seed after thee," was an assurance of a resurrection. The promise was obscure but Jesus removed the veil and the promise shines forth.

Jesus was no scientist in the popular sense. He said nothing about imponderable substance or magnetic power as demonstration of future life, but he gave the blessed assurance that "He would raise us up at the last day." He became the life of the world. He declared that all whom the Father gave him would come to him, eat his flesh and drink his blood, and be raised up in the last day. He not only taught this doctrine but demonstrated it in his own person. He went into the grave, trusted in God into whose hands he commended his spirit and could not be holden of death, for he was raised from death by the glory of the Father and now his resurrection from the dead becomes to us the pledge of our return to life at his appearing, provided we have been made partakers of his love and grace on Gospel conditions and have kept the faith and have not denied the name of Jesus by being ashamed of his words. If we suffer with him, we shall reign with him, and the life of Jesus shall be made manifest in these mortal bodies, (2 Cor. 10: 11) which will be changed and made like unto Christ's glorious body. If Jesus lives, we shall live also.

Now as this "blessed hope" is associated with the coming of Jesus, it must receive a large share of attention from all who study the Word of God and seek to know the truth. The resurrection state is no dreamy mythical existence, but the full exercise of all that constitutes man, body, soul, and spirit. We may misunderstand the separate functions of this threefold nature of man, but we cannot mistake the united elements of man when he shall live again, and if one of the sons of God shall shine as the sun in the kingdom of God. Matt. 13: 43. The end comes, the harvest is ripe, the tares are gathered and burned in the furnace and the wheat garnered. This is at the end of the aion or age, not world in the sense of the globe; then the righteous shine forth as the sun in that everlasting kingdom which the God of heaven will set up during the times of restitution, which times are preceded by the coming of Jesus and the resurrection of the dead. But all are not to obtain that age (aion) or the resurrection of the dead. Luke 20: 35. Certain ones, called "worthy", are to obtain it. This brings to view the doctrine of the first resurrection, the subjects of which are blessed and holy. All are not to rise when Jesus comes. This is the doctrine of Rome who teaches in her catechisms that the wicked will rise with the righteous and receive incorruptible bodies, which will live forever in eternal flames whose intense heat will cause his blood to boil in their veins and the marrow in their bones. But a careful study of the Word of God will convince us that when Jesus comes, the dead in Christ will be raised and the living changed, and that the resurrection of all other classes is subsequent to this. We shall treat of this in our next.

P. S. We trust the amateurs of scientific philosophy will bear with us in preferring to rest on Jesus and on him only.

NON-CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.

BY DAVID K. MILLER

JESUS said, "If any man come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 11: 28, 29. "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest; take my yoke upon you and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls." Jer. 6: 16 says, "Ye shall find rest for your souls; for my yoke is easy and my burden is light." This requires a general denial of the kingdom of this world and to be transformed into the kingdom of Christ, Paul to the Roman brethren says, "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Rom. 12: 2. This means transforming your mind from the things pertaining to the kingdom of this world to the kingdom of Christ. "Come out from among the world;" not out of the world, but from the vain allurements of this world. If men say that Christ is in the billiard hall, believe it not; if they say he is in the beer saloon, believe it not.

Men will say to you, "One drink won't hurt you." But ah! if you yield to one, you want another, and the second one will hurt you twice as much as the first one. It is your business to watch and pray that ye be not deceived." One brother may say, "I would not inform on a brother for going to that place." Ah what does that say? It says, "I will go there, too."

Paul says "there must be also heresies among you, that they which are approved may be made manifest among you." 1 Cor. 11: 19. Jesus says, "It must needs be that offences come, but woe to that man by whom the offences cometh." Matt. 18: 7. And again he said, "It is impossible but that offences will come, but woe unto him through whom they come." Luke 17: 1. Christ said, "Woe unto the world because of offences." Matt. 18: 7.

"To be worldly-minded is death, but to spiritually-minded is life and peace; because the carnal mind is enmity against God, for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." Therefore are ye dead with Christ to the things of this world. "Not every one that saith Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness?" "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you." 2 Cor. 6: 14, 17. Since Jesus has said he has chosen us from the world, we must have some peculiar characteristic about us to be distinguished from the world, and in order to be true followers of Christ.

LIVE AND LOVE LIFE'S LABORS.

BY WILLIAM M. LYON.

TO live to do good is the aim of every true creature of society. Life is filled with labors. Every day we live brings forth new work for our hands and hearts to perform, and every passing moment bears to eternity the record of the past labors of life. If we would wend our way through the toils of mortal life, in peace and pleasure, we must try to meet all its work with a cheerful heart and willing mind. Life's labors are sweet to those who delight in doing duty, because it is duty.

Whatever our vocation in life may be, labor will be lessened and joy increased by loving the work. We must labor to improve our talent, as well as our time. Love and learn, and then learn to live aright. Live to love, and you will love to live. He who lives as though life was compulsory, will wear out his very existence lamenting about the dire distresses during the varied scenes of life, and fret and frown because fun, fancy, and frivolity were not the prevailing elements in its stead. They that never journey to meet trouble, but move along with the labors of life, without murmur or sigh, and as gently and pleasantly as the even breeze, will only be made to drink deeper draughts from the current of comfort, when the mortal shall be changed to immortality. The candid and consistent life of a true Christian, although attended and surrounded with toils and troubles, and the very vista of vital happiness converted to one continuous current of calamity, yet the very soul, prompted by the silent movings of divine impulse, will at last gain transcendency, and reach the glorious goal—paradise. The bitter pangs that must be endured in the stage of mortality, will only render the contrast sweeter and purer. Who, then, would be so callous in conscience as to refuse to labor for right and truth? Who dare face the fearful future without first laboring for that crown of righteousness? Kind reader, did you ever think of the great labor you owe Jesus? If not, let me say if you think it too hard to labor for Jesus, will you not labor for your self,—your own precious soul? Remember the reward is all your own. Then, why stand ye idle, when Jesus calls you to labor for that starry crown? If you will not labor for your own soul and for Christ's sake in this world, you must suffer in the eternal kingdom.

Jesus says, "If ye love me, ye will keep my commandments, and if a man love me he will keep my word." John 14: 15-23. Here is the command and reward. Are you doing the commandments, and keeping the word? If so, labor on faithfully, and fear not; the reward is sure. Who would not live and labor for God a few days or years on earth, to wear that crown in glory? They that live godly here, shall suffer persecution, but shall reign triumphantly with Christ when done with time. A frail excuse keeps you from serving God on earth, and likewise a frail excuse can close you out from heaven at the judgment day. Methinks that heart adamant that does not soften and melt, when God's voice sounds and reverberates incessantly through his shuddering soul, and surrounded, perhaps, by dear ones, laboring for the Master, and with whom he is united by sacred, kindred ties. Yet how many delay their greatest and known duty, simply because some struggling soul has erred in trying to "put on Christ," or some weak mortal, perhaps an aged father or mother, or sincere, but erring, brother or sister, son or daughter, has made a misstep in trying to follow Jesus. O! how many anxious hearts would gladden, how many tears of joy fall, if those who are striving to get to heaven, only had the helping hand of their fellow creatures, instead of their scorn and derision. But O how sad will be the scene when they that rejoiced on earth must mourn in eternity, they that loved the lust and sin of mortal life must suffer the dreadful doom of evil-doers, forever and ever, and the persecuted, divided, and despised Christian will come forth to be crowned with an everlasting diadem of righteousness, and dwell in the house of the Lord forever.

A NOBLE GIFT.

THE widow's two mites. What more tender, more solemnly affecting, more profoundly pathetic, than this charity, this offering to God of a farthing? We only know that she was a poor woman and a widow, of whom there is nothing left upon record but this sublimely simple story, that when the rich men cast their proud offerings into the treasury, this poor woman came also and cast in her two mites, which made a farthing! And that example, thus made the subject of Divine commendation, has been read and told, and has gone abroad everywhere, and sunk deep into a hundred million of hearts since the commencement of the Christian era, and has done more good than could be accomplished by a thousand marble palaces, because it was charity, mingled with true benevolence, given in love, to the service and the honor of God; because it was charity that had its origin in religious feeling; because it was a gift to the honor of God.—Sel

WERE every dewdrop a diamond, every atom a world, and every world filled with gold, all would not satisfy the boundless desires of the immortal soul.

LIFE MENTALITY.

THE author of the Problem of Life advocates the theory that life mentality, etc., are real, substantial entities. This life is not flesh or caused by the motion of fleshly atom-lent real substance, originally proceeding from the Creator, and which returns to Him at death and is reabsorbed by the original source of life. This vital substance called soul is not alone possessed by man, but shared by all in some degree, even by the little Moneron.

It is stated by those divines who affirm that God made all things: out of nothing, that beasts have no souls, that the real distinction between man and beast is this: Man has a soul, a beast has not. The Hebrew word for soul is nephesh, and is found in Gen. 1: 20, 21, 24, 30. To deny a living soul, or a nephesh hayyah, to all creatures, is to deny like infidels the Mosaic record; for that record plainly teaches that creature. So far as a soul is common to all deities. Hell is sustained by the inspired record. See marginal references in Gen. 1: 20, 30. But if the spirit of the beast is reabsorbed at death into the great reservoir of life, what of the statement of Eccl. 3: 21. "The spirit of the beast goes downward to the earth." Hall might reply that Solomon says no such thing. The German of Eccl. 3: 20 is "Wer weiss ob der Geist der Menschen aufwärts geht und der Oelm (Geist Hob. Bruch) des Viehes unterwärts unter der Erde fährt?" Who knows whether the spirit of man goes upward, or the breath or spirit (same words in Heb.) of the beast is carried underneath." Martine's French version renders it Qui est ce qui le souffle hommes monte en haut, et que le souffle de la bête descend en bas en terre? Meaning the same as the German. The Vulgate, Septuagint, all render the Hebrew in the form of a question. Who can tell that the one ascends and the other descends? If the soul of a beast is an entity, how can it descend? JAS. EVANS.

Droit, Mo.

REMARKS.

Bro. Evans has a clear, and, I think, quite correct view of the relation existing between the creator, man, and beast. I have always regarded the language of Solomon as a generalization, and not as especially designed to teach any definite doctrine concerning the distinction existing between man and beast or as to their difference in the future state, simply noting the contrast between the upward, onward, and progressive tendencies of man's thoughts and his mental trend toward high development, and the unprogressive, downward, and earthly tendency of the most intelligent animals, satisfied, as their mental language seems to be, with earth and the food and shelter it yields them.

Scientifically considered, I still feel satisfied that the view presented in the "Problem of Human Life," as to the true difference between man and beast and the original cause of that difference, is the only correct and reasonable solution of the problem of a future life. If the beast had a mental constitution that gave it the slightest glimpse into a future state of being, or that caused the faintest desire for such a continuance of conscious existence, I should believe with Joseph Cook, John Wesley and other great and careful thinkers in the possible, nay probable future life of such animal tribes as possessed these aspirations. But as animals below man are not constitutionally capable of such anticipatory thoughts, their lives undoubtedly serve the purpose originally intended by the Creator in placing them on the earth where they have supplied their wants during the brief period of this temporary existence. How simple and beautiful, then, the thought that the mental and vital substance which animated and inspired these myriads of lower organisms, as fast as they die/reatsorb into the primordial fountain of life and mentality from which they originally supplied, without an atom of such incorporeal entity being lost or annihilated!

But the same analogical reasoning which would convince us that the beast will not retain an individual and conscious identity after the death of its body, proves also that man will so survive his earthly existence. It is an inbred principle of his constitution and a part of his nature even in the lowest savage, to long for and anticipate a life beyond the present; it is an unamenable fact that the more uncultured a people are, the more personal, literal, and entitative do these pictures of a future state become, even to the most vivid visions of luminous scenes which pass before the mind of the unlettered savage and which no argument of the atheist or materialist can ever eradicate from his belief or even tend to weaken. If this idea of a hereafter for man be not an original implantation from the Almighty, then tell me, ye sceptical philosophers, please, why the ideal of life of the future approaches more nearly to the real life of the present, becoming more and more palpable fact to the longing heart, as the mental and vital stream of humanity is traced back to its primordial source? The solution I was forced to give in the "Problem of Human Life," and the only one that still affords the slightest satisfaction to my reason, is, that the longing anticipation individualizes the human animal, not only making it a subject of personal immortality in a future state, but demonstrating the original design of the Creative Will to be that man was destined from the start as a denizen of two worlds, and that the present, in the All-wise councils of the universe, was to be but the temporary school as a preparatory step for a final state of conscious personality. As certain as living creatures are the original products of a personal, supervising intelligence who knew what He was about in placing man and the countless grades of lower organisms upon this planet, instead of tracing their origin to a senseless and mindless law of Natural Selection, just so certain does this implanted aspiration for immortality in man prove that there is in the realms of this creative intelligence a thing somewhere with which to gratify such longing, or else the very implantation would be an exhibition of supreme mockery and infinite trifling. A TIMELY WARNING.

BY EMILY R. STIFLER.

WHEN God created Adam and Eve, He did so with a wise purpose. They were the first parents of their extensive race that now inhabits the earth. Generation after generations have been created since, for the same wise and noble purpose, and there remain, perhaps, many generations unborn. But the question propounds itself right here, are we accomplishing the purpose for which God has created us?

God created man in his own likeness and image. How many of us to-day resemble the likeness and image of God? Let us ponder the question well. Yes, God did create us in his own likeness and image, but many of us are far from being so now. The young lady of to-day makes the image of God a vast deformity. She loves the gay and silly fashions of dress, until she cares not for much else. She decorates this temple—the body—with fashion until it fails to have one iota of resemblance to that pure and holy temple which God intended it should be. The waist is laced until it is not near the size it should be, the feet are forced in high-heeled shoes, until they have become unmanageable; the neck, head and hands bear similar deformations. Thus she thinks she is fitted for society. She likely remains up late at night. She exposes herself to cold and dampness, and uses no doubt, not half the amount of proper clothing to protect her from the inclemency of the weather. But pleasures must be sought at all events, if the body must suffer. She exclaims, "I feel quite comfortable, it will not hurt me!" etc. Not many months will elapse until a cold is contracted from exposure in this dressing, and a cough follows. It is but a light cough, it will do no harm. Shortly she grows weak and languid. The doctor is sent for, consumption has won its seed and germinated. The cough increases, the eyes grow dim, the face pale, the appetite fails, and worst of all, human skill fails, and death approaches. Perhaps in a few months from the time fashion took hold of the young lady's mind, she occupies a consumptive's grave. Did God do all this? "Yes," many will say, "God called this young lady from the stage of action." But not so, dear reader, the vain and giddy fashions did it. God says, "Whatever a man sows, that shall he also reap; for he that sows to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that sows to the spirit shall reap life everlasting." Gal. 6: 7, 8.

This is only one of the many thousand evils which are prevalent in the land to-day. I have again and again heard men and women say that many times during their life would they rather read a novel than eat a meal, or take their required bodily rest in sweet slumbers. This taste for trashy literature is becoming more prevalent every day in our broad land. Behold where you will, the printing presses are issuing these vile destroyers of soul and body. THE HIGH GATE.

WE noticed not long since an account of a travelers who was traveling in New England, and while passing through, he noticed a strong, high gate standing alone by the wayside. There was no wall nor fence near it; but still well bolted a d barred, it stood up strong and straight, as though it was doing grand duty. There was no need to draw out the rusty bolts to admit the passer-by, as it was just as convenient to go around as to pass through it.

"This," said the traveler, "reminded us of the ecclesiastical gate, which has so long been closed against women. It stands bolted and barred; but the ecclesiastical fence is nearly all down, and, at the command of the Master, Christian women may march into life's great harvest field to work without disturbing the gate, or the gate disturbing them. With an open vineyard before them, Christian women are marching out for Christian effort as never before."

It is true that women have been kept under bondage by the power of unwise men, and have been deprived of the privileges contained in the Gospel of Christ; but the time will come, and now is, that women will step out on the platform of high heaven, regardless of the tyrannical bastings of men, wave the blood-stained banner of King Emmanuel, and warn sinners to come to Christ.

Christian men, pray for the "weaker vessel" and aid them in the noble work of God. And "I entreat thee also, yoke-fellow, help those women which labored with me in the Gospel, with Clement also, and with others, my fellow-laborers, whose names are in the Book of Life." Phil. 4: 3. M. C. N.

THE ORPHAN FOUND A HOME.

A FEW days ago, a boy, about ten years of age, lame and sickly, who had been living with his mother in rooms in the city, found himself alone in the world; the lad was too ill to ride in the one poor carriage which followed the body to the grave, yet no one thought his condition serious.

After the funeral, a number of persons gathered in the poverty-stricken room, where he lay weeping, to see what disposition could be made of him.

"If he wasn't lame I'd take him into my family," observed one of the men in a tone that seemed to show that he blamed the boy for his misfortune.

"Well, it's awful hard," sighed one of the women, "but I know he couldn't get along with my children."

"If I should take him, he'd run up a big doctor's bill on me," said a man as he filled his pipe.

Each and every one had some excuse. The boy heard them all without a word, but with a quivering chin and eyes full of tears. Under one pretense and another all slipped out and left him alone, promising to have another talk in the morning.

Perhaps that night before they closed their eyes in sleep some of them thought of the poor lad, most helpless; but if so, none of them went near him.

Late in the morning, a woman living on the same floor went to see if he might not want a bite to eat, and the question of who should take care of him was settled. God had taken care of him. Hugged close to the wall, as if he feared the midnight shadows, and with eye-lashes yet wet, he was cold and dead—no longer a burden to any one. The boy too lame to be taken care of on earth, too feeble to earn the crust some one would have given, had a home better than the best.

When they knew that he died alone, women bent over him and wept. When they lifted his wasted body from the bed, men's conscience smote them for their harsh words; but it was too late! He had gone from earth feeling that there was no mercy in the human heart.—Selected by Emma Racer.

GLASS CLOTH.

ONE of the chief characteristics of glass is brittleness. "As brittle as glass," is a comparison of such universality that there is scarcely a civilized person living that has not at one time or another made use of it. Yet, notwithstanding this marked characteristic of glass, it is susceptible of being spun and woven into fabrics as perfect, delicate, durable, and handsome as the finest silk. Glass has been spun and woven in Austria for a number of years, but never until recently has this been undertaken in the United States. A prominent Pittsburgh manufacturing firm have provided themselves with facilities for producing various kinds of fabrics from this ordinarily brittle substance, some of which they have already made. Among the articles they are prepared to exhibit are a capkin, a towel, and a table-cloth, the latter is about six feet square, and white in color, except the ends, which are a delicate green, and the four edges are fringed. The towel and napkin are the same as the table cloth, except the ornamental border, which in one is red and the other pink. These fabrics are as flexible as, but slightly heavier, than those woven of flax, and the manufacturers state that they can be washed and ironed like the ordinary table-cloth and napkins. (N)

HOW HE LOST HIS SITUATION.

EXPERIENCE keeps a dear school; it is a pity that young people will not believe it when others tell them so, without going to the expense of testing it for themselves.

A gentleman asked his nephew "How came you, James, to lose your place?"

"Well, I'll tell you," was the reply. "I had an easy berth, got seventy-five dollars a month, had an assistant, didn't have to get down till eight in the morning, left at five, had a chance to take life easy; but gradually began to take it too easy. Didn't get down till nine in the morning instead of eight, wanted to smoke two cigars instead of one. Grew careless of my money—used four dollars where I had been using two. First I knew my salary was cut down a little, and then a little more, but I could not take the hint; but fretted about my poor situation, and one morning I waked up, after a night's sleep, and lo! I had no situation at all. But I'll tell you what I did have, uncle, I had my experience."

That youth is working at forty-five dollars a month now, instead of seventy-five; but he already has six hundred dollars in the bank.

Would that more of our youths might be profited by his experience. (N)

A GOOD LESSON.

BY THOMAS G. SNYDER.

ONCE had money and a friend; on both I set good store. I lent my money to my friend, and took his word therefor. I asked my money of my friend, and naught but words I got. I lost my money and my friend; for sue him I would not.

If I had my money and my friend, as once I had before I'd keep my money and my friend, and play the fool no more. "He that hateth suretyship is sure." Alas! hear the apostle in the New Testament, "owe no man."

CANDOR IN FAMILIES.

DO not let the idea that "you know it all" get away with you. Do not try to make make your wife believe that you are a great man, because she will know better. Do not try to make your children believe that you are a saint; they will find you out. Acknowledge that you are human, and establish a bond of sympathy with them. Tell them not to lie, because you know lying to be bad.

Children are thinkers, and in their quaint little way, sharp logicians. Do not impose upon them. Do not pick out their deficiencies for them. Do not try to direct their minds into channels that are uncongenial to them. When children ask questions you cannot answer, honestly acknowledge your ignorance. They will think more of you for it, and it is far preferable to have them think you are ignorant, than to catch you in a lie. Let us raise leaders, instead of followers. (N)

NO SMOKER NEED APPLY.

I WAS sitting in the office of a mechanic not long since, when a lad about sixteen entered with a cigar in his mouth. He said to the gentlemen: "I would like to get a situation in your shop to learn the trade, sir." "I might give you a place, but you carry a bad recommendation in your mouth," said the gentlemen. "I don't think it any harm to smoke, sir; nearly everybody smokes now." "I am sorry to say, my young friend, I can't employ you. If you have money enough to smoke cigars, you will be above working as an apprentice; and if you have not money, your love for cigars might make you steal it. No boy who smokes cigars can get employment in my shop. (N)

BRETHERN AT WORK,
Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill.

VALEDICTORY.

ONE year ago the proprietors of the BRETHERN AT WORK desired me to take a position as the paper. I consented to do so for one year, expecting to remain quite a while if needed. When the office was moved to Mt. Morris, last Winter, my family remained at Lanark, as I did not desire to move till it was clear that my services were required in the office. After working on the paper one year, I told Bro. Eshelman that there was not work enough on the paper for both of us, and that if I remained he would have to spend much of his time traveling in order to keep constantly employed—for his nature is such that he must be doing something all the time—and I did not think it good for him to be away from the office so much, hence he would better let me retire, cut off his traveling, do the work he was paying me for doing and save that much. Very reluctantly, however, he consented for me to retire. But his health has improved so much of late, that he now thinks mashing the paper and preparing all the matter for it, will be much easier on him than much traveling and preaching.

It would afford me great pleasure to have remained on the paper a number of years, for to me it is the most agreeable work that I can do, but as remarked above, I thought it unnecessary, as well as unprofitable to maintain two editors in the office when only one was absolutely necessary. Therefore I retire from the office with the best of wishes for the success of the paper, and shall still do what I can for the interest of the BRETHERN AT WORK. I want to see the paper maintained and liberally supported by our people; believing that it is filling a most important place in our fraternity. The principles it advocates must be maintained in the face of much opposition, and to successfully do that, brother Eshelman will need the support of all lovers of the good old way, established by Christ and the apostles, and afterwards re-introduced by the ancient fathers of our Fraternity. He will need your articles, your sympathies and prayers; he will need your special effort to extend the circulation of the paper that it may receive its proper support.

At one time I had thought of locating in the West and entering upon an important work for which I have been making special preparations, but circumstances do not seem to favor my leaving Lanark. It has been my home for several years; we have never lived at a place where we enjoyed ourselves better. The town is a delightful place in which to reside; the country is as good, perhaps, as can be found in America, while the people have no superiors in morals and enterprise. The church here needs our work in the ministry, and we need their encouragements and associations, hence have concluded to continue our sojourn with the people of God at Lanark, hoping that our stay here will be as pleasant in the future as it has been in the past.

We part from the Brethren and school at Mt. Morris with regrets. Our short stay with them was pleasant and entertaining. They have our best wishes in their important work, which is meeting with such remarkable success.

With still greater regrets we part from the readers of the BRETHERN AT WORK. We have been workers together in the same common cause. With most of you we have never met, yet we seem as one family. May God bless you all, and enable you so to live as to be prepared for a final, happy meeting "beyond the river."

Fraternally,

THE WONDERFUL SUCCESS.

IT is remarkable that in one hundred years after the death of the apostles, such great departures from the faith should have been made, that men in the church should have arisen speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them. Such departures were made. Among the Hebrew converts there was a constant tendency toward Judaism. They were ever attempting to append items from the Jewish religion to the Christian system in order to popularize it among the Jews. On the other hand, the converts from Paganism were determined to hold fast some of the Pagan philosophy, and introduce rites and ceremonies of the Pagan religion into the Christian doctrine in order to make it popular among the Pagans. Their principal plea was that it would win the heathen to Christ. There was, therefore, a mixture of Christianity, Judaism and Paganism.

To emerge out of this apostasy, and restore to the human race the light of the Bible, cost the blood of more than fifty-millions of the followers of Jesus; and the Bible has been made accessible to all. Early in the last century an effort was made in this new world to rise above all the issues, and go up to the divine source—to the Lord and his divinely-inspired apostles, and receive the last will and testament—the complete, perfect and final revelation of Jehovah to man, and embrace all the things, the faith, the practice, the worship, the fellowship, and the communion of the Primitive church. In that wonderful event, the power of God was manifest in the breaking down of strong-holds. There was no power that could stand before the little band of Brethren who came across the ocean and settled in Germantown, Pa., where they began to sound out the Gospel. They carried the Word of Truth, talked it, obeyed it, enjoyed it, and spread it in all directions. It manifested itself in the wisdom of God and the power of God; and the Brethren were made to rejoice in the hope of the glory of God.

They were all of the same mind and of one judgment, spoke the same thing, and were moved and actuated by the same spirit. They called out the men who could present the truth to the best advantage, and who could open up the Scriptures profitably, and hold forth the Word of Life with the greatest success. In the private circle they opened up the Bible, read it, talked over the wonderful works of God, admired them and were filled with holy zeal. The knowledge of God was extended in this reformatory movement, and thousands rejoiced in the glorious prospects of eternal life. From that day to this the great stone has been rolling westward, crushing those upon whom it fell, and bruising those who fell upon it. Occasionally along the way some worldly workers, schemers and manipulators, shut out the word from their hearts, turned their ears away from it and tried to steal away the key of knowledge from the people, but they failed and miserably perished in their own corruption. Thus far no man has had power enough to overthrow the building which is founded upon the Rock. So long as the people of God inquired what is written in the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus, and made no inquiry how to please themselves, or the people, or in what manner they can best interest, entertain, and attract the worldly-minded, they will be the people of God, the light of the world, the salt of the earth.

As a people we cannot—we dare not take the weak side, the side of demoralization, the side of lit-up the brakes, and let loose the reins of Gospel discipline and Gospel restraints. There must be no sickly, feeble sentimentalism that is more in sympathy with the transgressors than with law and order and Gospel union. It would be folly to turn around after one hundred and seventy years of earnest reform and protestation against Papacy, Paganism, Judaism and worldliness, and adopt the same things—the same kind of amusements, entertainments, attractions and fashions, held and strutted by the admirers of the world. There is no use in splitting off from Catholicism, Presbyterianism, Lutheranism and worldliness if we are to follow the fashions, and engage in the amusements and entertainments of Catholics, Presbyterians, Lutherans, heathens and publicans.

Why should we maintain a separate existence from the parties around us if we are to do as they do, and adopt the things they have; if there be no other work than to follow them, imitate them, and be no more than a servile party, doing what they do, we had better fall in with them at once and confess that there are no reasons for a separate existence.

The people of God are required to maintain good works for necessary uses; they are not required to maintain any works like some other people, just because those other people have them; but we should maintain them because commanded to do so in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. We need good works and good workers—men and women who work straight forward in the work of God with an eye single to the upbuilding of God's kingdom and the salvation of sinners. There are always plenty of "evil workers," schemers, "managers" who are always on hands ready to work; but their work is not the work of God. There is no Christ in their ideas, no God, divine authority. They work as men of the world. Such accomplish nothing for Christ. They run over the field, make a great noise, and arcane the people, but their work is so superficial that a general death follows almost like darkness that can be felt. Such are not reformers. They are dangerous persons undermining all piety, all heart-work, love, homage and adoration, tearing away the foundation of faith, and even the faith itself. We believe the Brethren are for law and order. They are for consulting Christ and the apostles—holy men of God who spoke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. They are for union, fellowship, communion, praise and prosperity—the whole work of the Lord in the salvation of the church. Who refuses to stand here?

LEARN the law, if you would be wise in your country; and observe it, if you would be honored.

SABAISM.

SABAISM or Sabianism is that species of idolatry which prevailed in Chaldea or Persia before and during the history of the Israelites. The Sabaeans are mentioned by Job in 1: 15, as the people who destroyed his servants while they were plowing; by Isaiah in 45: 14 as being conquered by the Lord; by Ezekiel in 23: 42 as associating with Abolihah; by Joel in 3: 8, who predicted that the enemies of Israel should fall into the hands of the Sabaeans. They were a groveling, degrading class of people, filled with idolatrous notions. They worshipped the sun, moon and stars, and made no advancement in civilization and enlightenment. They inhabited the Western and Central part of Asia, and the great similarity between their idea of a God and those of American Indians, leads us to believe that their system of religion sprang from the same source, its origin being in Chaldea dating from the foundation of Babylon. Let us look at Sabianism as developed and perpetuated among the American Indians.

Some of them believe that their medicine-men have ascended to the heavens through holes in the sky, and there found the sun and moon walking about like men. They believe that some Indians who have gone up there and are looking down upon the earth through peep holes. "The Guaycuro thought the sun, moon and stars were men and women that went into the sea every night and swam out by the way of the East." The Lonchens believed that the moon was once a ragged boy that lived among them. The Ojibways believed that one of their number was changed into a fire-fly, when it ascended into the heavens where it was transformed into the Northern Star.

The Ottawas thought their male ancestor was translated to the sun, and their female ancestor to the moon, and these beheld the Ottawas' actions. The Houstonic Indians regarded the Seven Stars as so many Indians translated to heaven. They also believed that the stars in Charles' Wain were so many Indians hunting Ursa Major, the bear. The Cherokees looked upon the Morning Star as a sorcerer who fled thither to escape revenge for a murder. The Algonkin tribes had a tradition among them that the Evening Star was once a woman, and that three brothers were translated into a group of as many stars while traveling on a river in a canoe. They believed that a mouse once crept up a rainbow. The Greenlanders believe that the stars are so many of their ancestors who have been lifted up on account of heroic deeds. They think the moon was once a young man by the name of Aningart. His sister's name was Malina, which is the sun. The Dacotahs say meteors are men and women flying in the air. They believe that an Indian once got on the back of a meteor and took a ride. When the meteor came to a pond full of ducks, it went around instead of over it. They believe that a male spirit inhabited the moon and a female spirit the sun. The Natchez and Appalaches looked upon the sun as the abode of deputed chiefs; and the Florida Indians regarded it as the heaven of good spirits. Among the Senecas an eclipse was regarded as being caused by a manitou or bad spirit. The Western Indians think that when the moon is full, the evil spirits begin to cackle at it to put out its light, and continue to eat a little each night until it is all gone. The Ojibwa try to brighten the eclipse away by yelling. Many Indians in British America believe the Northern lights are spirits of departed Indians dancing in the clouds. The Hurons thought that thunder was the voice of men dying in the clouds. The Patagonians believe the Milky-way is the country where the dead Patagonians hunt ostriches. The Ottawas thought a turtle swam along the bottom of the sky and stirred up the mud.

These are a few of the traditions and superstitions of the Indians, and they agree quite well with the Sabaeans of old, who believed that all the heavenly bodies were inhabited by spiritual beings. The Indians of South America and Mexico were great sun-worshippers. They built temples and dedicated them to the sun. They regarded the sun, moon and stars as the names of heroes and heroines, and spent money, time, labor and life in deifying these. From the similarity of the Sabianism of Asia and that of the American Indians, there is strong evidence that some of the Indians of Asia at an early period after the flood crossed from that country into America over Behring Strait, and brought not only their nomadic life, but their customs and religion with them; and from their superstition many of them have not yet been delivered.

In the face of all this bundle of ignorance and superstition what are we as a people doing to tear it down so that the light of the Gospel may shine in? Should we not do something towards dispelling the awful darkness? Pray not that the Gospel may shine into the hearts of those benighted souls, and then make no effort to tear down the doors of ignorance. Prayer and work must go hand in hand. It will not do to say and do not, for so did the Pharisees. Nor can we hide ourselves behind the plea that the Indian is not susceptible of teaching. Many have been turned toward enlightenment and are living in peace and civilization. But what will we, as a people do for them? Turn the matter over; look at it from all sides; view it from without and from within and then report.

Are you obeying the Lord Jesus?

FESTIVAL TO-NIGHT.

The young ladies of the M E Church will give a supper, in the park, consisting of everything that is good to eat. Come out and get one Good Square Meal. Bring your feller.

Come out sure and see the elephant.
Proceeds to go to the Church.
Preston City, Pa.

THIS tells the story of the world in the church. The Gospel of Christ, as an evid-nt token to the Lord's authority, requires the disciples of Jesus to keep the Lord's supper—a feast of charity; but then what does an ordination in God's house amount to when the "young ladies" are after an "elephant" and a "feller?" O what mockery! They virtually say, "The Lord's Supper is too old fashioned; it did for the apostles and may do for the ignorant of this day, but as for us and our house we will have a 'good square meal' with fun, frolic, and merriment."

What is the result of such ungodly work? Young men who are inclined to give, but who do not choose to be robbed, are too polite to resist handsome cheeks and cheeky beauties, hence give grudgingly. All manner of dodges are resorted to wrest money from the people. Recently the following gross verse was distributed among the patrons of a city church.

Walk down to supper,
Our ladies wait you there
With viands rich and rare;
Walk down to supper,
Do not stay, but haste, but haste away,
Then the Lord will bless you.
Then the Christ-child will confess you,
His, his forever.
Walk down to supper.

Now how can professing Christians claim the Bible as their rule of conduct and resort to a species of robbery little less honest and honorable than the highwayman? In the name of God, we beseech you to pause and consider! Do you not know you are making infidels by your house, merchandise? You are driving men of common sense and lovers of the Bible to doubt our holy Christianity by your revelings and banquetings. You are rebelling against heaven—against the Gospel, the Lord Christ and godliness, as revealed by our precious Savior! We plead for our Master's principles for divine law, for sobriety instead of revelings—for holy hands instead of corrupt practices—for Gospel supports instead of avaricious, money-making, soul-destroying feasts. A man can be a Christian and not believe in such festivals, as Methodists themselves admit. Therefore Methodism with its festivals is not the Gospel, nor what a man must believe in order to avoid damnation. We beseech our brethren and sisters, go not "in the company with the workers of iniquity" (Job 34: 8) so that when the Lord comes to take vengeance upon them that know not God, and obey not the Gospel of Jesus Christ," they may be worthy of his acceptance.

M. M. S.

COMPANY.

MUCH depends upon the company we keep. A motto worthy our highest esteem is "keep good company or none!" We choose our company—it is not imposed upon us without our consent. So intimately connected with our character is the company we keep, that if we know a man's company we know his character. Murderers, thieves, adulterers, rowdies keep company of the character of themselves. Let us never forget that the company we keep is of our own choosing. We are therefore, in the sight of God,—if not of man—responsible for the results of our choosing.

It is very foolish for us to think we can make sensible people believe our character is better than the character of the company we keep. By associating with the world in preference to the church, we show most conclusively that we love the enemies of God more than we do his friends. There is therefore no propriety in neglecting the church for the vanities of the world; Christians, consistent with their profession, never leave godly for ungodly company. We pity the man or woman who tries to carry the world on one shoulder and heaven on the other. The man's burden is too great; it will crush him; if a church will feel his weight; the world will trample him, and stigmatize him by his right name—hypocrite! It is truly sad to the church but more unfortunate for the individual, when a member leaves the company of his brethren and sisters and walks coldly off with the world, dissipating down the broad road to ruin.

WHY YOU SHOULD HAVE THE STEIN AND RAY DEBATE.

NO book has been published in our Brotherhood which sets forth arguments in defense of our doctrine like this one. It also embodies the strongest arguments need against us, and how to meet them. Beside the latter feature, were it thrown out, still this book would prove to be the most valuable in our church literature.

The time has come that our opponents need to be met with the strongest arguments. Every intelligent lay member will be benefited by its perusal, and especially should it be owned by every minister as a book of reference.

It is a book of over 430 pages, well bound in cloth for $2.00 or leather $2.50 post-paid to any address. As only a limited number have been or will be published, please do not delay to order if you want a copy.—Send to Western Book Exchange, Mt. Morris, Ill.

The discovery has just been made of thirty royal mummies in Egypt. Among them are King Thutmose III and King Rameses II. King Thutmose constructed the obelisk now in London, and which was, a few years ago, transported thither from Egypt. King Rameses 270 years after, inscribed his own official titles upon the obelisk. These two great monarchs now lie side by side in the Boulak Museum; and even the garlands and flowers which were placed with them in their coffins may be seen around the masks which cover the faces of these kings who died over 3000 years ago. These relics were found in a pit hewn out of solid rock.

All articles on the eighth and ninth pages of each paper, are written by the editor unless otherwise accredited. Please bear this in mind as it will save you the trouble of writing us to know who is responsible.

On healing the sick, the Golden Censer says:

This was one part of the commission to the disciples. They were to go and continue the work of the Great Healer, the first medical missionary our world ever saw. He cured all who came, without charge, and added kindness greater than health. Much of his success in winning attention and confidence grew out of his healing. Like him the disciples were to heal the sick as well as preach the Gospel.

Bro. James gives the preacher's prescription. He says: "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church, and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: And the prayer of faith shall save the sick and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." Ch. 5: 14, 15. The procedure is, 1. Call for the elders. 2. Prayer. 3. Anointing. Result: 1. Salvation to sick. 2. The Lord will raise him up. 3. Sins shall be remitted, if there be any. James further says that, "The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much." He does not say that the fervent prayer availeth everything, but much. Is the Censer for James 5: 14, 15 with all other Gospel duties and commands?

The Baptist Flag is a'ter Dr. Graves for saying that the bread and wine do not symbolize the literal body and blood of Christ—the gospel of salvation. The Flag says:

If we understand Bro. Graves, and we think we do, he teaches that the bread and wine of the supper do not symbolize the literal body and blood of Christ; but they symbolize the doctrine or gospel and the local church! So, according to Bro. Graves, as oft as ye eat this bread and drink this cup ye show, not the Lord's death, but the doctrine and the unity of the local church, of which you are a member!

The Flag speaks of "the bread and wine of the supper." So it acknowledges that the bread and wine do not constitute the supper alone, but are parts of it! It treats them as parts of the supper, hence not alone the supper. What new doctrine is this? Dr. Ray has all along maintained that the bread and wine alone constitute the Lord's supper; but now he throws out the impression that they are only parts of the supper. Still wrong. They are neither the supper nor parts of it. Study the lesson again Doctor! "Take also the cup after supper"—Luke 22: 20. If the cup—wine—be a part of the supper, why give thanks and institute it again, after it had been instituted?

IGNORANCE is the mother of all evil.

GOOD AND RIGHTEOUS.

Please explain the difference between a good man and a righteous man. JOHN Y. SNAVELLY.

At first sight, the query seems to be making a distinction without a difference; but after a more careful investigation, it becomes evident that a difference does exist.

A righteous man, only, is one, who speaks the truth, deals honestly, is peaceably in his family and neighborhood and provides for his own.

A good man will do all these things and a good deal more. A good man is also a righteous man; but a righteous man is not necessarily a good man.

A good man, in addition to being truthful, honest, peaceable and industrious, will also be charitable, give alms to the poor, visit the sick; relieve the distressed, and would rather suffer himself, than see others in distress. He will make sacrifices, submit to inconveniences, bear others' burdens, if he can but do them good. He is ever willing to forgive the injuries of others. Christ was not only righteous, but he was a very good man. Christianity is the embodiment of moral worth.

The following quotation is in point: "When Plato described his imaginary good man covered with all the disgrace of crime, yet worthy of all the rewards of virtue, he described exactly the character of Jesus Christ.

The resemblance was so striking, it could not be mistaken, and all the fathers of the church perceived it. What possession, what blindness must it be, to compare the son of Sophronius to the son of Mary! What an immeasurable distance between them! Socrates, dying without pain and without ignominy, easily supported his character to the last; and if his death, however easy, had not crowned his life, it might have been doubted whether Socrates, with all his wisdom, was anything more than a mere sophist.

It is invented, it is said, the theory of moral science. Others, however, had before him put it in practice; and he had nothing to do but to tell what they had done, and to reduce their examples to precept. Aristides had been just, before Socrates defined what justice was. Lucidas had died for his country, before Socrates made it a duty to love one's country. Sparta had been temperate, before Socrates eulogized sobriety; and before he celebrated the praises of virtuous men.

But from a whom of all his country-men, could Jesus have derived that sublime and pure morality, of which he only has given us both precept and example? In the midst of the most licentious fanaticism, the voice of the sublimest wisdom was heard; and the simplicity of the most heroic virtue, crowned one of the humblest of all the multitude.

The death of Socrates, peacefully philosophizing with his friends, is the most pleasant that could be desired! That of Jesus, expiring in torments, outraged, reviled and execrated by a whole nation is the most horrible that could be feared. Socrates, in receiving the cup of poison, blessed the weeping executioner who presented it; but Jesus, in the midst of excruciating torture, prayed, for his merciless tormentors.

Yes, if the life and death of Socrates were those of a sage; the life and death of Jesus were those of a God."

In the above quotation, Socrates appears as a righteous man, while Christ in comparison, towers above him to the very heavens, in righteousness and moral goodness.

Cornelius was a righteous man before his conversion; but he was not strictly a good man, till his heart was renewed by grace divine.

It is only as we imitate Christ that we become truly righteous and good. J. S. M.

ANSWERS TO QUERIES.

I write for an explanation of the latter part of the 10th chapter of Acts, commencing at verse 32d. WM. LEXO.

All the prophets have testified that God would redeem Israel by one who would be their King, the Lord, their righteousness.—Remission of sins is expressly promised to returning, believing Israel. Until the middle wall of partition was taken down, it was not known that Gentiles could share in those promised blessings. Hence, the reception of Holy Spirit gifts by gentiles before baptism, did not prove that they were members of Christ's body but an evidence that they could receive the remission of sins, promised to repentant Israel.

Please explain the latter part of the 4th verse of the 6th chapter 1st Cor.: "Who are those that are least esteemed in the church?" HARRY GILLMAN.

Those, "that are least esteemed in the church." In Campbell's and McKnight's translation, this passage is rendered: "Why do you set them to judge, who are of no account in the church?" i. e., who are not members of it. If this rendering cannot be sustained, then Paul meant, "set them to judge, who, having no particular friend in the church, would not be suspected of partiality."

Will some one explain Genesis 4: 15—"And the Lord said unto him, Therefore whosoever slayeth Cain, vengeance shall be taken on him sevenfold.

And the Lord set a mark upon Cain, lest any finding him should kill him." What was the mark He set on him? ROBERT T. CROOK.

As we are not informed what the mark of Cain was, we must not be wise above what is written. The mark was a sign of protection. We could speculate some here, but it would not be profitable.

Does Gen. 4, infer that Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the living? If so, who was his wife? MARY C. NORMAN.

Cain and Abel were the first-born of all the Adamic family, but sons and daughters were born to Adam, and of these daughters Cain took a wife and brought her with him to Nod. The record does not say, he got her in Nod, but he knew her there, and she bare him Enoch, not the one who walked with God. If Cain's wife was not the daughter of Adam, then she must have belonged to another race of which the Bible gives no account.

Will some one please explain the 6th verse in the second chapter of Acts, which reads as follows: "And there were dwelling at Jerusalem Jews, devout men, out of every nation under heaven." Were those "devout men from every nation" all Jews, or not? ROBERT T. CROOK.

Those devout men were all Jews living in different countries, speaking different tongues, and at that time were attending the Passover. At first the apostles would preach the Word to none but Jews only. Acts 11: 19. The middle wall of partition still existed, although virtually taken down when Jesus died. The fact of their attendance at the Passover proved that they were of Hebrew extraction.

Please explain Heb. 6: 1, 2. We read, we should leave the principles of the doctrine of Christ, we should go on unto perfection, not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and certain towards God, of the doctrine of baptisms, etc. What baptisms had Paul reference to, seeing he uses the plural number? In the German the reading is different: "Von der Taufe, von der Lehre." Here we have but one doctrine and one baptism. How are we to reconcile the matter? J. H. MILLER.

In Heb. 6: 2, the Greek word rendered baptisms, is baptismonos, the possessive or genitive plural of baptisma. In Eph. 4: 5, the word rendered or rather anglicized baptism, is baptisma and is in the neuter gender. It is always applied to the ordinance and may have many acts, like marriage, coronation of kings and washing clothes. But baptisimos is a masculine noun and is never applied to the ordinance but the acts constituting the one ordinance of baptisimo. It is also used to express the washing of pots, cups and beds. The plural of baptisma is baptisimat and it never used; the plural of baptisimos is baptisimos. The German word Taufe was in the beginning equivalent to farsachen, but when the German nation embraced Christianity, Taufe, was appropriated to the ordinance, and farsachen was used to express common dipping. Even in Luther's time, Taufe was used in the ecclesiastical sense. JAS. EVANS.

You cannot dream yourself into a character; you must hammer and forge one for yourself.

From Aaron Mow.

It is probable that many of the readers of the BROTHERS AT WORK remember of having read a notice given of the debate between F. W. Drennen and W. J. B. Fennimore, at Argos, Ind., April 25th to 29th. The report appeared May 24th and was followed by remarks from Drennen, which appeared June 21st. These reports, in B. AT W., manifested quite a degree of success on the part of the Brethren. Apparently they were written without any regard to the arguments, for the purpose of making some one prominent.

The Adventists also made a report of the debate in the Restitution. This report was written from memory about six weeks after the debate.

I have had the opportunity to read both reports, and in our estimation there is not much Christ in the way they harmonize. I have a synopsis of each speaker's argument, on the first proposition, which I wrote at the time of speaking. Thus I see that neither party has made a very proper statement of the debate, each tried to magnify his side, in the minds of the people.

I do not know who the brother is that reported in B. AT W. of May 24th. [It was written by an outsider.—Ed.] We are sorry that he was afraid to put his name to his article. I know the man well who reported in the Restitution. He put his name to it and tries to circulate it as much as possible. Brethren, if you have a victory, let us see your face and from it flashing the light of truth and righteousness. The debate may have been a success to the Brethren, but if it has, it certainly is lost in darkness.

Now let us look at the results as taken from the Restitution, and then draw a conclusion.

"TRINE IMMERSION PRONOUNCED A FAILURE BY ONE OF ITS MOST ABLE ADVOCATES.

MACY, IND., Aug. 11th, 1881.

Editor Restitution:—

Seeing that the German Baptists (or Tunkers) are disposed to get up the impression that the debate between myself and F. W. Drennen, at Argos, last April, was a great success for them, I beg leave to submit to you for publication, in The Restitution, the following copy of a letter I received from friend Drennen yesterday, which I think will have a tendency to put a quietus to any further efforts of theirs towards claiming a victory

COPY OF ELD. DRENNEN'S LETTER TO ELD FENNIMORE.

"Aug. 6th, 1881.

Dear Brother:—

Since my last combat, I have been investigating the doctrine you advanced, and now must, like an honest man, acknowledge that you are right; and if God spares my life I will preach the same doctrine that you teach. But I want to preach it in the same place where I condemn it.

Now write just as soon as you receive this, and let me hear from you, and make an appointment for you and me, at Argos, and let me know at what time you will be there, and I will meet you, if the Lord will me live to get there.

Signed, T. W. DRENNEN."

"Now, inasmuch as boasting is 'excluded' by the law under which we are, I want to say that if the German Baptists have any more preachers they want converted to the truth, let them bring them out; but after this I would rather they would keep a little quiet about the Drennen debate.

Will say in response to brother Messimore [who reported the debate in the Restitution] that I will meet any man, of the Tunkers, or any other body, on the kingdom. I am not particularly starving for a fight, but I believe the doctrine of the kingdom as we teach it. And I am glad to advocate it in any way that it may be advanced and Christ thereby glorified.

W. J. B. FENNIMORE."

If this be true, where does Drennen appear, where is our Brethren's victory? If it be untrue, why does not Drennen step up and correct it, and why do our Brethren hold still to its deadening effect? Again, if this be true, those who know Drennen best will see in it his portrait, if not, some artist must have seen him.

Our prayer is that Drennen may become manifest, and that the Brethren's doctrine be well established at Argos.—Millwood, Ind., Sept. 6th.

Correction; Beaver Dam.

In the recently-published abstract of the Census returns, Beaver Dam church is credited with opposition to church and government authority. In accordance with statements made me, this report was published, and now in the light of recent developments it does not seem to be justified by the facts. I make this correction cheerfully and without suggestion from any one, because I do not wish to do them, or anybody, an intentional injustice. It would all have been avoided had they promptly returned their schedule properly filled.

Orphan's Home.

Just finished canvassing the Salomony and Eight Miles districts for subscriptions for the Orphan's Home of the Middle District of Indiana. I am happy to give such a favorable report—$686.00 for the Salomony district, of about 250 members, and $239.00 in the Eight Mile church, of about 70 members. A good many poor in both districts. All who were able did well, except two. Hence while we found many good-hearted Marys, we also found a few Marthas. God bless the donors to Orphan's Home.... My dear canvassing brethren, go to work in earnest, and take courage. Take your blessed Savior with you; and while you are traveling from house to house on your way, pray the Lord to open the hearts of the members whom you visit.... I traveled nearly three weeks through the extreme heat and dust, and sometimes got very tired; but, on the whole, it was rather a pleasant visit, having met so many kind-hearted brethren and sisters. May the Lord bless all of them. Brethren, wake up to a sense of your duty and work and pray for more Christian life in the church.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

Huntington, Ind., Sept. 5th, '81.

From Silas Gilbert.—As the Ludlow and Painter Creek churches got their names extensively circulated by having the council of the 24th ult., a word of news from them would be interesting to many, and no more than justice. As our elder withdrew from the general Brotherhood on the 24th, the loyal officials, by council of adjoining elders, paid the members a visit, as it is our custom before we hold our Communion. The result was that 240 were in union with the general Brotherhood, thirty one went out, and thirty one wanted time to investigate and consider; several of these have since expressed a desire to be with the church. Those that were for the resolute they had formed, were invited to a church meeting to attend to their case, which came off the 2nd of September. The church with a unanimous vote, except two, (whom we neutral) said we could not hold them as members. D. P. Saylor, C. G. Lint, and D. Long were present. Our adjoining elders, with many ministers and members from the different churches of the Valley were also present. So you see the church still exists.—Arcanum, Ohio, Sept. 3rd.

From Isaac H. Crist.—On Saturday, Aug. 27th, the members of Wades Branch assembled in council, and divided their territory on the county line between Johnson and Miami counties on the south, on the west between Johnson and Douglas counties, leaving 42 members in the new division. Our territory is large, extending from the south and west lines of Johnson, north and east without limit in this State.... On the 17th of September we have appointed a council meeting for the purpose of more fully organizing into a working body.... We have passed through a drouth of forty-four days; but now are having plenty of rain. Notwithstanding the drouth, the crops are middling good.... We all like our new homes well, and are becoming to be more confirmed in regard to the productiveness of our soil.—Olathe, Kan, Aug. 29th.

From E. Miller.—A few lines from this (The Spring Creek) church may probably be of interest to some.... Health in this vicinity has thus far been good. Weather has been warm and very dry; mercury running often as high as 90° and occasionally to 100°.

had no rain for six weeks, and is now getting to be very dry. Late corn and potatoes are suffering very much. Seeding, also, is delayed, as it is so dry that farmers can scarcely do their plowing. . . . Wheat has not been good; will probably not average over eight to ten bushels to the acre; oats and flax are middling good; fruit, only ordinarily plenty. Some orchards are ordinarily full, while others are almost a failure. All kinds of farm products are bringing a fair price; so after all, we will come out about all right. . . . Our spiritual affairs are not so good; don't have much to boast of, yet after all we are still trying to keep the old ship afloat—are having meetings regular every two weeks. One was held to our little flock at our last quarterly church meeting. May God help her to be a bright and shining light in the church and an honor to God. . . . We intend having a Communion on the 21th of October next, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. All are invited.—Pierceton, Ind., Sept. 14th.

From N. C. Workman.—Spiritually, we are slowly, but steadily, progressing; baptized eleven since the 15th of March last; others will be soon. We hold about twelve meetings for public preaching a month. Two of those meetings are held at the church; the rest are scattered over the country from ten to twenty-five miles. Have council meetings every four weeks, and social meeting every Thursday evening. So you see we are kept pretty busy. . . . In this neighborhood the crops are very light; corn nearly a total failure on account of hot weather and chinch bugs; the latter doing the most damage; wheat, about one-third crop; potatoes and all vegetables almost a total failure. Hot weather, such as was never known before has continued for about two months, and still continues. The outlook for many of our people is gloomy. There are localities in this country where crops of almost every kind are good. In some of these favored spots, corn will go from thirty to fifty bushel per acre, and wheat from fifteen to twenty-five bushels per acre, and plenty of vegetables. We are having dry weather just now, but it is too late to do much damage. Rains have been very local all season; some neighborhoods receive plenty of rain while others close by suffer for rain; yet we have much to be thankful for; we are all enjoying good health, which is a great blessing. Last year we had nothing at all in way of grains or vegetables; we are a little better off this season, for which we should feel thankful. And again, nearly all our members are fully alive in their Master's cause, which is very encouraging. Our meetings are all largely attended, which shows the people are interested. Taking all together, we have great reason to praise God and take courage. Pray for us.—Maple Grove Church, Norton Co., Kan., Sept. 1st.

From John Metzger.—Our country is blessed with good health. The Lord has favored us with a middling fair crop of all kinds, excepting wheat. . . . Wife and I are well. Thank God. . . . Went to Cumberland Aug. 25. The same evening was requested to have meeting in town, as the Brethren never preached at that place before. Had five meetings—four in town and one in the country. The people wanted me to preach on doctrinal points. One came out on the Lord's side, to go with the people of God. Had large congregations every evening, and also good order. People all treated me very kindly. Many said that I should come back again. At the close of the last meeting, a man rose up and said, "The old minister gave us good counsel. Now he is going to leave us. Let us give him farewell." The old and young gave me farewell. Brethren traveling through there, stop off and preach to them.—Cerro Gordo, Ill., Sept. 2.

From S. H. Bashor.—I see several references in B. AT W. to the "Indian church" I spoke of in my letters from California, and the last from "Bro." Funk in California surmises that it may be a fairy tale or a dream. All I know in reference to the matter was what I published at the time, and that I received from Bro. Wolf while with them. If you will look up my "Western Correspondence," you will learn all I said and where I received my information, and of its reliability. I published it as "news coming from over the mountains," but by whom to brother Wolf I cannot tell. He heard it, and it is perhaps true. All Funk need do is to inquire of Eld. Geo. Wolf. You can learn more of brother Wolf than any one else. I have been amused at the intense interest taken in the matter by the B. AT W., and more so because my name was so freely used and I not addressed direct. I suspect the nature of it all.

The B. AT W. has not taken an intense interest in the Indian story. Nor has it the files of the Preacher in which the description was given. The question was asked by a reader of the Work and was answered by another—that is just the extent of the Work's interest. It cannot be dragged into the contention,—will not be made a party. It helps the brother will yield his suspicion, and remember 1 Cor. 13: 5, and Phil. 2: 7. There is too much concern for reputation. Character is the thing to care for.—Ed.]

From James T. Quinlan.—Having the "Tract" case at heart, I write to let you know that there might be a great work done among the emigrants who are daily arriving at Baltimore. If the Brethren's Tract Society will assist me in this matter, I will gladly do the work. I send a few of the English tracts; I have been using the past three years, but these would not answer, as this house does not, to my knowledge, publish any German tracts. I would like to have your opinion about it. This work would, I think, benefit some of our Western churches, as the emigrants generally all go West. . . . I am a member of Pipe Creek congregation; our church being a branch. We meet every four weeks near Woodbury, Baltimore Co., Md, two miles north of Baltimore. I think this emigrant work worthy of notice in your valuable paper. This idea of the Brethren I got from your paper, so whatever good there has been done you can have the credit; we honor give God the glory.—272 West Lombard St., N. W. Cor. Fremont, Baltimore, Md. [I send you 100 tracts free. It is the best we can do. If some liberal hearts will help us in this work and be satisfied in giving God the glory, we shall do our part most cheerfully. German tracts should be printed as well as English, but the one great thing needed is money. The interest in Tract Society is almost used up for 1881, and but few more tracts can be sent free. What shall be done, brethren?—Ed.]

From J. A. Weaver.—I have often felt like giving up the work, but again feel that probably I would not be doing my duty, as I wish to do all the good I can while God has been so merciful in sparing my life and giving me health. So I will now try and fortify myself with the circulators you sent me and try something new. I shall try to do something for brother Hop's family by telling the brethren I am into the missionary field now. I shall want them to give me twenty cents, and I will give them an equivalent, the "History of Danish Mission," also the little folks must be started to heaven in a "Railroad Car." As for this I will try some other tracts.—Monticello, Ind.

From P. Brower.—Our yearly Harvest and Thanksgiving meeting is again past for the year, and it was a meeting that our brethren and sisters seemed to enjoy. Our home ministers were left alone to do the preaching. At such meetings our minds are often cited to the great harvest at the end of the world, when the angels will separate the tares from the wheat. Let us ever be faithful that we will not be classed among the tares. . . . In the afternoon the members met in council. Considerable business was before the meeting. All passed off very pleasant and satisfactorily. The dark clouds that hovered over us so long have all passed away, and the Sun of Righteousness seems to illuminate our hearts that we all seem to work in harmony and love. . . . Our Communion meeting was appointed for Oct. 8th. Hope brethren passing through the West will notice this and stop with us.—South English, Iowa.

From S. M. Duncan.—J. S. Mohler, S. Click, and others came to us and had for meetings and church council. The result was, no additions, but we think if there had been one more meeting, there would have been several additions. Who will come and preach for us? . . . We have Gospel meeting every second and fourth Sunday. . . . We desire brethren to come and look at our country. Think we have a good country. Have had very dry weather; thus making the corn crop very light; but this evening we are having a fine rain. . . . They say the cars will run through here in ninety days. . . . We desire ministering brethren to come and locate here, as the harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few. Pray, therefore, that the Lord of the harvest will send laborers unto his harvest.—Buffalo, Mo., Aug. 29.

Bisner Philip Klengen Smith, a participant in the Mountain Meadow massacre, whose exposure of that atrocity caused the execution of John D. Lee, was found dead in a prospect hole in Sonora, Mexico. He is expected to be killed by the Mormon church, and the circumstances indicate that his prediction was correct.

INTEMPERANCE.

BY H. R. TAYLOR.

LOITER with me, reader, for a little season, and let us converse upon the evils of intemperance and the frailties of man. See you a cloud that appears in the heavens in midsummer's day, promising shelter and shade from the scorching rays of the sun to all that pause beneath its shadow; but soon proceeds from it thunderings and lightnings, sending forth its blasts, and sweeping tide o'er the face of the earth, so terrific in its manner that man and beast flee before it as a fugitive for refuge. Intemperance is like that cloud.

Inviting is the calm and tranquil ocean to the mariner as he launches his boat upon its tide. As far as the eye could reach not a ruffid disturbed the surface of its waters. Like a sea of glass, so calm and placid are all its appearances, giving back from its fair bosom the beauties of the heavens above. The serenity of the ocean and sky makes the voyage a desirable one. His vessel is launched upon its waters; the sails are spread to catch the gentle breeze. But soon the scenery is changed—a hurricane is upon the waters. The billows beat, the creaking of the sails is heard, the boat plunges and quivers. Morning comes; no tidings of that vessel save that she is lost, lost forever. Intemperance is like that ocean; and the youth who frequents the drinking-house over the way, is that vessel.

Behold that serpent as he lies coiled beneath the flower, unobserved till the tender hand of the child is lowered to break the stem, when he deposits his poisonous o'ets in the blood of the innocent child, and his unfortunate victim falls in race no more.

Intemperance is like that serpent; and the youth who stoops to drain the dregs from the maddening bowl is like the child who stoops to pluck the flower.

As the lightning is sent forth in the terrific storm penetrating each object with its power that comes within its reach, so does intemperance force its way into the domestic circle—salutes the husband from his home till midnight hours, and brings with his return a storm of vengeance and fury; and as an unjust and cruel tyrant he makes the once-loved one of his bosom and his own offspring the objects upon which to inflict his brutal treatment. He enters his dwelling not as a father, but as a fiend. Perhaps he has been a youth that was once the joy and pride of all around him; in possession of a noble disposition and a generous heart, but lacked moral courage sufficient to resist the wine in the glass when it was sparkling forth as a soul-destroyer. He had been gaz-d upon with highest anticipations of his future usefulness in life; had been pointed to as an example. But alas! Disappointment and sorrow follow in its stead.

The glow of health and vigor is no longer worn upon the cheek of his wife, but an emaciated form trembles at the sound of his well known footsteps. His children that once flocked around him to receive his caresses, now flee for a hiding-place as he enters his dwelling.

Stop, dear youth! Stop! Think ere you touch the poison to your lips. Perhaps it is your first drink; it is only social, and you are saying within yourself, 'I will never, no never, indulge to excess'; but pause still longer, and reflect, soon, very soon the green hills of sobriety will begin to disappear. Soon the wild flower that bloomed along your pathway will shrink back at your coming. The blasts of poverty are staring you in the face. Poverty in itself is no disgrace, yet it must be admitted that as heat followeth the rising of the sun, alms that cure does poverty follow the footsteps of intemperance. Not much surer is any prophecy of a fulfillment than the one concerning the youth that lingers at the festive board where the maddening bowl is freely drank by all, that a continuance in his course of conduct will bring him to be a pauper, a criminal, and his final dwelling that of a mad-house, prison, or grave.

Man is the noblest of all created, the express image of God, destined for a noble purpose, his body to be presented a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto his Creator; but let him wander in the paths of intemperance, and step by step he will descend from respectability and influence to wretchedness, degradation, and woe. Self-respect having taken its flight, his course is downward and downward, from one vice to another till he reaches the gulf of dark despair.

In a lonely hour of the night as I listen to the peltings of the pitiless storm against my window, my mind is carried yonder to some cold and desolate room; lying perhaps upon a bed of straw, the wife, the children of a dissipated man. Their limbs are shivering from the chill of the winter's blast, their hearts are trembling lest the father returns, delirious with drink, and render their situation by his tortures more wretched than death.

Oh, dear youth, you who are fond of indulging in a social glass, while kind friends are remonstrating, the church sending forth her warnings, fathers and mothers sending up their petitions to God with tears in your behalf, go with me to the darkest caverns upon earth, view the wretched and forlorn condition of mankind in the hovels of intemperance. Take some friend that you knew perhaps when no shade of crime had passed over his manly countenance, view him as he lies unconscious of reproach, so terrible is his situation from the effects of intemperance. Behold his idiotic look; his eyes glaring at one time and bloodshot at another. See his livid lips and decayed teeth, his bloated face; view him as a victim of his own crime. Listen at his heart-rending cries, as you walk from him, echoing far down the street at midnight. Then while you have the right reasoning faculties, while the lamp of life is still burning, ere the night of death overtakes you, resolve in your heart to turn from the path of intemperance and vice, and seek pardon in the wounds of a crucified Redeemer.

BELIEVING AND RECEIVING.

A NOTABLE instance of praying to God, and resolving to take no denial, and prevail when hope seemed gone, was that of the pious wife of a hard drinking man named Martin, in West Riding, Yorkshire, England, who prayed twenty-two years for his reformation and conversion.

When that long time had passed and no answer had come to her prayer, she went one night at midnight, to the "public," where her husband spent much of his time, and found him sitting in the bar room with several other men and the landlady.

"You go home," said Martin, roughly, when he saw his wife enter.

"Wait a little and your husband will go with you," said the landlady.

"Mrs. Tallman," replied the wife, advancing to the table where they were sitting, "I have waited twenty-one years for my husband to go with me, and all that time I have prayed for him."

She steeled her voice, and added:

"I am certain, too, that God will answer my prayers. As sure as he is sitting in your heart, I shall live to see him pass your house and have no inclination to go in."

She turned to go out, and Martin rose to follow her, saying not a word.

That night was the turning point of his life. The long-felt promise to the heart of the pious wife that her husband would "go with her," began to fulfill her patient waiting.

He went to meeting with her, and was melted by a sermon on the words, "Where thou goest, I will go, * * * thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." It went with her to on the road to life, and helped her to lead their children in the narrow way.—Monthly Cabinet.

CRAZED BY EXCESSIVE SMOKING.

THE examination into the cause of the suicide of Dr. Ostrander, of West Pittston, proved that the mental aberration which caused the tragic loss of a busy and useful life was due entirely to excessive smoking, he being in the habit of sitting for hours with his pipe, enjoying the exhilaration of the strongest plug tobacco.

OUR PLEA.

THE BROTHERS AT WORK is an uncompromising advocate of Primitive Christianity in all its sacred purity.

It opposes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice.

And maintains that the average, uneducated, untaught generation of God is the only source of pardon, and that the vicarious sufferings and meritorious works of Christ are the only price of redemption.

That Faith, Repentance and Baptism are conditions of pardon, and means for the remission of sins.

That True Imagination, of depicting the candidate three times face-to-face, is Christian Baptism.

That Feet-Washing, as taught in John 13, is a divine command to be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper to a full end, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening, or at the close of the day; That the Sabotaries of the Holy Kins, or Kins of Charity, is holding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That a Non-Conformity to the world in dress, costume, duty walk, and conversation is essential to true holiness and Christian piety.

It maintains that in public worship, or religious exercises, Christians should appear as directed in 1 Cor. 14: 33.

It also advocates the scriptural duty of anointing the sick with oil in the name of the Lord.

In short it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the Apostles have explained upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discordant modern Charismatism, to point out the grand truth that all men stand on as infallible men.

Single subscriptions $1.50 in advance. Those sending eight months and $12.00, will receive an extra copy free. For each additional issue the agent will send you one cent, which amount will be placed daily and sent as the balance. Laurek, Ill., Sept. 5.

At a council-meeting held in Milleville church, Saturday, 3rd inst., it was decided that hereafter all ballots shall be read to the public congregation. It was also decided to choose a speaker at time of their Love-feast on the 10th, inst. The purpose of the church is, that the votes at that time, shall all be read in public. The whole congregation will then know, who were voted for and how many votes were given for each. This will probably be the first election in the brotherhood held that way.

On Sunday, 4th inst., brethren Moore and McCune were in attendance at Cherry Grove. Bro Moore preached in Laurek in the evening. Subject: "Is It I?" effort of self-denial?—Free Methodist."

"OWE no man anything, but to love one another." Taking the bankrupt law and paying fifty cents on the dollar will hardly do when he makes plenty of money.

WHAT should be done with an Elder who advocates plainness of dress before the A. M., and then permits his members to dress after the fashion of the world, wear jewelry, and sisters to wear hats?

MR. MORRIS has neither salmon nor bill of Labe, and is free from these temptations which do most country towns. This is one reason why parents select this place to educate their sons and daughters.

BLESSED is the man who, if he feels himself injured, will not revile nor seek opportunities of revenge. To be like Christ, to know him--to live in him, is to be long-suffering, kind and forbearing, even though we be abused, maligned, and cast down.

D. M. MILLER and the editor left Leavak the 12th for Minnesota. They began work in Le Sueur county, that State, in December 1879 amidst violent opposition, but the truth has steadily gained, and the Lord's people are being firmly established there.

A SPIRIT of firmness to adhere to the truth of the Gospel--to cling to the whole Word of Life, must not be mistaken for a spirit of intolerance. The pertinacity of the apostles to Christ crucified was regarded as a spirit of folly and ignorance of the fleshly-minded.

A DEFENSIVE line passed over the eastern side of Michigan through the counties of Huron, Tuscola, and Sanilac, cutting a swath from town to thirty miles in width, and about sixty miles in length, producing terrible suffering, and destroying hundreds of lives.

THERE will be an excursion from Leavak to Marion, Iowa, Oct. 6th, to attend the Dry Creek Love-feast. The train will leave at 3 P. M., and it is desired that quite a number should avail themselves of this opportunity to enjoy the holy communion with the members of Leavak county, Iowa.

DR. P. FABRYCE, of Chicago, says: "A belt railroad is to be built around the city to enable hundreds of manufacturers to move outside the limits with their factories. It is also to induce manufacturers in the interior to move to Chicago where they will have better shipping, and vent no higher than in country towns."

IN MEMORIAM.

BY R. C. SNAVELY.

[Lines to brother and sister B. F. Bouser on the death of their child.]

In a lone and quiet chamber

There's an empty little bed,
With no print upon the pillow
Of a loved one's shining head.

Little hands that used to nestle
In the pillows soft and white,
But beneath the sheet that's folded
Lies no little form to-night.

Little eyes that used to sparkle
Full of innocent delight,
Now are closed in death's embraces,
Pleced within the coffin white.

Little ears that used to listen
As you sang an evening song,
Now they hear no more the music:
They have joined a heavenly throng.

With intense interest did you listen
To the music as it fell,
When you heard the song, "White Robes"
Come from lips you loved so well.

Oh! the precious little playthings!
Let us put them out of sight,
Lest our hearts should grieve too sorely
For the little one to-night.

When the evening shadows gather
Lone and sad you sit and weep.
Now there's no need of singing,
For your loved one's gone to sleep.

Ah! we know it is a sorrow—
One which none but parents feel.
We entreat you, look to Jesus;
He can all our sorrows heal.

Yes your Davy is an angel
In a brighter clime above,
Waiting for you, father, mother,
In a home where all is love.

Do not wish him back; no never,
To this world of sin and woe,
For he's resting now with Jesus,
Where the wicked never go.

Oh! then try to meet your darling
In our Father's home above,
There to sing and live forever
With the friends we dearly love.

Lord we implore thy gracious care,
Do thou from evil shun,
And sid them in this trying hour
Now to say, "Thy will be done."

TO BARBARA S. SHIRK.

Dear Sister:—

YOUR letter of—made me glad.
It tastes of Jesus, and smells like Lebanon. Nothing pleased me more than that "you felt it your duty to write me." This is as it should be. Although I am dependent on others for subsistence, I never accept a penny as a matter of charity. I have a small annuity, coined out of the blood and sweat of my sainted parents, which partly covers my wants. But if my pen-ministry is of benefit to any soul, it is only in accordance with Divine arrangement that such souls be impressed with a sense of duty to sustain it. 1 Cor. 9: 11, 14.

You admire my pen preaching because I am not ashamed of the Cross. Ah, sister, are we never ashamed? Does the flesh never get the mastery? Never? It is a rare and grand matter to be so dead with Christ, that we know no man after the flesh, not even ourselves. God must be our other and Better self, or we are unwedded, save to the devil. He that consults not the will of God in all he does is no Christian. The word is our guide, and the Holy Ghost interprets the word. These two make us wise unto salvation. It is a great achievement to "cast down imaginations, and every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God, and bring into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ." 2 Cor. 10: 5. This requires "a weapon which is mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." Nothing but the Cross will answer. We must be crucified with Christ, and rise into His life. Henceforth we have a Christ-mind, a Christ heart—we think and feel with Him. His disposition, aims, and means are ours. The carnal mind is enmity against God. We have at present many in the church who boast themselves to bursting with carnality, writing and speaking great swelling words of empty vehemence in the name of religion, trampling on the blood of Jesus and spurning the cross, while they impetuously vociferate, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men." The eye of prophecy saw them, and the pen of inspiration portrayed them, eighteen hundred years ago. 2 Tim. 3: 1-9. God has them tethered, and they cannot foam out their shame over the barriers of his providence. The Cross is for Christians. To this let us cling. Adultery is the lowest sin of the flesh. Malice is the crowning sin of the spirit. One is brutish; the other, devilish. It is no uncommoa thing for monsters of "spiritual wickedness" to clamor for the blood of those whose sins are as piety compared with their own. A soul who blackens another for the pleasure of doing it, is steeped in the very essence of the Red Dragon. "Father forgive them, for they know not what they do." This speaks of self-crucifixion. To breathe it and to mean it and to live it, is the very essence of the Incarnation. The contrary temper is damnation, inevitable and eternal. No parley with the flesh. The cross makes thorough work. Christ was dead, DEAD. "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." This is the sum of salvation. We glory in the Cross. Do we!

GOD IS LOVE.

BY C. HOPPE.

LESSON I.

"The Son of Man came to seek and save that which was lost."—Luke 19: 10.

IT often happens that God permits the adversary of man to rail his children in order to make them feel their lost condition, and often the Holy Ghost presses the conviction of sins into their conscience so as to make them abhor their sins and cry out, "Miserable man that I am; who shall deliver me from the body of death?" Then is the time to exercise faith and not rely on mere feeling. Then is the time to cling to the promises of Jesus Christ, and not to past experience. Many are in such moments shaken like a fig tree,—they cast down all their unripe fruit, and feel their utter helplessness and their lost condition. They lament this as the most feared event in their lives, but it should be our most useful moment, and something to strengthen our faith. We should not be as a reed carried to and fro by the wind; for to reap the benefit of such grace and to see it, is some of God's hidden manna, some of his strong meat for your Christian manhood, some of heaven's best "cordials," given you by the great Physician. Struggle not against such convictions, but open your eyes, gaze at your own self; hide not, excuse not, but admit and confess the Truth to whoever it is that brings the accusation; and cling to the horn of the altar.

"The Son of man came to seek and save that which was lost;" and your joy, your strength, your usefulness, will be multiplied a thousand times, and your peace be greatly increased, if you come to him. I remember well how often in former years I struggled with Satan when he accused me; but was, so to speak, torn to pieces. But since I got force to admit: "It is all through you, Satan; and what is worse, you had not made me half so black as I am, but Jesus came to seek and save that which was lost; and since you prove to me I am lost, you just prove to me that I am the one Christ came to seek and save." Since that day I overcame the wicked one, and got, to a great extent, free from his railing, for he did not like to come and help me to be strong in faith toward God.

The same holds good towards a frowning and mocking world. Whenever I have admitted my faults and told them: "It is much worse than you think; but Jesus came to seek and save such, hence his salvation is for me;" they will soon depart and keep quiet. But if you try to make excuses, try to defend yourself, you only put oil to their fire. And when the Holy One sits you or puts you in the fire, it will only cause you to make the oven seven times hotter by excuses, and screening from a full self-condemnation. Admit, confess, but tell him, "Dear Savior, I am black; but you have covenanted in baptism to be my husband; only give me a letter of divorce when I cease to believe on thee. I am utterly lost by nature; but you were made sin for me. Yes, you said yourself, you came to seek and save that which was lost; you came to seek and save me, more than all others; for you prove to me by your heavenly convictions that I am the chief of sinners, lost, lost more than any one else.

Dear brethren and sisters, take a glance at him; look on the Lamb that beareth the sins of the world. Look in faith; see it was for you he bled, and died and rose. You will soon hear him say, "Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart with one of thine eyes. Turn away thine eyes from me, for they have overcome me." Solomon's Song. You will hear his high priestly intercessions in your behalf, and realize the full meaning of his promises." If we confess our sins he is faithful and righteous to forgive our sins, and cleanse us from all unrighteousness." 1 John 1: 9.

What a wonderful love God must have to his children, that he will forgive them! Just think of it; his righteousness is your guarantee that he will forgive your sins and cleanse you from all unrighteousness. Up, then and confess! Up, thou, and come with humble boldness to the throne of grace and receive help in time of need! Cease once and forever to hide, to make excuses and to defend yourself; nay, rather "Lay your back, your body, as the ground and as the street, to thine adversaries to pass over," for thus said thy Lord and thy God. "Behold I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again." Isa. 57: 22, 23.

THE GREATNESS AND GOODNESS OF GOD.

BY S. O. LAEKINS.

GOD is great in goodness, and good in greatness. In providence and in the works of nature the power and majesty of God are displayed. "He is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and truth." He said, "Let there be light and there was light." The sun obeys his voice, and the stars of heaven appear at his command. He is Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, the one Jehovah, "the only true God." Heaven is his throne, and the earth is his footstool. He reigneth, a king forever, and is clothed with majesty, from honor and glory. He is able to destroy both body and soul in hell. To his enemies he is "a consuming fire," but showeth mercy unto thousands of them that love him and keep his commandments. He killeth and he maketh alive; he bringeth down the mighty from their seats, and exalteth them of low degree. He maketh poor and he maketh rich. He feedeth the fowls of the air, and clotheth the lilies of the field with more splendor than the glory of Solomon; and so extensive is his providential care that not a sparrow falleth to the ground without his notice. He "raiseth the stormy wind" or "maketh the storm a calm." He causeth it to rain upon the just and upon the unjust. He turneth rivers into a wilderness or dry ground; a fruitful land into barrenness, or a dry desert into a fertile meadow.

The sublime description of the majesty, glory, and infinite greatness of God, in the fortieth chapter of Isaiah, is as much superior to the loftiest descriptions which unassisted poets and historians have given of the Deity, as the God it represents is superior to the idols which they extolled. "Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with the span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales and the hills in a balance? Behold the nations are as a drop in a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance; behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing. All nature before him is as nothing, and they are counted to him less than nothing and vanity." Survey this great and wonderful universe. Behold its oceans, in themselves a watery world; its great subterranean caverns are wonderful to behold, yet, to God its vast and fathomless oceans are so insignificant that he measures their waters in the hollow of his hand. Behold the heavens; the sun, the moon, the stars of light are his handiwork. How brilliant is their glory, how immense their distance; but God meteth out the heavens with a span.

Let us glance at the unsearchable wisdom and infinite knowledge of God. He is the Lord of Hosts, wonderful in counsel. He seeth in secret. He searcheth all hearts and understandeth all the imaginations thereof. The Lord looketh from heaven; he beareth all the children of men; he considereth their works; he beareth his children with peculiar love. "The eyes of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy, to deliver their soul from death; to show himself strong in the behalf of them whose heart is perfect towards him." Should any wish to hide themselves from his all-piercing eye it is impossible, for "in him we live, move, and have our being."

The Psalmist David in speaking of the infinite greatness of God, says: "Whither shall I go from thy spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there; if I make my bed in hell, behold thou art there; if I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea, even thy hand shall lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me; if I say, 'Surely the darkness shall cover me,' even the night shall be light about me. Yea the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

This great and good God whom we adore is holy and amiable in the highest degree. There is none holy as the Lord. He is "glorious in boldness." Just and true are his ways, venerable and lovely in his holiness; he is, if possible, still more lovely in his goodness and mercy.

He is kind to the unthankful and the wicked. He is the Father of the righteous, "and like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him, for he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." He hath proclaimed his name Jehovah God, merciful, long-suffering and abundant in goodness and truth. The fountain of his goodness sends forth many streams. He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come unto him and live.

The world might drink at the ocean of his love, and that ocean would still be full. He giveth grace and glory, and no good thing will be withheld from them that walk uprightly. "As the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy towards them that fear him." When God gave us his Son, he gave us an infinitely greater gift than the world. The Creator is infinitely more glorious than the creature. God's love to his people is from everlasting to everlasting. God can make innumerable worlds by the word of his mouth. He has but one Son—his only Son—whom he spared not, but gave him to the death of the Cross for us all.

Ah, wretched sinner, for having offended him, for he is love. What are all thy friends and their love compared to his love—his love that reaches earth and heaven? Joy is diffused through all the immense regions of heaven. And why? Because God is love. Myriads of happy spirits exult there in holiness and happiness and never fading glory; for God is their friend. He pours the tide of joy through their abodes; he lights up their eternal day. All they have, all they are, all that heaven can furnish and eternal life bestow, all is the gift of God. Sinner, is this God thy God? He is. Then rejoice; for God is love. The Friend of angels is thy friend. Then come unto him, though you be weary and heavy laden under the burden of sin, and he will give rest to your soul. He can take away also all the burden of your griefs. No one comforts like Christ. Come to him hungering and thirsting. He is the bread that came down from heaven; he is the "water of Life." Cry to him, 'Lord give me hidden manna. Give me the water that thou gavest the woman of Samaria at Jacob's well. Yea, pour floods upon me, for I am poor and needy, and thirsty, too.' Come as a condemned criminal to Christ—your advocate with God. Your crimes are many and great; the law pronounces you accursed, but Jesus will undertake your case. He is now pleading for you; hear him crying, "Father, spare him, I died for him."

He is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother. To be with him and like him is heaven. Obey him in all things. Honor, love, and serve him even unto death. Let your heart go out after him; let your hands work for him; let your feet walk in his paths. Regard none of his commands as insignificant and grievous. He is wisdom, righteousness, and redemption. He is more; yea his word is life. His smile is joy.

Friendly reader, before we part, (we may never have the opportunity again. God only knows) let me urge you to seek the Lord while he may be found. You have a soul worth millions of worlds. It needs salvation because it is lost. If you are ever saved, you must be willing to be saved. God will not force you, but he invites and earnestly entreats you to come to him. Be assured that the last sentence will be passed upon you according as your works in this life are good or bad. There is a glorious heaven and a dreadful hell, in one of which the judgment of God will soon fix your soul, there to abide forever. Consider that the glories of heaven are worth all your pains and care; that hell is so terrible as to make you double your efforts to escape it. All the riches, honors and pleasures of earth are poor gain to him who must soon lie down in sorrow and dwell in everlasting burnings. Prepare to meet thy God.

ONLY A MODEST DRESS.

BY JOHN HARBESBARGER.

AS there has been so much so much discussion and trouble in the church about this "dress question," I feel it my duty to raise my pen to vindicate the truths connected with it, to make a final disposition of it and have it settled once for all and forever. All who claim membership with the Brethren, agree that our dress for both male and female should be plain and modest. Upon this there is a unity, and for its authority is claimed a "thus saith the Lord," which can never be invalidated or effaced. We call particular attention to this fact: that we are seemingly all united, and do agree upon a restriction of dress, requiring plainness and modesty, which is backed up by a "thus saith the Lord." At this point all agree to drive and rivet a pin which cannot be drawn. (Do not forget this). The term plain, when defined, signifies being void of extraneous beauty or ornament, something homely. The term moderation or modesty, signifies being restrained within due limits of propriety in the absence of arrogance and presumption, not making show and parade, not glaring or showing, unassuming, etc. Now remember in this particular there is no reference to our general character and deportment, but refers to dress only. Then we notice that this plain and modest dress shall be void of extraneous, outside beauty, or ornament; and it is to be restrained within the limits of propriety in the absence of arrogance. Thus we get a restraint to the flesh in the absence of pride, which embraces all the affections and lusts of the flesh. And furthermore, this dress is to be of such a character as not to make a show or parade. Parade signifies a pompous exhibition, and ostentatious pride, which originated with the devil, and has no place in the church of God.

In connection with this we quote the following language from Peter: "As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts in your ignorance." 1 Pet. 1: 14. Here Peter commands us not to fashion according to former lusts in ignorance; not after the dictations of the adversary through the flesh, but just to the reverse, which is according to the above specified form of plainness and modesty.

Fashion signifies the prevailing mode or style, especially of dress. "Be not conformed to this world," etc. Rom. 12: 1. Conform signifies to shape in accordance with; to make like; to bring into harmony or agreement with. This also includes the dress and fashion spoken of by Peter, which Paul positively affirms shall not be after the form of the world, but that we should be transformed, which signifies to change the form and fashion which was after the world in our ignorance, and bring into harmony or agreement with the adorning of modest apparel as taught by the apostle to Timothy. Hence we learn that modest apparel includes everything that is required by the church on the dress question. She requires just what Paul does in reference to dress; that is, to restrain all the affections and lusts in the absence of arrogance and presumption, not glaring, not for show, or parade. This includes and condemns every style gotten up by the world. Hence the Christian must of necessity, as an evidence of Scriptural modesty, conform to a style that will exclude all and every item above named belonging to the world and is condemned in the Gospel. And as I stated before upon this point, "we all agree to stick and rivet the pin," there is no going back on that. Though some one will say that this plain modest dress will not exclude all of this arrogance, show and pomp, that is true. Faith which worketh by love and purifieth the heart only can do that; yet transformation, as above prescribed, is the only evidence of an exclusion of all this pride and arrogance from the heart, and there can be no sound in the faith Christian without it, be assured of that, no more than they can be partakers at the gambling table and dancing hall, the horse-race, or any other such gratifications of the flesh; and no one who is sound in the faith retaining the characteristics of a Christian will oppose the church or Annual Meeting while endeavoring to fix a plan to bring both lay members and officials to conform more strictly to plainness and the modest dress required by the Gospel and the church. There is a great deal said about law, and that Annual Meeting is not authorized to make laws. Now let us in a brief way impartially investigate that matter. Law is generic, and in the following connection denotes whatever is commanded by one who has a right to demand obedience. A statute law is a particular law. Common law is a rule of action which derives its authority from long usage, etc. Regulation law is a limited, and often temporary, law intended to secure some particular end or object. The church or Annual Meeting does not make statute laws, edicts, or decrees, but makes regulation laws or union laws by which to regulate its members and transact all the business of the church; and a part of its business is to fix some plan to bring every individual member, as well as every local congregation, to the one and same modest style of dress as advocated in this article, and acceded to by all parties, and strictly to obey the Gospel in all things.

REASON TOGETHER.

BY EMMA WATSON.

SISTER F. E. Teague's article,—"In Union There Is Strength"—sets forth my sentiments so precise that I cannot let it pass in silence. O dear brethren and sisters, would it not be better to clasp hands and re-unite our efforts in bringing peace and union in the church? Do you not think we can accomplish more for the Lord in this way than by dividing? O may all of our dear brethren who think of with drawing from the Brotherhood, stop and reflect what will become of such a movement; it will not only divide districts, but it will come closer home; it will be father against mother, children against parents, and God only knows where it will end.

There is an old saying, and it seems a true one, "United we stand, divided we fall." "Come, let us reason together," says the apostle, and do not let us fall out by the way. Yes, indeed, we need the assistance of all the Brethren to help us fight the enemy. We dare not stop to quarrel and wrangle; it will only be giving Satan a chance to gain ground among us. While we have Brethren who are advocating the sister's "plain" hat, and trying to convert the church to the world, let such be dealt with according to the Gospel, and the church will be relieved of a great deal of trouble, for we do not want a plain hat or any other kind of hat. When we belonged to the world we dressed and acted like the world; but Jesus chose us out of the world, and we do not want to go back and get entangled therein. We speak from experience; we know what a slow fashion makes of us. She shows no mercy whatever. Then God forbid that any who have taken the name of Jesus should ever fall in her power again.

LIFE A MIGHTY RIVER.

LIFE bears us on like the current of a mighty river. Our boat at first glides down the narrow channel through the playful murrings of the little brook and the windings of its happy borders. The trees shed their blossoms over our young heads; the flowers on the brink seem to offer themselves to our hands. We are happy in hope, and we grasp eagerly at the beauties around us, but the stream hurries us on, and still our hands are empty.

Our course in youth is along a wider and deeper flood, and amid objects more striking and magnificent. We are animated by the moving picture of enjoyment and industry which passes before us; we are cited by some short-lived success, or depressed and made miserable by some equally short-lived disappointment. But our energy and our independence are both in vain. The stream bears us on, our joys and our griefs are alike left behind us. We may be ship-wrecked, but we cannot anchor. Our voyage may be hastened, but it cannot be delayed; whether rough or smooth, the river hastens toward its home till the roaring of the ocean is in our ears and the tossing of the waves is beneath our keel, and the land lessens from our eyes and the floods are lifted up around us, and we take our last leave of the earth and its inhabitants, and of our further voyage there is no witness but the Infinite and Eternal.

And do we still take so much anxious thought for further days when the days which have gone by have so strangely and so uniformly deceived us? Can we still set our hearts on the creatures of God when we find by sad experience that the Creator only is permanent? Or shall we not rather lay aside every weight and every sin which doth so easily beset us, and think ourselves henceforth as way-faring persons only, who have no abiding inheritance?

POWER OF A HUSBAND.

BY SUE L. THOMPSON.

EVERY relative duty should be enforced by evangelical example. Then we think home could be made pleasant without all the responsibility being on the wife.

We think a husband has a great power to make home happy or unhappy. Paul says, husbands love your wives, as Christ loved the church and gave himself for it. Thus ought men to love their wives, to be tender and kind and provide for their comfort. As he is the head of the family, he ought to go ahead and set a good example.

If these roles were followed we think there would be many more pleasant wives. The woman needs comfort; she has her manifold infirmities besides the household cares and duties, and often, with a fretful baby, she spends many a sleepless night.

If a man would be thought superior in knowledge or wisdom, let him show it by not taking offence at trifles, and by giving up some of his humors and inclinations to oblige his wife, and by not irritating her to get angry at him. There are in all cases manifold defects in the present state of human nature, and often offences are committed; yet this does not alter our duty to each other.

If husbands will love their wives as Christ loved the church, and be as kind as the Gospel requires; then if the wife is not pleasant and will not reverence her husband, we think she must be a tyrant.

THE MERCIES AND BLESSINGS OF GOD.

BY LEWIS A. EDWARDS.

THE world has no store of bread laid up for years to come. Let the producing power of God, which works in all the natural world, suspend its powers for a single year. Let Summer and Winter pass, and no seed sprout, no buds burst, no verdure clothe the fields, no flowers adorn the plants, no fruit hang pendulous on the boughs, and the larger portion of the human family must perish. One single unfruitful year would consign most of our race to a lingering and painful death. And how strange it is to the natural eye that this event, in the course of time, should never occur. There have been local famines; but always, in some parts of the world, there has been bread enough and to spare.

If Canaan suffers want, Egypt has corn in store laid up for her. If India feels the pressure of need, Europe has provisions to supply her; but let these dearths become universal and the history of our race would soon be told.

How wonderful that through all the years of sin and rebellion the bountiful hand of God has still poured its gifts upon a lost world, still sendeth his rain on the just and unjust; still bestows his hand in bounty to those who despise his claims and neglect his messages of love through all the years with unchanging tenderness and fidelity he keeps that promise made to our race when they entered upon the possession of the world as it emerged from the waters of the deluge: "While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest and the changes of the seasons shall not cease."

The world may not believe in God; hot they must accept of His provisions; they may blasphemize His name, but they must eat of the bread His hand bestows; they may despise the riches of His goodness and forbearance and long suffering, yet every hour they are pensioned on His bounty, they are creatures of His care. Let their hearts glow with thankfulness as his hand bestows each good and perfect gift, and let them remember that while God leaves not himself without a witness in that He does good and gives us the things we necessarily see in life, filling our hearts with gladness. Yet it is for us, His children, who know more of his love than nature reveals, to tell to the world the story of His love and turn them from mortal vanities to serve the living God, and to wait for his Son from heaven. This is the problem of the Christian life, to be in the world, but not of it—to walk among men who know not Christ in the round of daily duties and yet be steadily moving heavenward; to be conscious of the beauties of our earthly home and its wealth of material enjoyments; to know the moving of appetite and the tender enticements of ease, and yet be dead to them and alive to Christ. Christianity wrought wonderful changes and improvements in society; it has extended knowledge, cherished education and founded an exalted code of laws and manners, elevating human nature until all must admit that man is elevated by its teachings. The world has conformed to Christianity in so many different directions, it is an active element in civilization that yields unbounded influence, it demands toleration by law and protection from all who are willing to be governed by grace.

NO CROSS, NO CROWN.

BY LEVI LONGANECKER.

AS the humble follower of Christ wends his way through this life, he meets with a great many crosses which are burdensome to his soul; but thanks be to God! He has promised that "To him that overcometh I will give a crown of life."

When we consider the meaning of the word "cross," we must bear in mind that it is something that is burdensome. We are commanded by our Lord that "If any man will come unto me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." Thus we find that it is a cross to our carnal nature to follow Christ; for we learn by experience that the carnal mind craves after the things of this world and is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be. We learn from the above passage that each one is to take up his own cross and not another's cross; showing us that it is an individual cross, and that we are not merely to take up the cross, but to take it up daily. By this we understand that each one of us has a daily cross to bear. We are to take heed to the above command; for no one will deny that "Where there is no cross there is no crown." In looking over the Christian world, we find some denunciations setting down this command as non-essential, and others, that the command is of no consequence, thinking it would be too great a cross to obey them, that the precept truly says:

But alas, when they are hearing
That we are to be cross-bearing
If we would disciples be
Oh how few do then agree.

Yes indeed, but few consent to take upon themselves the whole doctrine of the cross. The many, and would to God that they were not by far the greater number of so-called Christian professors, take upon them only so much of the doctrine of Christ as may be agreeable to themselves, i. e., to their carnal and the rest—the cross—thru lay aside. Yet they think because they have the main piece, as if they had taken the cross of Christ upon themselves, and do not see, or will not see that they are wanting that part precisely, which makes the cross, and oh, what a loss! for no doubt the saying will remain true, "No cross no crown."

RESPONSIBILITY SOMEWHERE.

BY A LOVER OF CONSISTENCY.

ONCE upon a time, while assisting the brethren in conducting a protracted meeting in a certain locality, an intelligent and interesting young lady (a brother's daughter) became concerned in regard to her eternal welfare. In conversation with her, we urged her to surmount all hindering obstacles and come to Christ; but the answer was, "There is ———, the resident minister, I have heard him preach with all his might, against the pride of life, fashions, lucre of the fish, etc., while he is a perfect slave to tobacco, and he scarcely closed his sermon until he had his mouth filled with the vile stuff. I think he is very inconsistent, and that his is just one of the very worst fashions there is."

The thought has been impressed on my mind, and I send it forth for the consideration of other minds. Somebody is responsible in this, as well as numerous other cases, not only in regard to the use of the "weed," but also other inconsistencies. O! Brethren let us be careful that we do not stand in the way of sinners. Better make great sacrifices. God forbid that through those habits and inconsistencies of ours we should destroy "them for whom Christ died;" rather let your "fight so shine that others may be constrained, with us, to glorify our Father in heaven."

How strongly a man loves is not to be measured by the flame of the impulse that he has at any hour or at any moment. It is what he is, what he is willing to do and suffer for another that measures how much he loves. The mere outgushing of emotion is one test, but not a sufficient one. The living one's life—not the laying it down, but the using it for the object loved—is the highest test possible.

A DOLLAR wrongfully obtained, is upon the soul, as smouldering fire, which remembrance fans to a flame.

ONE THING NEEDFUL.

AND Jesus answered and said unto her, Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things; but one thing is needful, and Mary hath chosen that good part which shall not be taken away from her (Luke 10: 41, 42). Our adorable Savior, whose gracious employment it was to go about doing good, was pleased, in one of his journeys, to call at a friend's house. In Bethany, there dwelt in one happy home, Lazarus and his sisters, Martha and Mary, all pious persons and humble disciples of the blessed Jesus. Martha was probably the house-keeper, for it is said (verse 38) that she received him into her house.

He, who was the Maker of all, and the Lord of all, was, for our sakes, so poor that He had not a place where to lay his head, no house of his own; but here and there, a pious person was found, who thought it the highest honor to entertain Him. Let me say here, dear brethren and sisters, that Jesus, in a spiritual sense, still stands at the door of our house, of our hearts, and knocks for admittance. Oh, that we may open our hearts and most cordially receive the Heavenly Guest. No sooner was He seated than He began to instruct the family in divine things. Thus should we thankfully embrace every fit opportunity of discoursing on subjects which belong to our peace. Let religion have a place in the parlors as well as in the church.

Mary sat at Jesus' feet and heard his word, thus a humble heart and humble posture, will become the disciples of Christ when they hear His Word. When Christ began his discourse, Martha, as well as Mary, was attentive; for it is said, she had a sister who also sat at His feet; but it appears that Martha was of an active turn, and left the room to superintend the business of the kitchen. She denied herself the pleasure of continuing to regard his charming discourse, for the purpose of making an abundant preparation for our Lord—a preparation, it should seem, far greater than was necessary, and finding this care and labor too much for her strength, she returns to the room to complain of her sister. She came to Jesus and said, "Lord dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? bid her therefore that she help me." The hospitality and generosity of Martha in wishing to entertain her guest in a liberal manner is commendable to all; but still we cannot help observing something that is not right. She had certainly lost her temper and was improperly angry with her sister; but more than that, she imputed a degree of censure on our Lord himself as if He were to blame for detaining her. "Dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone?" She thought it wrong that her sister should indulge her ease while she was so hard at work; and also censured the Lord as if he were the cause of it; but while we detect this infirmity of Martha, let us correct the same fault in ourselves.

We are too apt to lose our composure in a hurry of worldly business, too apt to find fault with our fellow-Christians, when they do not come up to our standard, and what is worse, to murmur at cross providences and quarrel with heaven itself; for this is sometimes the language of our dissatisfaction, "Lord dost thou not care" that I am so ill, so perplexed, so persecuted, so distressed, so helpless? O let us beware of this temper and we shall be angry with ourselves, rather than with Martha.

As this question was proposed to our Lord himself, he is pleased to answer it. Mary who was blamed remains silent, she leaves her defense to an able advocate. Jesus kindly passes over the censure which was aimed at himself; but fully vindicates Mary's conduct, while he tenderly reproves Martha for her extreme anxiety. "Martha, Martha, thou art careful and troubled about many things." Our Lord was, no doubt, pleased with her good intentions to entertain Him; but he was not pleased at her making a great feast, as if he took delight in a sumptuous table. He did not covet delicacies, nor is He pleased with the luxury of his professional people, nor with the great expense and great trouble which a splendid entertainment requires. He would have been more satisfied with seeing Martha sitting with Mary to hear His instructions. He was better pleased to see Mary in the chapel than Martha in the kitchen. That which most displeased Him was, that her attention to many things obliged her, for the present, to neglect the one thing—the great thing that he came to her house for, namely, to teach and instruct the family, and this was the "one thing" to which Mary wisely confined her attention.

Therefore we learn from the language of the Savior that he condemns the over-anxious and too much regarding many worldly things. The cares of the world greatly obstruct the religious care of the soul. We find that the care of the soul is the one thing needful which the Savior commanded to Martha. The care of the soul includes the diligent use of all the means which God has appointed for its salvation, the first of which is a due regard to the Word of God; thus Mary proved her care, so must we.

It is true, we have not now the bodily presence of the Great Teacher, yet we have His Word. We have the Gospel which He ordered to be preached to all nations, and which He promised to sanction with His spiritual presence to the end of the world. This Gospel is able to make us wise unto salvation, and it is the power of God to all that believe.

Again, we readily admit that worldly cares, in their proper places and proportions, are unavoidably, are absolutely necessary. We have bodies as well as souls; these must be provided for; and to make this provision, care and labor are necessary. Religion was never designed to make us idle. St. Paul says, that if any man will not work, he shall not eat. Again, if any provide not for his own (his own relations), and especially for those of his own house (his family), he hath denied his faith and is worse than an infidel. 1 Tim. 5: 8.

It is not, therefore, against the necessary cares attached to our several stations in life that we speak; but those cares which hinder and obstruct the superior care of the soul, which is the one thing needful. Let us remember that it was the many cares of this world that excluded the numerous persons invited to the gospel feast (Luke 14: 16); they made many excuses, and all their excuses were their care and trouble about many things, to the neglect of the one thing needful. Dear brethren and sisters, may we, like Mary, sit at the feet of Jesus and receive in faith His divine instructions. This is the good part which we never shall lose.

We look abroad, into the vain and wicked world, with an aching heart, to see so few who accord religion the one thing needful; it is counted the one thing needless—the only thing neglected and despised by not a few.

Remember the "one thing needful" is a weighty sentence, uttered by the lips of eternal wisdom, and that the one thing is religion, or the care of the soul. "The one thing needful"—a saying worthy to be written in letters of gold, a saying worthy to be affixed in every church, in every house, in every heart. May the finger of God inscribe it on our inmost souls.

A FRIEND WHO WOULD NOT WAIT.

A DISSIPATED young man was converted at one of Mr. Moody's meetings and subsequently joined Dr. Tyng's church in New York. Some time afterward he met in the city one of his former associates, who was overjoyed to see him, and asked him to celebrate their meeting with a drink in one of the neighboring bar-rooms. But the young Christian refused, saying:—

"I have a friend with me."

"I don't see any one with you."

"You can't see Him, but He is here."

"Bring him in with you."

"No, no" was the stout answer. "My friend is Jesus Christ, and if I go in with you, He'll not wait."

How many temptations would a Christian be saved from if he only considered whether Jesus would go to certain places which are sometimes considered innocent and harmless! (N)

JUDGMENT OF OTHERS.

DON'T judge a man by the clothes he wears. God made one and the tailor the other.

DON'T judge him by his family connections for Cain belonged to a very good family.

DON'T judge a man by his failure in life, for many a man fails because he is too honest to succeed.

DON'T judge a man by his speech, for the parrot talks, but the tongue is but an instrument of sound.

DON'T judge a man by the house he lives in, for the lizard and the rat often inhabit the grandest structures.

LIFE is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy. Self-command is the main elegance.

God pardons like a mother, who kisses the offences into everlasting forgiveness.

EDITORIAL.

AS was stated in last issue, we are left in charge of the BRETHREN AT WORK this week, while Bro. Esheleman has gone on a mission of love. On taking a survey of our field of labor we found the Sanctum neat, clean and cozy—a place for everything and everything in its place, skilfully arranged by female hands. In the compositors' room, which is large, airy and well lighted, we found everything systematically arranged, and one showing by brother Plate the foreman, disclosed to us the whole arrangement. We found a book already well filled for each department of the paper, which left us but little to add beside the current news as it came in. On some hooks we found enough for three or four papers, hence we would say to the contributors, do not think it amiss if your articles do not appear this week. All must take their turn. Now, dear readers, will you exercise charity towards us in the editing of this number. With the labor of the college resting upon us in addition to special duties that have come at this time, we will do the best we can and trust to your charity.

TRIP NOTES.

THE Love-feast in the Milledgeville church on the 10th, was joyous to those who participated in the holy ordinances. Bro. J. H., and Wm. Moore, S. J. Harrison, David Rowland, D. P. Paterbaugh and the writer assisted in the ministry. The Brethren of Rock Creek, the church joining the Milledgeville church, had their communion at the same time. On this account the number present was not so great; still the Lord was present to bless and aid in the work.

On the next day after services an election was held for a minister. The church at a council meeting previously agreed that those who wished to vote by written ballot could do so, and that these ballots should be read and counted before the church. In accordance with this decision, each member cast his vote, those who did not desire to vote by written ballot, voted à la voce, but the three-fourths voted by ballot.

The à la voce votes were first counted, and then one of the elders read the ballots before the church only, while the clerks kept record. Many in the congregation also kept a record. Bro. Z. T. Livergood received forty-five votes out of a total of eighty-two, thus having a majority over all. A good feeling seemed to pervade the assembly, and so far as we could learn all were satisfied with the choice. The work of choosing officers is the work of the church, and it is certainly not wrong for the church to know what she does, nor wrong to say how it shall be done. It is argued that there is danger of spoiling brethren by an open count. Certainly there is danger; for where is there not danger? It is dangerous to ride on the car—dangerous to walk the streets, still we walk and ride all the same. Not until some are spoiled will it be necessary to apply a remedy. We have for sometime regarded an open count as beneficial in the church.

Bro. Livengood is young and willing to work in the Master's vineyard; and we wish him many blessings in his ministerial labors. Bro. Moore, in a very impressive manner, gave him the charge, and the church, with tears and expressions of tenderness, received him with the kiss of charity and the right hand of fellowship.

In the afternoon quite a number of us attended services in the Park in Lanark, and listened to a sermon by Mrs. Burgstresser. It was replete with practical thought. In the evening had the pleasure of meeting with the members of the Lanark church. Here brother Enoch Eby joined the company, but owing to sore throat could not address the audience. This was quite a disappointment, especially to the writer. Leave at 3 P. M., to day for Minnesota.

Lanark, Sept. 21.

THOSE who sit in the darkness of infidelity continually, can not be teachers for those who want to find their way out from the darkness and shadows of this life, to light and liberty in Christ Jesus. Teaching and example must go together before any success can be had. It is a shame for a man to attempt to teach what he does not practice.

D. B. RAY'S MUTENESS.

IT is now several months since the "Stein and Ray Debate" has been before the public in book form, and thus far Elder Ray, to whom a copy was sent soon after its receipt from the publishers, has not offered a word concerning the work. While it was going through the press, he protested against its publication. But the Debate was published, notwithstanding; and the Elder was requested to assist in its sale, but thus far he has been as mute as a stone? Why this refusal to assist in the sale of one of the "most important debates ever held" by him? Will he rise and explain? He once regarded "Tankrism as a local disease to be treated locally;" but it has proved too much for the Elder in his combat with Bro. Stein. For the sake of his own honor, let him come out and either confess that he has been overwhelmingly defeated in his "Tanker" discussion, or assist in spreading the debate in its present form. Does he not want his Brethren to possess his "crushing arguments" against "Tankerism"? Of it he once said, "It is among the most important debates ever held." Baptist Battle Flag, Vol. 4, No. 49. Does the Elder still believe this?

GO SOMEWHERE.

DURING the last few months J. W. Harrison, a young man from Indiana, has created considerable sensation in parts of Indiana and Illinois, by his vehemence and appeals to the feelings of his audiences. Recently he preached in the Trinity M. E. church, Chicago. Of his manner it is said:

No pulpit would have been roomy enough to have furnished space for the varied gestures, to hold in the ever-moving feet of the nervous, over-striding, wild and that, of the revival whose feet seemed to quicken in their motions, as did his words. The platform seemed much too little for him, for frequently he would step down the steps leading to the body of the church, as if to get near to the sinners whom he was endeavoring to save, and plead with them hand in hand.

What jumping and running on the pulpit has to do in the salvation of sinners is not clear, since the Gospel does not require ministers thus to appear before the people. The principles of Christianity are addressed to the will, understanding, judgment and affection of man. To appeal to the feelings alone, is not scriptural and cannot result in true conversion.

His text was 'And him that cometh to me, I will in no wise cast out.' James 6: 37. A few hurried comments, and then he pictured a young man who wanted to join a church—wanted to "go somewhere." The young man was "a Methodist through and through"—was converted in that church." He liked the Baptist, but there was too much water there; he liked the Presbyterians but there was too much for ordination; he hired the Episcopalian, but these had too much prayer book, so he went closer and closer to the Methodist church, still he wanted to go somewhere, so the "boy preacher," J. W. Harrison said to him:

I will tell you where to join. At the end of the road of every denomination, at the closing of the path of every sect I hear a voice as sweet as heaven's—It is the voice of Christ! It says, "I am the way! I am the way! I am the way! Join somewhere. Go some way. He will lead you. Get religion. Get virtue. Get your soul full of the love of God, and you will go somewhere.

How different from Calvin! An apostle gave no such instruction. The Gospel is as silent as the grave on "the road of every denomination." As well look for beans, and pears, and apples and grapes from a vine, as to look for denominational roads in the Gospel of Jesus Christ. "Join somewhere," says Harrison, while Calvin says, "Come to me." "Join somewhere," screams the "boy preacher," while the apostles declare to the multitude, "Repent and be baptized every one of you, for the remission of sins, in the name of Jesus Christ." "Go some way," says this modern, excitable revivalist, while the Gospel points to one way and one only. Is it any wonder true vital piety is running at so low an ebb? Preachers jump and scream and say "Go somewhere," "Get religion," "Get virtue," and never so much as tell the people how or where, as did the apostles.

The preacher then told of a Christian woman, of Boston, who told him to get down and pray. They had not prayed five minutes before, said the preacher, "I was shouting happy, and going down stairs two steps at a time."

Shouting happy and jumping down steps! Are we living in a civilized country? How long will the people take notice for Christianity? When will they open their eyes and look into the Scriptures? Where do we read that, John prayed, shouting happy, then went "down stairs two steps at a time?" Do not read it that way in the Book of God. When the multitude who were convicted of sin asked what to do to be saved, what did Peter do? Did he say "pray and shout until you get happy, then go down stairs two steps at a time?" No wonder millions are deluded, when preachers tell the people that the result of prayer is shouting and going down stairs two steps at a time. Soon they will be tumbling down stairs, cutting themselves with knives and lances, and the people will believe it is Christianity—all because they do not read the Word of God and look into Christianity for themselves. But we will hear this young man once more:

O, pray that some hoarse hero may stop their hands and go happy. It is a strange thing that sometimes, when God is working in our hearts, we will do very strange things.

A little while ago he had people getting happy by prayer and shouting so that they ran down stairs, but now he urges them to "clap their hands and get happy." Yes indeed, Mr.

Harrison, you "do very strange things," but please excuse some of the people if they refuse to believe that it is the work of God. The apostles, the Lord, the Holy Spirit, the Bible, the church of Christ never taught justification, sanctification, eternal happiness by that means. Let the people look to their salvation by God's ways.

GIVE US THE REASON.

What is the reason you Dunkard people do not attend the State Union Sabbath school Convention of our State at Hastings?
Canton, N.H.

THOSE Dunkard people are a "peculiar nation." This is what Peter said of the "elect according to the foreknowledge of God the Father, through the sanctification of the Spirit, unto obedience and sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ." Straying away from Conventions that endorse celebrations, festivals, and sections, is one of the peculiarities of the Dunkards; hence in this respect they resemble the first Christians.

2. Sunday-school work is a work of the church; and the church regards herself abundantly able to do her work without going into another organization. There is not one example of the primitive church meeting with the Pharisees, Sadducees and Pharisees to consult as to the best methods of bringing up their children in the Lord's way. The church is the school-master of the sinner; and sinners are not judges of the saints.

3. It is pretty evident that those schools that are not under the control and influence of conventions are doing the best work. There is a great deal of noise about Sunday-school work. Less saying and more doing will effect better results. We do not say that conventions are evil, but they are not the great and mighty things which some would have us believe. A man can get to heaven and enjoy its full glory without attending a Sunday-school Convention. It does not enter into evangelistic faith. It is not commended of the Lord. It can never rise as high as the church. It was born of men. It must remain a child of man. It can never be lifted up to the dignified position of the "assembly of the first born." It is a mere matter of opinion, and cannot be included in the items of faith.

4. The Dunkards remain away because there is so much display and vanity there. It grieves their hearts to see professors trimmed, slicked, flounced and frizzed like the world and ever exelling them. With such the Dunkards can not labor in seeming sanction. To go there and work with them is in a measure endorsing them as Christian workers; and we know a Christian cannot adorn his body with so much show and folly and please God. Throw away your worldliness—your vanity—your wooden singing and non-essential humdrum—your haughty looks and vain manners and then we shall consider the propriety of meeting you in holy work.

FUNERAL PREACHING.

Will the BROTHERS AT WORK, or some of its readers, be kind enough to give through its columns the origin of funeral preaching? For many years I looked upon it as a Christian obligation; but of late, after a close examination of the Scriptures and of ancient history, I changed my position. I am now convinced from history, that it originated with the Pagans, and was borrowed by the Roman Catholic hierarchy sitting upon many waters. Search the Scriptures; for in them ye may think that you can find it. They satisfy me that it is not of Christ, nor of the apostles. C.

HERE is no Divine Scripture, so far as we know, favoring preaching at funerals. In fact, circumstances and Law seem to be against it. By the Law, every person who touched a dead person or came into the apartment where the dead lay, was declared unclean a whole week, and thus cut off from sacred privileges, as well as from friends and neighbors. It is not probable under these restrictions that people would assemble in the presence of the dead to hear preaching. At this day, however, by custom, it has become quite general; the people believing it a mark of respect for the dead, and others also regarding it a suitable occasion to persuade the people to prepare for death.

SOME one is circulating a letter sheet entitled, "Condition and Practice of the Church of the German Baptist Brethren; as it was, and as it now is." It is singular that men who claim to be right and seem so desirous of setting the erring in order, fail to put their names to their tracts. It would be far better for truth and inspire more confidence if those nameless, and might with truth add, destructive, tracts had been tied to a millstone and cast into the sea. The tract says:

Whoever lives some years hereafter, will see our church to compete with any of the other fashionable churches. Though our church may retain and keep some of the external church ordinances, but what does this avail, if the church is out of order in many other more momentous matters?

We do not think "our church" will compete with the other fashionable churches in the sense the writer of the above item conveys. That the church must maintain its order and simplicity if it would succeed in upholding primitive Christianity, is evident; and this we think the church will do. Because there are some changes occasionally in order to get nearer the truth, is no evidence of worldliness. Nor is it just to judge the whole church by a few local churches which may be running recklessly upon the breakers. Let us cling to Jesus, and trust the Lord to lead in the way of wisdom.

A good character shines by its own light.

A SAFE COURSE

SOME brethren and sisters seem perplexed to know how near they may approach the world in their appearance and actions, and yet be a "separate people" and "not conformed to this world." They seem to be very much in the same predicament of a certain gentleman who had to pass over a road leading along a dangerous precipice, and who had advertised for a coachman. In due time three applicants presented themselves for the position. The first claimed that he could drive along the precipice within a foot of the edge and be safe. The second, to outdo his competitor, stated he could drive within an inch of the edge with safety. The third seeing no prospect for himself took his hat and was about to leave when the gentleman called him back and said: "How near could you drive along the edge of the abyss with safety?" The coachman replied, "I would not drive near the edge at all, I would keep to the other side of the road." He got the position. We greatly fear some members on the road to heaven are traveling too near the edge of the precipice, almost with an inch of it and we greatly fear they will "go over," while others are taking a safe course and are keeping to the other side. Many will say "I will be careful, I am sure I will not go too far." Thousands who died drunkards said the same thing when they were moderate drinkers. Total abstinence is the only safe course for certain persons, and tampering with the fashionable follies of this world is as dangerous for some as tampering with the wine cup is for others. Keeping to the other side of the road is the safe course.

JAMES EVANS' ITEMS.

—The editor of the Toledo Blade who is now in London, informs us that the minds of the lower classes are utterly impenetrable to spiritual ideas. Their highest ideas of heaven or happiness is plenty of beer, bread and cheese and idleness. If such is the spiritual condition of London with its multitude of churches and well paid clergy, when will the world be converted? Never this side of the second appearing of Jesus.

—As a Brotherhood, we are all zealous in obeying the commands "Wash one another's feet." "Greet one another with a holy kiss;" should we not be equally zealous in obeying the command "Lay not up treasures on earth." Be ready to communicate. Think of these commands, ye who are amassing property—laying up treasures on earth, perhaps to be squandered by some successor. Your lands, well filled barns, money in bonds, mortgages, etc., will burn your flesh as with fire unless you use them as Jesus requires. Think of the poor Brethren in Denmark who travel many miles on Sunday on foot to preach the Word and return the same day by the same conveyance, and labor for six days for about 12 cents per day, and eat rye bread and lard. Some have done nobly at A M, let many more do likewise; hold up their hands not by prayer only, but by a supply of carnal things.

—In the Acts of the Apostles we have specimens of apostolic preaching; how many death-bed stories did they tell to convert their hearers? To produce a solemn impression did they not invariably refer to a judgment to come? See Acts 10: 42, 17: 31, 24: 25. Death-bed tales and awful descriptions of darkness, fire and chains may work on the fears of the superstitious and bring them out to make profession. But generally their after-life bears no fruit of holiness. Sensational preachers may frighten, fish and drive them into the net, but if a few good enter, what multitude of bad who soon leave the net or stay within to try the patience and forbearance of those who love peace, righteousness and joy in the Holy Spirit.

From the "History of the Danish Mission" we glean the following, concerning Bro. Hope after his return from hunting the Brethren:

"Shortly after we returned to Rock Island we found our old Swede friends weeping for us, regarding us as lost indeed. I plainly told them all, and that I did not feel at home in their church, and had for many years been hunting for the Brethren or a people who believed and obeyed the gospel commands. I told them I was investigating trine immersion, and it found satisfactory throughout I would comply with the truth. Tears, and reasons, and promises, and threatenings followed. All seemed against me. Propositions were made to baptize me by trine immersion if I would stay with them; but I reminded them of the fact that if I needed trine immersion they need it too; hence I would not suffer them to do to me as they proposed. Sometimes a wrong idea in the hands of God's would-be followers is used as a means to prevent further error. I had the idea of organic succession, or straight line of baptism back to the apostles, and this prevented me from receiving their trine immersion. Had I received it, I would have been compelled to advocate and defend both single and trine immersion. This would have made me ten fold more miserable in the future."

All should read this the first history of the first foreign mission of the Brethren. Price 20 cents. For sale by Western Book Exchange, Mt. Morris, Ill.

EVER since the President was shot the prayers of the nation have gone up to God for his recovery. In many of the cities and towns special meetings were held in his behalf. On Sunday, Aug. 29th, the people were waiting to hear of his death, so low was he on the evening of the 28th; but the morning came and with it the news that he was rallying and on the way to recovery. The nation's prayers, sympathies and good wishes have been freely extended to the President, and we think not without avail; but should not the people learn an important lesson for themselves? The President of the United States is the people's representative, and being smitten, the hearts of the people are also smitten. In their extremity God saves their ruler. Are not the afflictions and services of the people now due to God? Are they not under lasting obligations to tender Him praise and honor for His tender mercies toward them and their chief magistrates? Let the people not forget their humbling. Let the vanities, the follies, the dancings, the revelings, banquetings and abominable fashions in dress, the extravagances, the idleness and sportings be put away, and let the people who have been so highly favored, turn to God's righteous ways and receive still greater blessings. May this lesson with all its hallowed influences be deeply impressed upon the hearts of all the people.

Mr. Lütimer maintains that the great pyramid in Egypt was built by the sons of Seth. Josephus says the sons of Seth built two mighty structures, one far distant from the other. He further thinks that the immense buildings in Central America were erected by the same people. It would seem probable that the Aztecs and Indians did not possess sufficient skill to raise temples so enduring. It was possible for the descendants of Seth to cross Behrning's Strait, and migrate southward in search of a warmer climate until they reached Central America, where they settled, constructed the buildings, the grandeur and immensity of which awaken the amazement of all travelers in that country.

THERE is a school of 30 000 pupils and not one in 30 ever saw his teacher. It is the greatest school known and the easiest to govern, for teachers and pupils never meet. It is called "The Obstaquus Literary and Scientific Circle." Each student agrees to read about a half hour each day for four years; and examinations are made annually by writing. The studies comprise history, literature, science, art and religion and to complete the course requires about four years. The expenses of this course are small, while the benefits are incalculable.

It is an easy matter to sit down and write for some paper, the seeming defects of members, rail at the work of the church, boast of growth and belittle the holy lives of others, scream "missionary," "Sunday school," "liberty," etc. The mere thought ful, who read flaming, thundering productions of such as wonder where pocket-books are plentier and visnds most delicious, ask for less noise and more heart work. Writing red-hot letters is one thing and making full proof of the ministry an other thing. Less noise and more work will be more convincing.

THE works of the flesh are manifest, which are these, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, sorcery, enmities, strifes, jealousies, wraths, factions, divisions, heresies, envyings, drunkenness, revelings and such like.—Paul.

THE SEVEN SPIRITS.

What are the seven spirits of God? C. D. H.

THE query contains one of the mysteries of G. d. that we cannot fully understand. Below we give some thoughts on the query.

In Rev. 5: 6 we have the following: " * * *, which are the seven Spirits of God, sent forth into all the earth."

We are taught in the Bible, that G. d. is a Spirit, (not Spirits). But the question arises, "How can God have seven Spirits, and yet be only one Spirit?"

Would not the following explanation do, that the seven spirits of God are simply under the control of the one great Spirit of the Almighty, and may be sent to accomplish God's wrath upon evil-doers; as in the case of the seven sons of Semei? Acts 19: 14 Also, the case of the man who took with him seven spirits, etc. Matt. 12: 45. Further, the case of the false prophets in the days of Ahab, concerning the battle at Ramoth Gilead, is in point, where one said unto God, "I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of his prophets; and God said, 'Go.'" 1 King: 22: 22.

We do not claim that we have solved the mystery at all, only offered a few thoughts and those are not free from criticism. The question is still open further investigation.

THE CAUSE OF LIGHT.

Gen. 1: 3, What was that Light, seeing the sun and moon were only made the fourth day? Some one please explain. LIZZIE B. MYERS.

THE water may be deep, but the Word of God is the bark we sail on. It will bear us safely to the shores. Let these seeing the untenableness of a production or proposition, point it out, giving reasons therefor.

"By the Word of God, the heavens were of old, and the earth etoading out of the water and in the water." 2. Pet. 3: 5. See also Prov. 8: 22, 23.

"In the beginning was the Word." In the same beginning we are told in Gen. 1: 1, "God created the heaven and the earth." In Proverbs we are informed of his works of old, and what he possessed before them; in Genesis of their creation; in Peter of their existences in the same beginning as of old.

Friend W. P. M. states that "this globe was in the liquid or molten state * * * together with all of the innumerable worlds that revolve around us and the sun."

This we freely admit, and take occasion to remark all at the same epoch, that the equilibrium now maintained between the earth, sun and innumerable worlds, might be brought into existence with themselves with their proper force, bearing and attraction so beautifully manifested in their revolutions around the orb or sphere appointed and ordained by the Lord. We are informed and believe that the earth revolves around the sun. If so, the sun must have existed at least as early in the age of the world as the earth. Remove the sun, and this earth fails and comes to naught.

We are told in Holy Writ, "The law of the Lord is perfect. We claim the same for his creative will and power, perfection to the working all things after the counsel of his own will. Not only does he uphold all things by the word of his power; he also created them by the same word.

To assume light from one source, one two or three days afterward from another, infers imperfection in the works of the Almighty. As we claim man sprang from man, sheep from sheep, goat from goat, and so of all the rest since creation, so we claim light from one and the same source since time began.

The days spoken of in Genesis were such as we now have and ever have had since the Lord said, "Let there be light; and there was light, and the evening and the morning were the first day."

Time then commenced by the division of light from darkness; the light forming the day, the darkness the night. The chaotic and other long ages or periods were prior to this, called in Holy Writ, "In the beginning." Prov. Gen. 1: 1; St. John 1: 1. And "of old," Prov. 8: 22 and Peter 3: 5. We have not space to refer to these geological periods, nor their effects upon our mundane sphere. Suffice it to say that the division of the days of creation into periods covering the whole of Geological time is the same error into which Hugh Miller and other geologists have fallen.

Mr. Miller says of the second day: "We can still but vaguely guess. * * * If indeed it be destined at all to exist, and at present we can in it do but doubtful surmises regarding them."

Light is what we wish. If we look to the earth for it on the first day, "when the surface of our earth was so hot and luminous as the surface of the sun," where is that darkness that formed the evening of the first day? It cannot be near the earth. It is hot and luminous, bright as the mid-day sun. There is a link left out here. God's Word must and will agree.

2. Pet. 3: 5, 6 refers to the heavens and the earth in their geological or "of old" condition, prior to the six days' creation. The 7th verse refers to them in their present condition since time began, as kept in store by the same word.

In hope of the Light of Eternal Life,
M. MYERS.

For the Brethren at Work.

"THOSE LEAST ESTERMED."

Please explain the latter part of the 4th verse of the 6th chapter 1st Cor.: "Who are those that are least esteemed in the church?"

HARRY GILLAM.

EVIDENTLY "those least esteemed in the church," of whom Paul here speaks, are the unbelievers. Verse 6th. The latter part the fourth verse must be explained by the context, which makes it very plain.

The fourth verse is a little obscure by not being properly translated. Paul, after telling the Corinthians in verse 2nd, that "the saints shall judge the world," and in verse 3rd, that "they shall judge angels," thus addresses them (according to the German version: "But ye, when ye have difficulties about things pertaining to this life, ye set them as judges who are least esteemed by the church. "For brother goeth to law with brother and that before unbelievers."

"That ye do so," Paul says, "I speak to your shame." Then he asks, in substance: "Is it so, that there is not one man among you that is competent to judge between his brethren, that ye must set them whom ye shall judge, — the world—as judges over you? By explaining the latter part of a verse abstractedly, we are in danger of falling into great errors.

DANIEL BRIGHT.

DEAD AND BURIED.

IN the fourth century an earnest young disciple sought an interview with the great and good Marcellus, and asked him what was meant by being dead to sin.

He said, "You remember our brother who died and was buried a short time since. Go to his grave and tell him all the unkind things you ever heard of him. Go, my son, and hear what he will answer."

The young man doubted whether he understood; but Marcellus only said, "Do as I tell you, my son; and come and tell me what he says."

He went and came back, saying, "I can get no reply; he is dead."

"Go again and try him with flattering words; (—) him what a great saint he was, what noble work he did and how we miss him. Then come and tell me what he says."

He did so, but on his return said, "He answered nothing, father; he is dead and buried." "You know now, my son," said the old father, "what it is to be dead to sin, dead and buried with Christ. Praise and blame are nothing to him who is really dead and buried with Christ. Rom. 6: 3.

Correspondence.

From C. Hope.

M. M. Eshelman, beloved brother:—

Our council meeting has been held in regard to building the meeting-house.

1. It is to be built near Sinal Station, eight miles east of Hjrrig, where four turpicks roads center, beside the railroad and near to a high stream only a few rods off.

2. It was decided to build this year if money comes in time, and if a lot and material and workmen can be had at reasonable rates.

3. The house should be 42x28 feet, of brick, and should be substantial. In one end should be made two rooms and a kitchen for some one to live in who could attend to the house, and the rest to be used for a hall, and a small private room for officials. Up-stairs a room should be made in each end—no to be used as a home for ministers in their travels, and the other to let out.

A committee was elected to get a lot and purchase materials, viz. our two deacons, N. C. Nielsen and J. R. Remmensen, Elder C. C. Ek-lsson, S. Christian Nilssen, minister, and C. Hope. Matters here were arranged so far as we could proceed; a lot is selected and purchased, if the man who owns it can give a clear title, and this will be found out in a few days. So you see money is all we need; but it has not come yet and may come too late for this year. If we do not get it soon, we will be compelled to put off building to the Spring of 1882.

MISSIONARY MOVEMENT.

All gifts donated for our home ministers are to be placed in the hands of a committee of deacons and lay members, who shall direct the ministers' course and attend to their wants for the coming Winter. Finally, I have to send all donors the most sincere thanks for their Danish brethren and sisters. You have, indeed, done well, and will reap in abundance in eternal bliss.

STRIPE NEVER RECEIVED.

Errata, B. AT W. No 27, page 428.—I have never corrected errata in the papers so far as I remember, because I knew they would hardly ever be looked up or noticed by the readers, yet this time I must do it as my own fault or my poor English or whatever else has made it appear that I was driven off from Willerslev Thylund, with stumps, years ago, where we now have twelve members living. It was not quite so bad—they did not do it, but said they would do it; that was all I want it to state. As it now stands, it gives me credit for stripes that I never received, and this credit I beg leave to be free from. P. pope has threatened to "atone me," to "aboot me," to "drown me," to "huret their knives in me," to "break my neck," and going so far as to touch me to do it; but none have ever yet touched me with a finger who it came to the point. Hence it is my duty to free my country from such a charge; admitting that the printers have ample excuse, even if they sometimes state things wrong, because I make them guess at it. Blame me for the mistakes. I will try to write more plainly hereafter.

The Lord willing, I am going to Copenhagen Friday next, to look for a location and get Mary under treatment. Please pray it may be for a furtherance of the Gospel even there.

My honey bees have lately suffered so much with the cold and disagreeable weather that I had to feed them; hence there is no prospect this year for any gain from this labor. They may however yet in this month get enough to live, and so there will be no loss. I have never had good luck to gather temporal treasures, and likely never will; but thank God I am content with my lot. A saved soul and a mansion above where Jesus reigns is enough. I shall even die a pauper in order to attain it, or as a beggar Lazarus. Better that than in the rich man's place.

To you my dear brother: Remember, "Blessed are the poor." Did Jesus ever say: "Blessed are the rich"? No! but those that seek to be rich fall into temptations and snares, and many hurtful lusts; for "the love of money is the root of all evil." O! man of God, flee the deceitfulness of riches. Be content to be poor. Gather imperishable gain in heaven. Ever remember, "Except you eat the flesh and drink the blood of Christ, you have no divine life in you." It is not to eat and drink once, hot to do it daily; to feed the soul as we feed the body. It is not once for all to stretch out the band of faith and take the water of life freely, but it is to daily; and the oftener it is done the stronger you will be. It is not to look on commandments and fail to do them, that feeds the soul, any more than mental or temporal work feeds the body. Many mistake here, and are dying. But it is grace that suffices to still hunger, and when properly digested will add vital power to the inner man so that he may be able to perform Christian labor. Grace and commands are standing in their relation together as bread and command to work for it. If this is fully understood, a man will see the need to fill his spiritual body with need-grace before he goes to Christian work, and he will be able to work successfully. If we admit that we are spiritually a real entity, as Wilford says, (and that I have been sure of long before I read his able work) then any one will see it is reasonable that this real entity must have real food to subsist on, and not be able to live or work without such food. Hence we need not only temporal food, but should look out also for the soul; look out to get food for it in proper portions. Treat your soul as well as your body in that respect—eat regular and eat sufficient; drink properly, and you will be sound spiritually, and able to work the work God created you to in Christ Jesus.

Christ is heaven's meat and drink, given to our spiritual man; faith the medium by or through which it is imparted. How often have I in my lonely field, sat down, tired and weary and nearly given up; but a draught from the fresh blood from Calvary has strengthened me, a bit of that true paschal Lamb satisfied me till all my troubles were gone. He is real meat and drink for the soul as water and bread are for the body. But bless God the difference is, he is ever ready to be eaten; we need not prepare it. Hence he cries, "Come, for all things are ready."

Surely it is from the lack of knowledge in regard to the inner man and his wants and proper supplies that many perish and feed on husks, and work accordingly causing confusion and strife.

If a Christian eat the devil's mush, he will have to do the devil's work, but if he eat and drink the flesh and blood of Jesus he will naturally do the work of Christ.

As a true minister, makes your sermons full of food and aleu of direction for work. Over-feeding God's children is not good, and over-working them is just as bad. The preachers should be God's stewards to feed the flock as well as to lead them to work. And let me add: the editors have tenfold that duty on their shoulders, because their productions go much farther. Our papers, I think, need more feeding elements than they generally contain. If they could devote half of their columns to that department, we would see a marked change in the spiritual life soon; and they would have their subscription list doubled in a year. You may consider this, and if you think it proper, publish it. I feel assured that there are enough clear-headed, able brethren who will attend to this department, and I will occasionally drop you a few lines—send you a few crumbs to help. I have often heard complaints in this respect and think it is out altogether wrong. Let us not be taken up so much with duty and work that we forget feeding, thinking the people will look out for food; for spiritually it is much the reverse of temporal matters; all will be more willing to work than to eat. Hence the word: "Compel them to come in," and hence the offences and the desertion when Jesus urged them to eat and drink his flesh and blood; so even now much more. Our salutation to you and all.

Missionary Work.

As we have already given notice of our trip to Southern Indiana and our arrival at Crothersville, Jackson county, will now try and give a report of our meeting. Aug. 9th and 10th, had meeting in school-house, with fair attendance and good interest; but the weather extremely hot; therefore thought it best to change the place of meeting to the German Reformed church. Continued till Saturday evening. Congregations not so large.

Aug. 14th, went to Retreat, where the funeral of sister Olivia Rude was preached. At 3 P. M., brother J. W. Metzger preached a German discourse in the German Reformed church in Crothersville. Had good interest. Evening meeting again in R-retreat; also Monday evening. Had intended to leave on Tuesday, but circumstances not permitting, then thought it best to hold another meeting in Crothersville, as the Methodist minister objected to a remark made by us on the Lord's Supper. He replied in our absence to his congregation; therefore the members and many others were not willing for us to leave without a sermon on that subject, which was given on Tuesday evening, to a large congregation, and according to the expressions of many, gave good satisfaction, with the exception of the above-named minister, which he manifested by words and actions. Why is it that men who claim to be ministers of the Gospel will manifest an angry disposition when the Gospel hammer is brought to bear too heavily upon it?

Aug. 17th, brother Freeman took us to Jennings county, a distance of about thirty-five miles. Arrived about sunset at sister Underwood's. We noticed all along the effects of the drought; corn almost an entire failure; wheat said to average about three bushels per acre.

Commenced meeting in the United Brethren church evening of the 18th, and continued until the evening of the 21st, with fair attendance and good attention paid to the Word preached.

Monday morning, 23rd, was brought about eight miles to North Verona, where we took the train for Shulls. Martin Co.

The weather still continues dry, and the roads very dusty, thus making traveling disagreeable. The country all along looks distressing; pasture fields as dry and bare as we ever saw them; scarcely any corn or wheat, and vegetation dried up, which makes it very hard for the poor class. A day while we sympathize with them, we hope that all may realize that they are dependent upon God for all the comforts of life.

Arrived at Shoals about 2 P. M. Went out to brother and sister N. Cross' who kindly cared for us. Commenced meeting the evening of the 23rd in a school-house. The attendance and interest were good.

On Sunday, 25th, preached brother Jacob Hammer's funeral at another point; also meeting in the afternoon at brother Henry Trenters' house, with the best of interest.

Monday evening, meeting again in the school-house. Interest, good, and we have reason to believe that some were almost persuaded to become Christians.

On account of our health falling and weather extremely hot and dry we thought it best to return home and not go to Pike county. Would say to our other missionary brethren, and go as soon as possible, and go to Pike county first. Thus aided our labors in Southern Indiana, and we now give it into the hands of the Lord. Paul can plant and Apollos water, but God must give the increase. Would say to all the brethren and sisters, those isolated members need your prayers and sympathies. They are doing the best they can. May God bless them and sustain them.

From Mary C. Givler.—On Thursday, Aug. 25th, brother John Metzger, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., came to our place to hold a few meetings. The meetings were well attended, and passed off pleasantly, and seemed to leave a good feeling among the people. The last evening they sang a parting hymn, and the whole congregation bid him farewell. I thought if we would be so happy as to meet him in heaven what a joyful time that would be! I hope the Lord will spare him to come among us again. I think much good might be done if we had preaching. This was the first preaching by the Brethren of this place. It is a new doctrine to these people.—Johnstown, Cumberland Co., Ill.

From D. B. Gibson—There are only $123 00 yet unpaid on Brethren Orphan's Home. Bro. David Kane, Treasurer, is very desirous of settling with the district at District M. e. t. i. n. g. Those who have not paid their subscriptions, please do it at once. All who have made remittances and who hold receipts from brother Kane, please bring them or send them by your delegates to D. M., so as to enable the Treasurer to make final settlement with the district. If all will be prompt in this, the Home will be clear of indebtedness.—Cerro Gordo, Ill.

From Thos. D. Lyon—The Communion meeting of Pipe Creek church, Livingston Co., Ill., is among the things of the past. The meeting was one long to be remembered. There seemed to be so much union among the members. There were six baptiz-d in the evening just before the services commenced. Others are counting the cost, and will, we think, join in the people of God ere long.... The services were performed in the German language by brother David Frantz.... The indications for a good future for Pipe Creek are flattering. Hope they may enjoy many such meetings.... Ministers present were D. Mast, F. Shultz, resident ministers; and David Frantz, K. Heckman, John Y. Snavely, G. W. Gash, and the writer.—Hudson, Ill., Sept. 6th.
